NOTES

Dadabhai Naoroji Centenary: Yesterday was the one-hundredth birth-day of Dadabhai Naoroji who was born at Nasik on September 4, 1825. The occasion was celebrated by many public meetings in Bombay and elsewhere. Mahatma Gandhi presided at the principal public meeting held in Bombay. Dadabhai Naoroji occupies in Western India a position nearly similar to that of Raja Ram Mohan Roy in Bengal. Owing to the accident of his being born a Parsi, Mr. Dadabhai could not take any direct part as a religious reformer, although indirectly his influence was of great assistance to leaders like Mr. Justice Ranade and Dr. Bhandarkar who were his own students in the Elphinstone Institution. But, in the matter of educational, social and political reform, Dadabhai was a great pioneer. He did a good deal to promote the education of women among Hindus and Parsis, and the Literary and Scientific Society's Girls' High Schools remain to-day a memorial to his zeal in this direction. His work as a political leader is well-known. He was the first to describe Swaraj as the goal of India in his presidential address to the Calcutta Congress in the year 1906. In that address he gave a message to his countrymen which is as apt to-day as it was at that time: "Since my early efforts I must say that I have felt so many disappointments as would be sufficient to break any heart and lead one to despair and even, I am afraid, to rebel. But I have not despaired. Not only that I have not despaired, but at this moment, you may think it strange, I stand before you with hopefulness. I have not despaired for one reason and I am hopeful for another reason. I have not despaired under the influence of the good English word which has been the rule of my life. That word is "Persevere." In any movement, great or small, you must persevere to the end. You cannot stop at any stage, disappointments notwithstanding, or you lose all you have gained and find it far more difficult afterwards even to begin again. As we proceed we may adopt such means as may be suitable at every stage, but persevere we must to the end. If our cause is good and just, as it is, we are sure to triumph in the end. So I have not despaired."

Politics and Social Reform: Social reform received due recognition at the Provincial Liberal Conference held in Poona last week. The President, Mr. C. Y. Chintamani, devoted a special paragraph to it at the close of his address. He invited his fellow-Liberals to bear in mind at all times that politics was only a part of national life and asked them not to lose themselves in political agitation. "Our religious beliefs and practices," he continued, "must be freed from the accretions of superstition and our social institutions, customs and usages liberalized and reformed so that truth, justice, mercy, equality and freedom may be the ruling principles. Our departure from the precepts of our ancient religion, our division of society into so many castes and sects, our treatment of the so-called depressed classes, the many disabilities we have imposed upon women, constitute a disgrace which we have to do our honest best to wipe out. It is my conviction that mere political agitation will not bring salvation to India any more than to other countries, and I humbly invite you, fellow-Liberals, to show yourselves to be true Liberals and patriots by striving for religious and social reform not less zealously than for political Swaraj." This is no more than what was expected from Mr. Chintamani who has been staunch and consistent in his adherence to social reform all throughout his career.

The Bombay Provincial Social Conference: This was held soon after the Political Conference and was a very successful gathering. Mr. G. K. Devadhar as Chairman of the Reception Committee delivered an able address in which he reviewed the progress made by social reform. Mrs. Ramanbhai Mahipatram Nilkanth was elected President—the first time a lady has been chosen for the office. We print to-day in full her address, a forceful and weighty pronouncement on some of the burning topics of social reform. Especially noteworthy is her strong condemnation of caste. She spoke with special reference to Gujarat, her native province, but her observations apply equally to all parts of the country. Only, because of the comparative smallness of castes in Gujarat and their more compact organisation under a Mahajan, they are able to enforce their authority more effectively than, for instance, the Smartha Brahmins of Southern India who have no caste organisation of any kind, and are subject only to family traditions. Mrs. Ramanbhai, however, is no iconoclast. Her hope is that the new ideas of social equity permeating through all the layers of the social organism, will awaken a consciousness which would teach men to ignore caste and thereby undermine its force. "This process though slow," she said, "is likely to succeed looking to the advanced communities where a majority of members hold reformed views." This is also our faith.

A Victory for Prohibition: We refer in the "Prohibition Supplement" issued this week to the important debate in the Legislative Assembly which ended in a decisive victory for Prohibition against the strong opposition of the Government of India. The Finance Member was almost excited in his opposition and when some one interjected that the Bombay Government has declared Prohibition" to be the goal of its policy, he replied with the sneer that, perhaps, the Government of Bombay proposed to reach the goal in a century or two! He went on to say: "It is not possible for the Government of India to give directions to the provincial governments as to what their action should be in regard to provincial transferred subjects. But I am inclined to agree that if a policy of local option or prohibition is going to be attempted by local Governments with any very great vigour then the Government of India will not be able to look on." As nobody had suggested that the Government of India should interfere with Provincial Governments in Excise administration, Sir Basil Blackett's inclination to agree was really a suggestion of his own mind. We had noted a certain tendency to vacillation in the Government of Bombay since it declared prohibition to be the goal of its excise policy. We now know the reason. The Government of India has been pulling the wires from behind. The great enemy whom Prohibitionists have to meet is the Government of India and the Assembly's resolution is but the first step in breaking down its opposition.

Sir Purshottamdas' Speech: The ablest speech delivered in the course of the debate on Prohibition in the Assembly was that of Sir Purshottamdas Thakurdas who spoke with a strength of feeling which he seldom allows to appear in his utterances.

He averred that the policy of Government during the last forty years clearly supported the charge that they not only wanted to keep the revenue on the increase but to induce people to drink. No doubt Colonel Crawford had by his far-fetched logic attempted to induce this House to agree to temperance but that logic was unsuitable to the East where the people, both Mahomedans and Hindus, were by religious tenets and by general custom opposed to the use of all intoxicating liquors. The standard of education among the people was too low and it would take several years before the logic of Colonel Crawford for moderate drink could be understood by them.

Colonel Crawford: How can Government prevent people from taking liquor which is at their very doors?

Mr. Joshi: How do they prevent it in America?

Sir Purshotamdas: God has placed poison at the doors of the people but do they take it? Proceeding, Sir Purshotamdas remarked that drink revenue was tainted money collected without regard for the economic condition of the people of India. If money was the sole consideration of Government why should they not charge revenue for the keeping of brothels? It was most humiliating for the Government to trot out the argument of financial considerations.

This was a very severe indictment to proceed from an eminent businessman like Sir Purshottamdas, but it was to all appearance lost upon the Finance Member who repeated all the accustomed arguments of anti-Prohibitionists, notwithstanding Mr. Jamnadas Mehta's cutting remark that Sir Basil Blackett was merely quoting from the pamphlets of brewers and their friends.

The Age of Consent: The Legislative Assembly did another good piece of work in passing the law relating to the age of consent. Under the new law, the age-limit is 13 as against husbands and 14 as against strangers. A few orthodox die-hards did their best to wreck the Bill, but the opinion of the more reasonable section of orthodox Hindus was voiced by Dewan Bahadur T. Rangachariar who supported the measure as called for by the advancement of ideas.

Fire Arms Bill: Mr. Rangachariar's Bill for the regulation of the use of fire arms in dispersing a crowd of rioters, has emerged from the Select Committee to which it was referred with dissenting minutes signed by three officials headed by the Home Member, Sir Alexander Muddiman. The method adopted by General Dyer in dispersing the crowd at Jallianwala Bagh in 1919, which India can never forget, is sufficient to convince every reasonable person of the necessity of providing statutory safeguards against the recurrence of Dyerian abuses. The Bill does not forbid the use of fire arms when occasion demands it, but only emphasises the necessity of providing precautions against hasty and reckless resort to it when less drastic means would suffice. The Bill also seeks to make the executive responsible to a competent judicial tribunal to justify its action. The main provisions of the Bill are:

(1) Firearms shall not be used unless such assembly cannot otherwise be dispersed and unless a Magistrate of the highest class present specifically authorises such use. Provided that when no Magistrate is present and the senior police or military officer present is of opinion that immediate measures should be taken to disperse the assembly by the use of firearms such senior police or military officer may authorise such use and shall report the fact without delay to the nearest Magistrate.

(2) The person who directs that the assembly shall be fired on shall before so doing warn the assembly by such means as may be available that unless it disperses it will be fired on.

(3) A report of the occurrence shall be sent in all cases when any such assembly is dispersed by the use of firearms, by the person authorising such use to the nearest first class Magistrate within twenty-four hours of the occurrence and such reports shall be deemed to be for the purposes of Sections 74, 76 and 77 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, a public document which any person has a right to inspect provided that, if such person is himself a first class Magistrate, the report shall be made to the District Magistrate or if such person is the District Magistrate to the local Government.

(4) Notwithstanding anything contained in Section 18 any person injured by the use of firearms or any parent or guardian, husband or wife of a person killed by the use of firearms may make a complaint against any person for any offence committed by him by reason of any act purporting to be done under this chapter.

The official opposition to the above sensible additions to the existing law is unintelligible. No doubt, the last clause is open to the objection that it exposes officers, discharging an urgent and painful duty, to harassment in the law courts. It is capable of improvement so as to protect acts done in good faith. With this amendment the Bill is a very necessary safeguard against the impetuosity of the votaries of "martial law and no damned nonsense" in this country.

Cochin Legislative Council: The first which was also the budget session of the Legislative Council and which was prorogued the other day after ten days' sitting, was a successful one. The interest evinced by the members in the various branches of administration, in spite of most of them being quite new to the methods and procedure of the Legislative Council, and the calm and courteous way in which the official spokesman replied to the interpellations, augur well for the future of the State. The presence of a lady member was a unique feature of the Cochin Legislative Council. It has been our unpleasant duty almost every year to criticise strongly the excise policy of the Cochin Government, and we are glad that the non-official members have taken up this question in right earnest. The mutual understanding and co-operation between the Government and non-official members, which characterised the proceedings throughout, do credit both to the Dewan-President, Rao Bahadur T. S. Narayana Iyer and to the members. We have always held that the Indian States, where the racial question hardly exists, can set a good example in self-government, and we trust that Cochin which has just entered on a new era of what may be called representative government, will justify the expectations raised by it.

Index to Volume XXXV:—With this issue the Indian Social Reformer enters its thirty-sixth year. The index to the Volume just closed is in the course of preparation, and will be sent free of charge with a subsequent issue.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1925.

BOMBAY UNIVERSITY REFORM.

The Bombay University Reform Committee which was appointed by Government last year has made its report. The chief complaints which the Committee had to consider and provide remedies for in the working of the present system, were three. The first was that the standard of the highest education aimed at by the University, was not high enough having regard to the standards of the best modern Universities and the great strides which are being made in every department of knowledge and its application to social and economic problems. The second complaint was that the graduates of the University were not adequately qualified to take their proper share in the industrial and business spheres in which the demand for men of high intelligence and capacity is rapidly increasing. The third main complaint came from the colleges and it was that students come to them from High Schools with insufficient preparation to get the full benefit of the instruction imparted in them. The main causes of the defects are the large and somewhat sudden increase in the number of scholars and that of schools and colleges during the last quarter of a century, as a necessary consequence of the awakened sense of responsibility both in Government and the public to reduce the vast mass of illiteracy in the country. The extension of elementary education directly increases the demand for secondary education, and this, in its turn, leads to a larger influx of students in the colleges taking the University courses. Schools and colleges have to be recognised even if they are not quite up to the standard in respect of staff and equipment prescribed by the regulations, in order to meet the pressure upon existing institutions, which would otherwise become dangerous to the whole system. Thus a certain lowering of standards is inevitable as the result of educational expansion in the primary stage, and as it is now the accepted policy of Government to push forward mass education rapidly, the danger of deterioration must become very serious if timely steps are not taken to broaden and deepen the old channels and to find new channels for the rising tide.

The recommendations of the Committee are well calculated to meet the several phases of the problem indicated in the foregoing paragraph. The most important and, in some respects, the fundamental recommendation is the one relating to the re-organization of secondary education so as to economise time and increase efficiency in the subjects taught. A saving of two years is proposed to be effected by providing a more intensive course than at present in the upper elementary and lower secondary forms. By beginning English a little earlier and by using the vernaculars more largely as media of instruction in the High Schools, it is expected that students will improve in their grasp of subjects, in their practical knowledge of English, and also in their capacity to think for themselves. The complaint of the Colleges about the unsatisfactory raw material which they have to handle will also, it is hoped, be largely met by these measures. Another recommendation which will further improve the type of students who go to the Colleges, has reference to the opening up of a wide range of technological and vocational studies which will take off a considerable proportion of young men after Matriculation, who at present have no alternative but to crowd into the Arts Colleges if they wish at all to continue their education. While relieving the Colleges of congestion, this measure will go a long way to meet the demand of industry and business for young men whose minds have received a bent in those directions in the course of their education. Fewer students will go to Arts and Science Colleges without an aptitude for humanistic or higher scientific studies, and merely for the purpose of getting a degree as a passport to employment. More personal attention from Professors will become possible and a substantial foundation will be laid upon which to raise a superstructure of post-graduate and original research studies which will bring Bombay University abreast of the most advanced Universities of the world.

Such in outline is the main scheme of reform recommended by the Committee. Two other recommendations which are rather of an incidental character than organic with the scheme, are the creation of a University for Maharashtra at Poona and the grouping together of the Bombay Arts Colleges around the present University buildings in the southern part of the Fort area. A separate University for Maharashtra affiliating Colleges and High Schools in that area, will reduce the jurisdiction of Bombay University and increase to that extent the amount of supervision it can exercise over its affiliated institutions. It will also provide Maharashtra with an academic organ for the expression of its distinctive cultural genius. The Committee looks forward to the establishment of similar Universities in the other natural divisions of the Presidency, Gujarat, the Karnatak, and Sind, when they become ripe for them. The Committee's recommendation regarding the concentration of Bombay Colleges in South Fort, does not strike us as being particularly necessary. It is sure to be opposed by the Wilson and St. Xavier's Colleges which have grown up in their present sites and have become so to speak racy of their soil. We have an inveterate prejudice against all uprooting methods and, on that ground alone, are bound to sympathise with their opposition. But there are other and more serious objections to the concentration proposal. There must be some expenditure beyond what the disposal of the present buildings may be expected to bring. That expenditure can be most usefully incurred in improvements which do not involve transplantation. Then the process will take some years, and the disorganisation in the interval will be injurious to the other phases of the Committee's scheme of reform. The question of finance is of course the deciding factor in this and other schemes of reform. Some people are inclined to treat University education as the rival of elementary education and to demand that nothing should be spent on the improvement of the former till the needs of the latter are fully met. No country in the world has progressed educationally in this fashion. The Vice-Chancellor of Bombay University, Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, who was also Chairman of the Committee and whose able guidance greatly facilitated its work, combatted with force and effect this short-sighted view in his address at the annual Convocation of the University a few days ago. We do not think that the Government of Bombay will adopt this reactionary view. Private munificence should, of course, help largely, but Government must lead the way. His Excellency the Governor is known to be very keen upon giving a strong impetus to University education during his term of office, and the Minister for Education, Hon. Mr. Jadhav, who is himself one of its distingnished graduates, will, we are sure, be proud of the opportunity to serve his alma mater which is now within his reach.

CHRISTIAN SOCIAL DUTY.*

The books published under the auspices of the Student Christian Movement, London, are always interesting and furnish much food for thought. It was only recently that we had the opportunity of noticing a book containing several addresses delivered by eminent representatives from different countries at a Christian Conference held at Manchester. "Christian Social Duty", the book now under review, is a collection of a number of lectures and addresses delivered at different times and at different places by Mr. John Lee, and has been specially adapted and re-written by him for popular use. The one central thought that runs through the book is the warning against excessive State action and a vigorous plea for a spiritual, a consecrated Individualism, with Right as its high motive, with the recognition of the interests of others as its basis. The author is rather a bit too hard in his criticisms of State action. But, coming as they do from one who has had practical experience of State administration, as the managing head of a great Government Department, they deserve to be closely examined on their merits. He recognises that there is a place for State action, for State control, and in some directions for State operation. But what he is surprised to find is that State interference in social and legislative relationships, originally intended to protect the weakest and thus based upon the Christian sense of responsibility, has grown to such an extent that it covers the whole realm of employment and that, in some instances, it is the protection of the strong, for it has been a concession to demands made either by threatened or consummated industrial action or by the parliamentary process whereby powerful sections have been able to insist upon their rights. His remedy, therefore, for this state of things is spiritual individualism, a keen sense of moral economic action, a voluntary association of men in enterprise whether their contribution is of labour or of capital. There is much truth, indeed, in Mr. Lee's complaint, for there is a growing tendency to look to the State for everything, which ought to be discouraged. But one finds it difficult to follow him in all his attacks against the State. Men being what they are, with interests diametrically opposed to each other and with self-interest as the moving economic force, we cannot conceive of a better agency than the State which can deal equally and justly by all. In this connection the following remarks of the Bishop of Southwark, the learned author of the Introduction, are worth quoting: "Social legislation has been beneficial, not only in protecting the weak from oppression, but in giving opportunities of a fuller life to many who would have been starved both in body and mind: moreover, legislation often results in the creation of a higher social and moral standard. It is difficult to see how social reform can be effected without State action on a large scale". We can, therefore, only regard Mr. Lee's prospect of man's redemption through voluntary acts, whether individually or in co-operation, each regarding his gifts or possessions or accomplishments as loaned to him for the benefit of his fellows, as a far-off dream, an ideal incapable of realisation in our present stage of civilization.

The view which Mr. Lee takes in regard to the industrial problem, "the Riddle of the Sphinx of today" as it has been aptly described, is also too very optimistic and if only acted upon, will go a long way towards establishing harmonious relations between labour and capital. He does not believe in the existence of an exploiting class. He is much pained indeed at the present strained relations between the employers and the employed, but to describe the present system as "capitalistic", without condition or exception, in the absence of a better alternative, is, he says, scarcely just. He is not opposed to possession as such, but he only wants a reform in the spirit of possession, so that a standard of duty in expenditure may be reached which will make the possession of wealth a recognised public responsibility towards fostering art and literature and science and spiritual development. He, therefore, plaads for faith in man, and for faith in man in all classes. But, he admits, the first stimulus must come from the side of the employer, as Mr. Ford has shown in actual practice, while the other side also should be ready to respond. The author here warns labour against nationalisation and such like hair-brained schemes having for their object the transfer of ownership of property. And here State aid in the form of minimum of wages comes in for a vigorous attack at his hands. "We may wring widows' pensions from the pockets of two million unwilling tax-payers", he writes, "but we have done nothing thereby for the encouragement of the sense of moral responsibility. On the other hand, in respect of those social duties which we perform at the instance of a moral stimulus, the true evidence of the sense of social right, there is an enthusiasm which is operative, and the sense of that enthusiasm touches those who come within range of our action. The recipient of any from of State aid hardly feels a glow of soul, it becomes his "right", in the sense of his "due", and he takes it with appropriate coldness on that account". The solution of this thorny question he finds possible in a system which would make it possible for all classes to share the responsibility of the ownership of capital, under conditions which, in turn, would add to the moral sense of that responsibility. To conclude, we agree with the learned author of the Introduction that, though we are unable to accept the more critical side of the book especially that dealing with State action, we are much impressed with its sincerity and enthusiasm and we also welcome the strong and eloquent plea it contains for a far greater recognition of moral and spiritual contributions in social life.

BOMBAY PROVINCIAL SOCIAL CONFERENCE.
MRS. VIDYAGAURI RAMANBHAI'S PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

It is with the consciousness of great diffidence that I rise to speak before you. The privilege of presiding over the deliberations of the Provincial Social Conference is indeed a proud one, for it reminds one of the revered pioneers of social reform who occupied this position in days gone by. Compared to them we are pigmies and can hardly claim any recognition. Theirs was a far-reaching foresight, theirs was a sound judgment, a true patriotism, a living human sympathy and indefatigable perseverance to act according to their convictions undaunted by opposition or failure. We can only bow our heads to them in veneration and receive inspiration and guidance from their words and their work. The last of these great pioneers, the revered Dr. Sir Ramkrishna Gopal Bhandarkar has just passed away. His great and colossal work is indelibly written in the annals of the country. India is poorer to-day without his scholarship and without the moral force which he signified. His services to the cause of social reform have been immense. His place cannot be filled.

To an outsider, coming to Poona after a few years, the feeling of the irreparable loss the cause of social reform has sustained in the death of Mrs. Ramabai Ranade comes foremost. Her work in the great cause has been unprecedented. She worked to the end of her life devotedly and faithfully towards the amelioration of women. Hers has been the practical work in that line. The women of this country will cherish her memory for ever with gratefulness.

So much has been said on the subject of Indian Social Reform, and that also so often, that it would seem futile to speak any more. Yet what is our achievement? Thousands of child marriages take place every year; hundreds of thousand widows are leading miserable lives; only a few out of the many women in our country can read and write. Lakhs of rupees are spent on liquor. Occasions of marriage and death claim a considerable portion of men's life's earnings. The lot of our untouchable brethren has hardly improved in spite of the several forces applied for their uplift.

All this brings in the need of talking again and again on the old subject of Social Reform. The work before the social worker is gigantic as well as varied, and compared to what is to be done, the work to his credit may not seem great. It is an acknowledged fact that the preaching and practice of reformers have borne fruit among the educated classes of the country. The number of oppositionists from among this class has been reduced to a negligible quantity. There has been formed a sound public opinion among them which condemns the social evils against which reformers have been crying all these years. Not only that, but practical steps have been taken to do away with social evils by a good many people.

THE TYRANNY OF CASTE.

On our side of the country, I mean in Gujarat, the greatest hindrance to all social reforms is the caste. If I want to educate my girl, the caste would step in and say you should not do it. If I wish to postpone my children's marriage till they are sufficiently grown up, the caste would raise its hand and forbid me. If a widow chooses to marry again and settle respectably in her home, the caste would threaten to ostracise her. If a young man wishes to go to Europe for bettering his own or the country's prospects, the caste would, though perhaps nowadays give him a hearty send off, yet close its doors on him when he returns. If a respectable man of the so-considered untouchable class is invited to a house, the caste would deliver its judgment against that householder and condemn him as unfit for any intercourse. Thus in fact at every action, which aims at breaking the old customs, however harmful they may be, the caste tries to exercise its influence and make progress well-nigh impossible. And however convinced a person may be, if he had not the courage to break the bonds of caste, he has to sit with folded hands and do nothing. It is hopeless to expect the caste to give up its only potent instrument—the only way in which it can have its influence felt. It is equally hopeless to expect caste to go forward in the near future or even the distant future. The tyranny of caste in Gujarat is difficult to be imagined by those whose communities do not hold them in such iron grip. Still people have to cling to it for self-protection, for there is hardly any alternative. The plight of an out-caste is such that men and women not endowed with extraordinary moral courage do not dare to invite it. It was this insurmountable thraldom to caste that made the Brahmans of old to break through its bonds. They wanted the freedom of their conscience and found it impossible to attain while they were under caste regime. But they had several advantages. There was unity of religion to bask them and they formed into a community by themselves. Their example has not been followed by any other religious sect. The Hindu society is so inextricably interwoven with the idea of caste that Hindus, generally speaking, can think only in terms of caste. Such a tremendous force could be used for the welfare of society. But alas! it is in its nature not constituted for that. The idea of domination is its moving force and with that it is fruitless to ask it to do the impossible. The only hope of the social reformer is that with the new ideas of social equity permeating throughout all the layers of the social organism there will awaken a consciousness which would teach men to ignore caste and thereby undermine its force. This process though slow is likely to succeed looking to the advanced communities where a majority of members hold reformed views.

It may be mentioned that castes being strongholds of custom, have no objections to reform which do not interefere with their time-honoured paths. The caste would not come in your way, if you endeavour to bring about social purity among you. The caste may connive at these evils, but never enjoins them.

Thus it is that the work of social reform propaganda has yet much scope and many opportunities for activity. The reform ideas have touched the more educated of the society. But the masses are left as they were. As in all other departments of work in this country, workers in villages are sorely needed. It is enough to go among villagers and have some talks with them to be convinced that their state in social matters is what it was years ago. Currents of opinions might have ruffled the urban advanced classes, but the masses are firm in their belief that there could not possibly be any transformation in the ways of their social life. Earnest preachers who feel towards the work and who are inspired by living sympathy can alone achieve this great task. The work for social uplift is not likely to get popular applause, and it is a work for which those for whom it is done would rather curse than bless the worker. We have had beacon stars to point us the way. What we require is humble workers who unassumingly and silently devote their life to this work.

The Need for vernacular papers.

For achieving this end vernacular papers, weeklies or even monthlies, would be of great help. I have no information about other vernaculars, but we Gujaratis must plead guilty that we possess none doing this work. Until and unless information and reasoning are put before the public in their own tongue, no progress can be gained. A large part of the population is ignorant of the English language and though there are several English papers dealing with social reform, they are of no use to them. Again, these English periodicals being meant for the more educated treat the subject from a higher stand-point. What is required is popular treatment of the same so as to appeal to the less educated and the ignorant.

The village teachers seem to have many opportunities which others lack. He is at present experimentally used as healer of physical ailments. He can be made use of in many other ways. If he has been made to grasp the havoc that is played by social evils, he may work wonders.

Wanted Women Workers.

The programme of our social reform contains many items chiefly concerning women. It is the duty of educated ladies to take up that portion of the work and devote their energies to it, or for that matter, they can take up other items as well and leave men to do other things. In America the gigantic task of removing the evil of drink was chiefly carried on by women workers. At any rate, the problems relating to women can best be solved by women themselves. It is high time now that men should be relieved of this part of their work. In the upper classes especially, and also among higher middle classes, women have a good deal of leisure which they can profitably utilise in the betterment of their own lot. Besides, they possess persuasive tact which men rarely have. In fact, it is their own work and can be best performed by them.

There are some evil customs such as sale of brides and bridegrooms, big dowries and hundas, great expenditure at marriage and death ceremonies which can easily be put an end to if our women take into their heads to stop them. There is neither Shastric injunction nor extreme caste pressure criticism. Women can succeed in making a favourable change in these matters. For, it is very often experienced that opposition by women folk of the house prevents men from turning back from the wrong and acting in the right direction. Nothing else can achieve this. The more enlightened women can by their practice and precept influence their less fortunate sisters, turn them round and make them see eye to eye with them. Mention must be made here of increasing the number of ladies taking active part in the work of social uplift. The extended scope of social work and service has given greater opportunities for women to work. The women's branch of Social Service League of Bombay is an instance in point. Infant welfare, regeneration of fallen women, all-round improvement in the condition of labouring classes: all these are activities for which women are pre-eminently fitted. They are natural as well as humanitarian acts and should attract workers from all quarters. Ladies and gentlemen, I admit all these things are more easily said than done. But they must be done sometime and somehow. That the great panacea to most of our social and other evils is education, is admitted on all hands. So no pains should be spared to spread education both among boys and girls and make fast this corner-stone of our work of regeneration.

Necessity for State Legislation.

Several such customs require legal sanction to get them changed. The help of the legislature is indispensable in such cases. Laws for civil marriage, widow marriage, abolition of Satees and such reforms have been the results of persistent efforts on the part of the great reformers of old. Changes in succession to property would also require to be legalised before they can be put into practice. Not only in such matters has the help of the State been necessary, but, reformers have to approach the State in order to get relief because members of society turn a deaf ear to their pleadings. The orthodox section of society, moreover, tries to frustrate the work of reformers in that direction. The interference of the State in social matters is best avoided as far as possible. Yet in some urgent reforms there is no other alternative. The institution of marriage being the essential factor in the social structure, a civilized society wants to make it as pure and as ideal as possible. As it has a legal aspect also, the help of legislation has to be sought. In the Bombay Legislative Council Mr. Advani has brought his bill for Monogamous Marriages in Sind. Monogamous marriage is a desideratum for the whole of the country and sooner or later it must be established. The Basu Bill and Patel's and Gour's Bills to reform marriages have been earnest endeavours to mend the shortcomings of the existing system. Their fate is well known. The new Children's Protection Bill of Dr. Sir H. S. Gour is a step towards attaining some advance in removing the evil effects of child marriage as well as protection of young girls from outside. The Bill has received support from several institutions conducted by women and has every chance of getting through. Let us wish it full success. Franchise for women, and compulsory education are other items the reformers wish to introduce with the help of the law.

The question of combating the drink evil belongs to the same category where State protection is necessary. It is peculiarly necessary there for it is connected with liquor trade of which Government have the monopoly, they being manufacturers and regulators of its sale. Besides, the only true remedy of rooting out the evil lies in entirely prohibiting its production and sale. The State alone can thus effectively bring about this reform. Legislators disposed to humanitarian inclinations have been striving with all the help at their back to bring down Government to accede to their request. A request so manifestly just and wholesome is bound to be granted sooner or later. Mr. Pradhan's Bill in the Local Legislature for promoting local option is a step in the right direction.

It must be a matter of no small satisfaction to the earnest workers in this cause that though the reforms advocated by early reformers created a storm of protest in the beginning, they have gradually been admitted in the programmes of religious and orthodox Mandals. Not only that, but some of them have found place in the agenda of political associations. All these point to the justification of the work undertaken by the reformers of past generations and also the reason of our existence.

Need for Social Consciousness.

The evils so deeply rooted in Hindu society are peculiar to it and they persist on account of its uncommon constitution and temperament. It is difficult to conceive that any other equally civilized nation would tolerate such injurious customs so long and after so much persuasion. This brings before us the fact that no society can claim to be so perfect as to have no room for reform. All the societies of the world have something or other to change. The evils may be different but they require to be removed. Our fault lies in slowness with which we adapt ourselves to new environment. Social organism is a living organism and the progress of civilization brings about an infinite number of forces into play. Society in order to save itself from decaying and dying, must needs adapt itself to the changing circumstances. It is given to the gifted few to find out these discrepancies and concert measures for reconstruction. This process must go on for ever unless society chooses to be lifeless and dead or until human civilization comes to an end. And neither of this is likely. Hence the work of social reconstruction must be handed from generation to generation and continue to the end of the world. Bands of ardent workers must come forward with legacy and light from past thinkers and move on with the consciousness and self-satisfaction of doing their duty.

Such high sense of selflessness can only come into existence when there arises a social consciousness as against individual consciousness. The realisation that society has claims on individuals is a prime necessity. Individuals may come and go, but society subsists. Individuals may develop their individuality so far as not to clash with society. It is hardly necessary to say that such a realization does not debar true liberty or freedom of conscience. For, true dictates of conscience have inspired men to work in that direction.

Ladies and gentlemen, this city of Poona has been fortunate in being the centre of activities of social reformers since the beginning of the movement in our country. Outsiders may verily congratulate it on possessing its Ranade, Bhandarkar, Chiplunkar, Gokhale and his Servants of India Society, Agarkar, Paranjpye, Karwe and Devadhar, Ramabai Ranade and Pandita Ramabai. Surely no one city in India or if not India at least no one city in the Bombay Presidency can claim such a proud record. With the brilliant galaxy of these intrepid souls, Poona is destined to be the leading city in social matters in time to come.

CALCUTTA LETTER.

(From our Correspondent).

There was a riot at Titagarh, (13 miles from Calcutta) between Hindu and Mahomedan coolies on Sunday last. It is understood that the trouble arose during the occasion of the Hindus celebrating a festival in connection with the Janmastami. The incident that caused the trouble is reported to be the playing of music in front of a mosque. A fierce fight developed in which flaming torches and stones were used freely. Military assistance was requisitioned from Barrackpore and order was restored soon after. About twenty were injured in the affray. A strong police guard is still being maintained and the communal tension is settling down. Mahatma Gandhi, Moulana Abdul Kalam Azad and Mr. H. S. Suhrawardy visited the disturbed area.

Mahatmaji addressed a large gathering at the Y.M.C.A., College Street, on Friday (Aug. 28) night on an interesting topic viz., 'Is race hatred essential for Nationalism?' He declared that he had been a student of this question ever since he had entered public life and had deliberately come to the conclusion that love of man's country which was in fact nationalism was consistent with the love of those who ruled over the country. He continued, "We see the song of hatred has not benefited humanity. Let it be the privilege of India to turn a new leaf and set a lesson to the world. In my humble opinion it is derogatory to the dignity of mankind, it is derogatory to the dignity of India to entertain for one single moment hatred towards Englishmen. In our eagerness for our freedom we do not want the degrading of other countries. For my part, I do not want the freedom of India if it means the disappearance of Englishmen. I want the freedom of my country so that other countries may learn something from mine; so that its resources might be utilised for the benefit of mankind. My idea of nationalism is that my country may become free—so free that, if need be, the whole of the country may die in order that human races may live. There is no room here for race hatred. Let that be our nationalism." (Applause).

An interesting case of complaint was filed on Thursday last on behalf of A. Chakravarty, a sub-overseer of the Corporation water-works, against the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Page of the Calcutta High Court. It was alleged that the complainant was ordered by the Calcutta Corporation to stop the unfiltered water supply for the garden. The complainant accordingly went to the Judge's residence on Wednesday morning and asked his butler to inform the Judge, but the butler requested the complainant to come and see the Judge at 10 a.m. The complainant stated that as he was waiting at the portico at 10 a. m., he was abused by Mr. Justice Page. The complainant reported the matter to his superior officer, who authorised him to lodge the complaint. The Magistrate—Khan Saheb Abdul Gaffur—directed the complainant to prove the case. The hearing was fixed for September 10.—Statesman Aug. 29th 1925.

IS ASTROLOGY A SCIENCE?

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

It is a matter of common experience that violent assertions and vehement denunciations as a rule accompany ignorance, and humility and self-restraint accompany knowledge. For he who knows is always conscious of the fact that what he knows is infinitely less than what he does not know, and is always open to learn.

Your correspondent, Mr. K. G. Karkare, emphatically believes that astrologers and those who believe in astrology—especially the Hindu Astrology which claims to predict events—must be either fools or liars, simply because he cannot believe in it.

He says that if astrology be true, and that events in a person's life can be foretold, the inevitable inference follows that these events must be predetermined, and this amounts to a belief in fatalism.

Now I should like to ask Mr. Karkare if he believes in the immortality of the human soul, and its evolution from life to life, at least as a rational theory of life, or does he hold the absurd and meaningless belief in the creation by God of each human soul at birth (including of course those begotten by adultery) and its extinction at death? If he holds to the latter belief he must say how he reconciles the most glaring inequalities of life as regards circumstances of birth and unequal opportunities, as well as unequal mental and moral capacities from birth, consistently with his belief in a merci-

ful and just God from whom he derives wonderful courage and strength of mind, and what explanation has he to offer for the evil and misery in the world?

If, on the other hand, he is one of those who believe that in a universe where physical, chemical, and biological laws are found to operate with such infallibility and immutability that the more we examine nature, the more we marvel at the order and accuracy manifesting through it, and that, therefore, it is hardly reasonable to imagine that the human kingdom—notwithstanding the gift of free will to man,—could have been left to drift aimlessly in the infinitude of time, on the mere whims and caprices of individuals and nations; and if he likewise considers it reasonable to grant, at least as an hypothesis, that there must be certain definite natural laws governing human evolution, then I think I shall be able to explain to him why it should be possible to foretell events in a person's life, which, though predetermined at birth, do not involve the irrational idea of fatalism or predestination in the sense in which Mr. Karkare understands it.

We have either to accept the blasphemous doctrine that God in his omnipotence determines the life of all individuals, and lets one child be born blind or syphilitic, and in the most degraded social surroundings, and another of cultured parents and with a golden spoon in its mouth, or we must accept the only rational doctrine that "Man is his own maker" and that "Whatsoever a man soweth so shall he also reap."

If we acccept the latter, we can easily see that we must accept, as a necessary sequal, Reincarnation and Karma as the two fundamental laws governing human existence and evolution.

Christ says, : "Be ye as perfect as your Father in Heaven is perfect." This is not possible for any mortal to achieve in one life however long it may be; and if it were impossible of achievement Christ would not have said so. Reincarnation, therefore, must be a fact of human existence, and a necessity of human evolution.

If so it will be seen that a savage and a genius are not so created by God, but the savage is a being that has just stepped into the human kingdom from the animal, whereas the genius has simply risen to his position by his own efforts, and the experiences of several lives behind him. There is gradual growth everywhere, and so it is in the human kingdom.

Now the law of Karma is nothing but the law of causation; and let us see how it works. In any one life a person creates a variety of Karma, which are good, bad and indifferent. These Karmas are done in relation to a number of persons. Very often individuals by their Karma affect the lives of a large number of people for good or for evil. It is thus not possible that all the Karma of any one life can be paid off in the very next, as the persons affected by the man's Karma cannot all be brought into incarnation at the same time and at the same place, because of their progress in evolution requiring them to be born in different surroundings at different times.

The Karmic arrangement is therefore so made that at every birth a certain portion of the man's accumulated Karma is assigned to him to be worked out. The accumulated Karma is called in the Hindu Shastras the 'Sanchita' and the portion assigned at each birth to be worked out is called the 'Prarabdha,' and the fresh Karmas created by the person under the limitations of his 'Prarabdha' are called 'Kriyaman' and these are added to the Sanchita which is modified as a whole for better or for worse.

It will be seen that a man is bound by his 'Prarabdha' which he has to work out in the form of pleasure or pain happiness or misery, affluence or poverty etc. This is certainly his fate for that particular incarnation. He cannot escape or avoid it, but it will be seen that he himself is the maker of it, and though he is bound by it, it is not the 'Kismat' or fatalism, as is commonly understood for which the person himself is not responsible, and which is assigned to him by a superior force outside him, may it be be Divine or more appropriately diabolical.

It is the 'Prarabdha' or the Karma assigned to be worked out in a man's life that can be known by means of astrology which has in practice proved to be quite as accurate as many of the so—called sciences.

Space does not permit me to go into the rationale of this science, but any man who with an open mind wants to prove to himself the truth of astrology cannot fail to find any number of authentic instances, on record, of events having been accurately foretold much before they have happened, without the least application of the process of inference.

Mr. Karkare denounces astrology as a lie, because he is at least fifty years behind time, and is as wise as a man who would now venture to say that consciousness is a product of matter just as bile is a product of the lever.

THE TRUE UNDERSTANDING OF JESUS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Dear Sir,

It was with very great pleasure that I read Mr. C. F. Andrews' article on "The true understanding of Jesus." I am deeply grateful to him for his very kind and sympathetic references to my article on the same subject. There are two points, however, which need a further explanation. I myself do not despair of recovering the historical personality of Jesus for the Gospels, nor does Dr. Schweitzer. But Dr. Schweitzer's main contention is that the eschatological element in the Gospels is precisely the historical reflecting as it does the dogmatic messianic consciousness of Jesus, whereas I regard the eschatology of the Gospels as unhistorical so far as the life and teaching of Jesus are concerned. In other words I regard Dr. Schwitzer's "historical" Jesus as unhistorical. I hope to make this point clearer still in an article or two which Mr. K. T. Paul has kindly asked me to write for the "Young Men of India."

Secondly I do not know if Mr. Andrews is right when he says, "since Dr. Schweitzer wrote his book, he has gone out as a missionary to a malaria-infected district on the Congo and has spent many years of his life among the sorely-stricken and miserable people of that tropical part of the world, ready to make a sacrifice of all that men hold dear, owing to one motive alone viz., his devotion to Jesus." While I earnestly hope that this statement is true, I have reasons to believe that it is not. Dr. Schweitzer gave up his Professorship at the Strassburg University and then qualified himself as a medical man taking a Doctor's Degree in Medicine; and he has gone to Africa not because he thinks it worth while to preach the gospel of Jesus but being moved by the terrible sufferings of the people he desires to render them all the Medical help he can. He has gone to Africa as a philanthropist and not as a missionary of the gospel of Jesus. I shall be glad to know that I am mistaken in this belief.

INDIA'S DEMAND FOR PROHIBITION.

The debate on Wednesday in the Legislative Assembly on Haji Wajiuddin's resolution that legislation should be undertaken for the prohibition of all sorts of liquor and that in the mean time local Governments should be asked to grant to local bodies full right to determine the number and location of liquor shops, brings into prominence the oft-repeated fact that it is the Government that stands in the way of Prohibition in India. Colonel Crawford moved an amendment urging a policy of control to prevent excessive drinking rather than efforts to attain Prohibition which he characterised as impossible. This is an argument of those belonging to the School of "true temperance" who contend that temperance means moderate drinking. The President rightly ruled Colonel Crawford's amendment out of order inasmuch as it amounted to the complete negation of the original resolution. The two important amendments to the resolution were moved by Dr. S. K. Datta and Mr. N. C. Kelkar.

Dr. Datta moved an amendment recommending Government to accept the policy of ultimate prohibition in respect of liquor save for medical and scientific purposes. He further recommended that as a first step in the carrying out of that policy (a) the import of spirituous liquor be rigidly controlled, (b) provincial Governments be asked to undertake legislation whereby the control of sale of spirituous liquors will be vested in local bodies and licensing boards elected on the popular franchise or be regulated by a system of local option wherever possible.

Mr. Kelkar's amendment was to the effect that the ultimate policy of Government should be prohibition of production, manufacture, sale and import of intoxicating liquors, save for medicinal and scientific purposes. The amendment further recommended that as the first step in carrying out this policy provincial Governments should be directed immediately to inaugurate a policy of vesting the power of fixing by a system of local option the location and number of shops selling intoxicating liquors in either local self-governing bodies or licensing boards specially constituted for the purpose and elected on popular franchise and that necessary legislation should be undertaken by the Government of India for the furtherance of this policy.

Dr. Datta in moving his amendment, said that he would not base his arguments on religious or on sentimental grounds, but would prove that for economic and medical reasons prohibition was most desirable. He gave figures, showing that in the state of New York one result of prohibition was a progressive reduction in the number of cases of insanity. As regards the economic factor, Government revenue from liquor and drugs had risen from Rs. 923 lakhs in 1912-13 to Rs. 1,920 lakhs in 1920-24. Thus the tax per head of the population had risen from 7 annas 9 pies in 1912-13 to 12 annas 5 pies in 1923-24. Indeed the tax from liquor and drugs contributed one-seventh to one-eighth of the entire revenue of the Central and Provincial Governments. Now as regards imported liquors the import of spirit had also increased in 1923-24 compared with 1914-15. This import should be controlled. He drew attention to the Bombay Excise Committee's report in favour of ultimate prohibition, which had been already accepted by the Bombay Government. He was however sorry that Haji Wajiuddin's resolution did not include the prohibition of drugs because every country which had gone in for prohibition had first controlled drugs stringently.

Mr. Kelkar in the course of his forceful speech exploded the arguments advanced by Col. Crawford and also referred to the benefits of Prohibition in America. Mr. Jamnadas Mehta dwelt at some length on the evils of drink and severely criticised

the attitude taken by those like Col. Crawford. He criticised the Government officials who by precept set a bad example. "Governors and Members of Government," he said, "instead of abstaining and setting a good example, were drinking openly." Sir Purshottamdas Thakurdas in a weighty speech supported Mr. Kelkar's amendment.

Sir Basil Blackett, the Finance Member, as could be expected, opposed the resolution and the amendments. He opposed the very idea of Prohibition. He said that Government could not accept the principle of even ultimate prohibition, because for so far ahead as they could see it must be an utterly impracticable policy. Their policy, he showed to be, maximum control, maximum revenue, and minimum consumption, and he quoted some statistics to show that it had marvellously succeeded in India over a long period of years.

At the close of the debate, Haji Wajiuddin and Dr. Datta withdrew their motions in favour of Mr. N. C. Kelkar's amendment which was carried by 69 votes to 39. It is clear that almost every Indian non-official member was in favour of the resolution. The carrying out of the resolution favouring Prohibition by the Indian Legislative Assembly by such an overwhelming majority is bound to have a wide moral effect on the movement for Prohibition. The nation has recorded its verdict in favour of Prohibition, and it is its duty to see that its resolution is enforced. Government cannot continue to defy public opinion for all time.

LOCAL OPTION.

One of the recognised means of attaining Prohibition is through Local Option. The object of the Local Option scheme is to test at regular intervals the strength of public opinion in a particular locality as regards the maintenance, restriction or prohibition of facilities for sale of intoxicating drinks and drugs in that area. Mrs. Price, National President of Women's Christian Temperance Union, India, who has recently returned from the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union Convention held in Edinburgh last June and whose communication on the subject of Local Option in Scotland we publish to-day, relates the wonderful transformation which Local Option has effected in Scotland. Already 310 parishes are dry by the will of the landlords and 345 dry by the vote of the people.

The Government of Bombay which has declared total prohibition as the goal of its excise policy, however, fights shy of a system which has been tried with such remarkable success in Scotland. In our Supplement of July 11th, we drew attention to the retrograde step of the Government of Bombay in reducing the duty on "Indian-made foreign liquor," as being calculated to retard the progress of temperance in this Presidency. Its attitude in regard to Local Option has equally been disappointing in the extreme. In reply to the representation made by the Deccan Sabha, Poona, Government regretted that they could not modify their present attitude in regard to Local Option, since on a full consideration of the merits of Local Option, they saw nothing in the system which would ensure the gradual financial adjustment so necessary for the success of their main policy. His Excellency the Governor emphasised the same when, in reply to the Municipal address at Sholapur, he said that the Government could not accept a general policy of Local Option at present. It is not difficult to understand Government's evasiveness. Local Option, if introduced on a large scale, would gradually strengthen public opinion against drinks and deprive Government of much of its excise revenue which comes to nearly 33 per cent of the total revenue. We do not understand how a Government which has set itself upon a bold experiment can let considerations of 'financial adjustment" stand in the way of the adoption of a policy that has been tried elsewhere with remarkable success. The only hope, therefore, lies in Mr. Pradhan's Local Option Bill which is to come up very shortly for discussion before the Legislative Council. We hope the members of the Legislative Council will realise the urgency of this much-needed temperance reform which is a purely non-party question and give their unanimous support to Mr. Pradhan's Bill.

Calcutta also has not fared better in this respect. The Corporation of Calcutta forwarded to Government a copy of the resolution passed at their meeting held on the 25th March, 1925, recommending that all wine and liquor shops etc., within the municipal town of Calcutta be removed therefrom and that in future licenses be granted only to recognised chemists and druggists for the sale of such quantities of wine, liquor and other intoxicants within the municipal town of Calcutta as may reasonably be required for medical purposes. Government, in reply, stated that they are not at present prepared to depart from the existing excise policy.

It is, therefore, with a sigh of relief that we welcome the United Provinces Government's proposal to frame a Bill soon embodying the principle of Local Option and to give it wide circulation and to invite opinions upon it not only from individuals and bodies specially interested in it but also from the public in general. Unless we see the U. P. Government's Bill, it is premature to entertain any high hopes of Government's launching into a policy calculated to bring in early Prohibition. Knowing as we do the attitude of the Government on this important question, we cannot feel over-joyed at the proposed legislation in U. P. We are content to wait and see.

LOCAL OPTION IN SCOTLAND.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

SIR,

In your latest Prohibition Supplement certain statements concerning Local Option in Scotland made by me in public meetings were given. May I crave the courtesy of your columns for further facts showing the working of Local Option in "Bonny Scotland".?

Many people residing in India scarcely realize that about one third of Scotland is now under Local Option and that constant, organized, effort is hastening the day when Scotland shall join the ranks of the "dry" nations. On my recent visit there I was somewhat surprised to find so much enthusiastic support to the measure. On the voyage to India we met Englishmen, who, and judging from the amount of strong drink they imbibed, could not be classed as prejudiced in favour of Prohibition, stated their belief that Scotland would be the next country to go dry. These same observers told us that there is much less drinking in England than formerly, but that England will never go dry. (We wonder what they will think on this point twenty years from now.) In the parishes which are "dry by the will of the landlord" there is a clause in the land tenure binding both the landlord and the tenant to keep to this agreement. Under these conditions the people are happy and prosperous desiring no change, and there is no difficulty in enforcing the law. Areas which were voted dry in 1920 even after the most unscrupulous efforts of the Trade to reverse the action in 1923, were held by the temperance people.

We sometimes hear of the "failure" of the Local Option law to accomplish its purpose and to meet the wishes of the people. It reminds one of the doleful tales of the people in the United States of America, to be freed from the odious Prohibition law, though at each election of members to the United States Congress the majority of men who are known to support bone-dry laws is a little larger than before. Yes, there are those in the United States who would like to see Prohibition law repealed, but they are not the persons who are an honour to the commonwealth, and whose lives are a contribution to the good of their fellowmen. One often wonders why the anti-Prohibition forces expend so much money and effort to get these hated laws repealed when, according to their own statements, the laws are non-effective and more drink is sold and drunk for the purpose of breaking them, than would be without them. What self-sacrificing patriots the promoters of "The Trade" must be!

There are in Scotland areas where mining, fishing, shipping and manufacturing respectively are the chief industries, which have been dry since 1920, with the result that homes are being transformed, infant mortality reduced, taxes lowered, and the whole tone of the community raised. In some places the police force has been reduced by 25 per cent. Police Superintendents are emphatic in their statements that the benefits which come to the people from Local Option can hardly be overestimated. The parish of Cambuslang with a population 26,000 is reported as having "turned public houses into banks, cleared its streets of drunken men and foul language, and transformed hovels into homes."

Mrs. Sophie Muir, wife of Dr. E. Muir, of Calcutta, writes from Edinburgh: "We as a temperance party are not only a very much alive section of the world, but we are a decidedly growing party. I notice the difference between this and two years ago even, when I went out to India, which means that the folks here have been doing good work; I also notice how very much fairer the criticism of the ordinary person one meets is. A few days ago there was a Temperance breakfast held under the auspices of the Royal Sanitary Institute Conference held here this week and so many people applied for tickets, that it was impossible to supply the number asked for that used not to be the experience at Temperance breakfasts!"

Yours truly,
EMMA S. PRICE.

"ENROUTE TO DRY WORLD."

Miss Mary J. Campbell writes from Waterloo, Iowa, under date 28th July:—

"Enroute to dry world" was the slogan adopted by the United States delegates to the World's W. C. T. U. Convention in Edinburgh.

During the sessions of that Convention the following cablegram came from Evangeline Booth, the head of the Salvation Army: "Congratulations en route to dry world". "Tell Britain every man's duty to throw his best into conflict against arch curse of all peoples. Social, economic, physical, and moral betterment of the race demands this. Give no heed reports prohibition America ineffective. It is racing towards complete triumph. Those engaged in illicit traffic defeating themselves. The dry cause a moral force against which no weapon can prosper."

In the report of the Edinburgh Convention as found in the Union Signal I find the following significant facts:—

One, that the Twelfth World's W. C. T. U. Convention was almost immediately followed by a Congress of the International Association against Prohibition in Paris; and the other that after all arrangements had been consummated for the broadcasting over the radio of notable addresses of leaders, an order was received from London cancelling those arrangements. Commenting on this the reporter said: "Could the internationally organised forces of the drink trade have paid a greater compliment to the work done and the influence exerted by the white ribboners of the world? But the drink interests might as well have tried to keep the sun from rising by wringing the neck of the cock that announces that event, as to have tried to prevent the broadcasting of the truth given out at the World's Convention by refusing to send it over the radio."

Viscountess Astor was one of the "Star" speakers at the Convention. She said that from the time she made her maiden speech in the House of Commons she had the drink trade against her and she was proud to have it against her. "I would not for the world have it for me", she bravely announced. She does not see why people are so fearful of the liquor interests. She also stated that the Drink Trade is organised internationally against the common welfare of the world. The Foreign Liquor Trade boasts that it has sent money into Britain, Canada, the United States, Sweden and other countries to interfere with, and to turn elections." We need more such fearless advocates of the Prohibition cause in the western world.

A new plan for better enforcement of the Prohibition law in the United States is being devised and will soon be made effective.

Col. Lincoln C. Andrews is the director appointed by the Federal Government to carry out this new programme.

One of the general aims of this new move is to dry up the source of supply in the eastern section. Heavy doses have been given to the Atlantic smugglers lately and they are finding their method of earning a livelihood becoming more and more precarious.

The drive will take three forms, says Lenna Lowe Yost, the W. C. T. U. Legislative Representative at Washington:—

1. In the east, an effort to ferret out the larger sources of supply and to stop the 'leaks' from bounded warehouses.
2. In the south, an effort to check "moonshining" which is carried on in a few southern states.
3. Along the Canadian border, to cut down smuggling.

Those who support the law will find gratifying reassurance that enforcement is not languishing. Those who violate the law, either carelessly or maliciously, may be persuaded to see in this new project the promise that henceforth the way of the transgression will be made exceedingly hard.

Col. Andrews is being armed with great authority.

Horace D. Taft, a brother of William H. Taft, Chief Justice of the United States, has just lately made this statement: "We might as well try to reverse the direction of the rapids at Niagara as to reverse the deliberate verdict of the American people in this question of prohibition. Enormous good has followed the adoption of prohibition."

I found great ignorance concerning the opium question in Great Britain. It has not touched the homes in that land as yet, and when broached before some who should be sympathetic with India's desire to free herself from this curse, it was lightly cast aside as only a political question.

I am glad to find the abkari standing out straight in this matter which so deeply concerns India. It speaks out its mind in no uncertain tones as to what should be done to limit the production of the poppy. I realize that it takes a long time, and much patient endeavour to bring about a drastic reform, but in this matter where the welfare of multitudes of little ones are so seriously concerned my prayer is that this reform may be "speeded up."

EXCISE POLICY IN BENGAL.

(Statesman, CALCUTTA)

The Government of Bengal have made to the Calcutta Corporation a declaration of policy with regard to the suggested removal of excise and opium shops from the municipal limits of the city.

The Corporation, at their meeting on March 25 of this year, passed a resolution recommending to the Government that all wine and liquor shops, including shops for the sale of opium, ganja and other intoxicants, should be removed from within the municipal limits, and that in future, licences should be granted only to recognized chemists and druggists for the sale of such quantities of wine, liquor and other intoxicants as might reasonably be required for medicinal purposes.

In reply to this resolution the Government states that they are not, at present, prepared to depart from their excise policy which had been explained in certain official publications. The Government intimates, however, that should they consider it necessary or desirable in future to re-examine the policy the recommendation of the Corporation will receive due consideration.

GUIDING PRINCIPLES.

So far back as August, 1914, the Government made an exhaustive examination of the charges then made against the

realpatidar.com

Indian excise administration, and, in their despatch to the Secretary of State, showed that the principles by which the revenue officers were guided in excise matters were (1) that the taxation of spirituous and intoxicating liquors and drugs should be high, and in some cases as high as it is possible to enforce; (2) that the traffic in liquor and drugs should be conducted under suitable regulations for police purposes; (3) that the number of places for the sale of liquor and drugs should be strictly limited with regard to the circumstances of the locality; and (4) that efforts should be made to ascertain the existence of local public sentiment, to which, when ascertained, a reasonable amount of deference should be paid. It was at the same time definitely stated that, in the opinion of the Government of India, the total prohibition of the consumption of stimulants in India, even if desirable, was impracticable.

In the following year in appointing the Indian Excise Committee, the Government again emphasized their policy and intimated that they had no desire to interfere with the use of alcohol in moderation. The question was regarded as outside the duty of the Government, whose settled policy was to minimize temptation to those who did not drink and to discourage excess amongst those who did. For the furtherance of this policy it was asserted all considerations of revenue must be absolutely subordinated.

Most Effective Method.

The most effective method was to make the tax upon liquor as high as it was possible to raise it without stimulating illicit production to a degree which would increase instead of diminish the total consumption, and without driving people to substitute drugs for alcohol or a more for a less harmful form of a liquor. Subject to the same considerations the number of liquor shops should be restricted as far as possible and their location periodically subject to strict examination with a view to minimizing the temptation to drink and to conform as far as was reasonable to public opinion. It was also important to secure that the liquor which was offered for sale was of good quality and not necessarily injurious to health.

The general measures indicated by the Government for the carrying out of the policy included suggestions for the making of every effort to suppress illicit methods of all kinds, the excise staff to be utilized in directions calculated to maintain the closest supervision over the liquor and drug traffic. It was further suggested that, without unduly encouraging illicit methods, consumption should be discouraged by means of the levying of as high a rate of duty as possible, bearing in mind the special conditions of the locality, and by reducing, as far as possible and with due regard to legitimate requirements, the number of retail shops for the sale of liquor and drugs, by close regulation and supervision of the hours of sale, the selection of sites, and the general practices adopted in manufacture and sale.

A further explanation of the Government's policy towards the sale of alcohol was made by the Department of Agriculture and Industries (Excise) on August 25, 1921. The policy, it explained, was directed towards securing a minimum of consumption with a maximum of revenue.

High Taxation.

This was stated to mean a high taxation of intoxicating articles with a view to making them as dear as possible for the individual consumer, and thereby to keep consumption at a minimum. It was a controversial question whether the State had a right to force total prohibition upon the public, and, it was contended, so long as this could not be done, and so long as the Excise traffic continued, the best thing for a Government to do was to take measures to control the consumption of intoxicants as far as possible.

It was intimated that the Government would continue this policy but in future the trade in intoxicating drinks or drugs would be strictly controlled like other trades. Government interference in ordinary trades might not be desirable, but for obvious reasons interference and control were very necessary in a trade of this kind.

The official document continues:—"Alcohol and drugs like opium and ganja are generally used for purposes of intoxication and are known as mere intoxicants, but there are various highly useful purposes to which they can be applied, and on which the Government cannot lay too much stress. The value of alcohol as a highly useful industrial article is yet practically unknown in this country, except only to a few individuals. Cheap alcohol is a great boon for various industrial purposes.

Attention was drawn to the great possibilities of raw and waste materials in the manufacture of alcohol, and the hope was expressed that the public would evince interest in the matter, as the production of cheap alcohol would materially help in the industrial regeneration of the country.

Steps to be taken.

With a view to carrying out this policy it was announced that the following steps would be taken.—

Total abolition of the practice of selling excise and opium shops by annual auction, and the early institution of the Bengal fixed-fee system. From March 18, 1921, there was to be a reduction of duty on alcohol required for medicinal or other industrial purposes by over 50 per cent, and further steps in this direction were contemplated. A resolution to do away with excise taxation upon fresh date juice had already been accepted.

By a majority of only seven votes the Bengal Legislative Council at the September session of 1924 declared itself against the adoption of measures with a view to total prohibition "within as short a period as practicable." On that occasion the Hon. the Nawab Saiyid Nawab Ali Chaudhary, Khan Bahadur, the Minister in Charge, stated that statistics of consumption went to show that not more than five per cent of the Bengalis were given to the use of intoxicants.

Prohibition League of India Convention: Dewan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao, M.L.A., has been elected as President of the Prohibition League of India Convention to be held in Delhi from January 29th to 31st 1926. From the tentative programme, a copy of which has been sent to us, we see that among the subjects to be discussed at the Conference are: The case for Prohibition of drink and drugs in India; The Restriction of opium in India; Prohibition Difficulties for drink and drugs; Women and Prohibition; Labour and Prohibition; Indian States and Prohibition and Local Option and Prohibition. Among those who are expected to speak at the Conference are Dr. S. K. Datta, Messrs. C. F. Andrews, K. Natarajan, N. M. Joshi, Jamnadas Mehta, Haji Wajid-ud-din, K. Chaliha, Devi Prasad Sinha, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, Kumar Ganganand Sinha, Moulana Khwaja Hasan Nizami, Dr. W. L. Ferguson, Rev. J. W. Pie, Mrs. Chitamber, Mrs. W. L. Ferguson, the Hon. Sir Deva Prasad Sarvadhikari, and the Hon. Mr. G. A. Natesan. Mahatma Gandhi will attend if he can.

Liberals on the Excise Policy: The Bombay Provincial Liberal Conference recently held in Poona adopted the following resolution: This Conference, while expressing its satisfaction at the adoption by the Bombay Government of total prohibition as the goal of its excise policy, puts on record its feeling of dissatisfaction that (1) they are not prepared to specify the period of time within which they would seek to achieve their goal (2) that they have rejected the policy of local option by means of which mainly prohibition should be brought about and (3) that they do not commit themselves to a continuous reduction of the supply of liquor year after year till prohibition is attained. The Conference accords its general support to the bill on this subject which Mr. R. G. Pradhan is seeking to introduce in the Council. Proposed by Mr. S. G. Vaze (Poona), seconded by Mr. Rajadhya (Islampur) and supported by Mr. L. R. Gokhale (Poona). The Provincial Social Conference also held along with it passed a resolution expressing satisfaction at the adoption by Government of total prohibition. It also accorded its support to Mr. R. G. Pradhan's Bill and earnestly appealed to H. E. the Governor to give his sanction for its introduction.

A Local Option Bill in United Provinces: We are glad to note from the Government's reply to an interpellation that the U. P. Government have proposed to frame a Bill soon embodying the principle of local option and to give it wide circulation and to invite opinions upon it, not only of the persons or bodies specially interested in the matter, but also of the public generally.

ISLAM AND MONOGAMY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

May I take exception to your statement made in your editorial article in your issue dated August 15th ? You say : "It is now admitted even by opponents of Islam that the prophet Mohammad permitted four wives as a concession to the prevailing weakness of his time. Even this permissive polygamy was hedged round by conditions which for a devout and conscientious Moslem could mean only prohibition."

"Marry such women as seem good to you, two and three and four, but if you fear that you will not do justice (between them), then (marry) only one or what your right hand possesses.....and you have it not in your power to do justice between wives even though you may covet it, but be not disinclined (from one) with total disinclination so that you leave her as it were in suspense" (4, 3, 129. Mohammad Ali's translation).

The Quran then allows four wives first on the condition of strict justice and then knowing human nature recognises that justice is as a matter of fact impossible and unattainable, even though the husband may wish it, and so as a "concession" to the weakness of the flesh gives up this stringent condition which for a "devout and conscientious Moslem could only mean prohibition" and substitutes for it the lenient and practically workable condition, "be not disinclined with total disinclination, so that you leave her as it were in suspense".

Consistently with this lenient condition and as a "concession" to weakness the great Prophet has permitted "to postpone the turn of such wives as you shall please (in being called to your bed) and you may take her whom you shall please, and her whom you shall desire of those whom you shall have before rejected and it shall be no crime in you. Thus will it be easier to give them the desire of their eyes, that they may not be grieved but may be well pleased with what you shall give to each of them. God knows what (is) in your hearts." (33 : 51).

Polygamy is made easier still in Islam by the addition of the clause "or what your right hand possesses". (i. e., female slaves) to the condition of strict justice.

PUBLIC TANKS AND ROADS IN TRAVANCORE.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have carefully read the note published in your issue of August 29th under the above caption, and I am sorry to remark that in spite of its lucid exposition, prejudice has played a conspicuous part in the expression of opinion. The Indian Social Reformer has always been opposed to the indefeasible right of resorting to passive resistance for the redress of grievances and for the establishment of the elementary rights of humanity, without suggesting any practicable and constructive alternative except by way of vague advices to the victims of a social injustice, to pin their faith in the future course of events, and has refused to recognise the undisputable purity and potency of the movement. Ever since the organisation of the Satyagraha Movement at Vaikom, the pages of the Indian Social Reformer were stained with unfair criticism on the organisers of the movement, and thus indulged in the futile game of misleading the public.

In the editorial paragraph under reference you remark : "The Satyagrahis may claim credit for the changed outlook as being due to their efforts, but it is difficult to deny that, while they contributed towards rousing public conscience to the injustice involved in denying the elementary rights of citizenship to a section of their fellow subjects, they, by taking the offensive, alienated to some extent the support of some educated people, who were in sympathy with the cause". In the first place, it is only a perversion of truth to say that the Satyagrahis alienated the sympathy of the educated classes, because the educated classes as a whole were one with the organisers in their tremendous earnestness for fighting out the cause to a successful end, but it is the illiterate orthodox Brahmins enjoying certain exclusive privileges at the cost of other communities and also others having vested interests that opposed the movement without adequate justification and convincing reasons. Kerala can never claim to have ever had any agitation for any cause and I doubt whether you can cite any instance where the so-called "educated people" have shown their sympathy with the cause. The Satyagrahis are justified in claiming, and that too rightly, the credit for bringing about a remarkable change in the outlook, and the aught that has been done towards the removal of a civic ban is due to the organisers of the Satyagraha Movement and Mahatma Gandhi. What the Maharani Regent has done is not the quintessence of her magnanimity, but only a wise step every ruler is expected to adopt to avoid precipitation of serious consequences and thus save her State from a tremendous conflagration.

The Vaikom Satyagraha has given a visible ray of hope of a better future not only for Travancore, but for the whole Kerala, and in the very near future she will be free from the cruel clutches of that absurd social system of untouchability. All honour to the organisers of the movement and the sufferers in their brave fight for a noble and just cause, which will be remembered by posterity for generations to come.

Before concluding, I may say, Mr. Editor, that the public expected from you something more than utterances of perverse frivolities. Please "give the devil his due", and do not shut your eyes against actual facts. You aspire for social reformation and want to see India replete with such inscrutable customs which choke the progress of Hindu Society, and the fittest weapon, and perhaps the only one, is passive resistance, without which, in the reign of an indifferent Government with a divide and rule policy, nothing can be achieved.

Dadar, Yours etc.
31st August 1925. N. N. MENON.

[We do not wish to repeat our arguments against the contention that passive resistance is the best weapon for the removal of social evils. We have dealt with the subject at some length on more than one occasion. We do not question the sincerity of the Satyagrahis nor their contribution towards arousing public conscience against the injustice to which the so-called depressed classes are subjected. In our view, the resolutions for throwing open all public roads to all classes of people, which was defeated at the last session of the Travancore Legislative Council, was due to some members, while they were in full sympathy with the cause advocated by the Satyagrahis, resenting Satyagraha. This, as well as the comments of some responible journals in Travancore, are sufficient to support our contention that the method adopted by Satyagrahis did alienate the sympathy of some educated people—not all. We never said "educated classes," which makes a world of difference. From what we know of literacy in Travancore, we have no reason to think that the orthodox Brahmins are "illiterate". Our correspondent has to study much about Travancore. Ed. I. S. R.]

CASTE AND RELIGION.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Kindly extend the hospitality of your columns to the following few lines stimulated by a letter appearing in your recent issue. Supporting the superior claims of a religion or caste in preference to those of others has sufficiently widened the gulf of national disunion, and it will really be a matter for satisfaction to those who are yearning for the welfare of India as a whole if harmonious efforts are made for a healthy reconciliation of them all.

The microscopic division of society into castes, sub-castes, and sects has gone to such a height of absurdity that there appears to be no other defensible argument for their continuance except that of long standing. Blind belief, want of education, and inertia have kept the people where they were; and the vanity of self-seeking upstarts is likely to lead them into chaos and disorder again. It is time now when the whole nation should come forward as the Indian people, forgetting altogether the narrow outlook about his or her community, for the progress of the country. If we stop short in hurling pointed spears at each other, and make less ado about our religious demonstrations, imperceptible realisation of this high ideal will not be very far away.

The other thing that demands our immediate attention is the way in which we are proceeding to alleviate the pains caused by the defects in our social life. It should be noted that there are enemies of the nation keenly eager to pick up any drawbacks they come across, and clamorously to put them forward as reasons for denying Indians their birthrights. We should never allow a stranger to gloat over our defects, but should all the while be striving to remove them as speedily as possible.

Everything connected with the feelings regarding the different castes and religions is rather of a delicate nature, and requires much skill in its handling. A social reformer ought, in the first place, have the gift of pleasing his hearers, and then should try to persuade them into his own line of thinking. High-handedness or a condemnatory tone will only drive the people away, and allow them to stick to their own orthodox views.

Words have been, and still continue to be, wasted on these elementary things, but they scarcely have any value unless they are supported by deeds. Courageous men of unquestioned honesty and sincerity must come forward with active sympathy towards these reforms. Then alone is there some possibility of improvement.

Shall we by some such means hope to see the people of India bound by a common tie of one caste and religion? May that Almighty create in us a desire for sinking all differences regarding castes and religions!

29th July, Yours etc.,
Bombay. Sharat Kumar.

RELIGIOUS CO-OPERATION AND SOCIAL SERVICE.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

At the present time, when the interest in social service and co-operative effort, is growing the country over, I have been led to analyse the work round about us here very carefully, and there is one attempt to serve on the part of a young man there, which attempt, I believe, deserves the attention of many of us who are interested in new ways and means of helping our fellowmen.

For the past several months, I have been working hand in hand with this Hindu leader, a man who is well versed in his own as well as the scriptures of others. Although he is out and out a Hindu, he has spoken often of his interest in the study of the life and teachings of Christ, as well as of his hope that in some way these teachings might be made of more universal use in meeting the needs of reformers in India. The other day while we were conversing on this very subject, he told me that he wished it might be possible for other young men, who, like himself, had gained inspiration from the study of the life of the Christian Master, to realize how easy it would be for them to proclaim their beliefs, while in no way altering their religious or social status in the community where they lived. "There are many", he said, "who believe that teaching anything regarding the Christian Scriptures, would mean that they would have to leave their communities, and perhaps their homes. If they could experience the satisfaction of knowing that their views are welcome, I believe there are many who would come forth to do the sort of work I am doing in trying to make my fellow-countrymen realize what a wealth of appropriate teaching there is in the religious books of societies other than my own".

Six months ago, Mr. Sudhakanta Roy wrote his own interpretation of "Sermon on the Mount" in Bengali. He did not agree with all of the points brought out by some other writers, especially Westerners, but he did give to the message of the Christian Master such an oriental touch that it called forth from leaders in Bengal, among them Rabindranath Tagore, words of commendation and praise. I believe that the success of his effort was due to the fact that he succeeded in putting the spirit of the message of the Christian Master into a language which is fully understood, and, therefore, fully appreciated by those who read it. He has taken the meanings which have often times been clothed in mis-understandable English or other language, and has placed them in the simple garb of understandable Bengali. As one friend commented: "he has opened new channels of light through his oriental interpretation".

In talking with this friend the other day, I found that he did not understand some of the teachings of Christ, as I, with my western way of thinking, do. As he outlined his interpretation in one case after another and as we considered first this and then that understanding of the passages, we found ourselves unconsciously blending the two or more interpretations in an effort to get what we could think of as a perfect interpretation. Such effort made for fuller understanding of truths, sometimes hidden within the message. At my request he has written his interpretation of some of the parables as found in the New Testament, and we are having them printed in Bengali with a hope that others like ourselves may gain new thoughts by reading them.

This is an outline of one way in which this young man is trying to serve his community. In his own society he is fully respected for his high ideals, and outside of his community he is honoured for his tolerant co-operation. His hope is that, through his efforts, all communities may see, as he does, the spiritual value of every religious book, and that other men, like himself, appreciative of the teachings of the Christian teacher, may turn their efforts toward an interpretation in their own ways to their own communities, of the messages found in the Bible. Only as Indians, Christian and non-Christian, interpret the life of Christ and his message in their oriental way, will an oriental India be able to profit thereby as it should. I wish that we might see more and more of the sort of work that is being done by this Hindu friend of mine, work which I believe will bring forth a better understanding on the part of all who dwell in Hindustan.

Suri, Bengal, Yours, etc.,
21st August. H. E. Dawey.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Congress Presidentship: On a careful scrutinising of the recommendations of the various Provincial Committees, it is stated that the Reception Committee of the forthcoming Indian National Congress which will be held at Cawnpore in December, has found that Mrs. Sarojini Naidu has obtained the highest number of votes. Even Mahatma Gandhi very strongly suggested her name for last year's presidentship, and the result of the recommendations, therefore, comes with no surprise. It will be the first time in the history of the Indian National Congress to have an Indian lady to preside over its annual deliberations. We congratulate both the Congress and Mrs. Naidu on this result which will be hailed throughout the country.

Is Journalism an Industry? In the course of an interesting article in the Review of Reviews Mr. Wickham Steed, its Editor who, as ex-Editor of the Times and for a long time one of its foreign correspondents, discusses the question whether the newspaper press can be classified as one of the industries. His observations, although they have very little to do with the conditions in this country, will give interesting reading. He writes:—A dispute arose recently between some printers' organisation and sundry newspaper proprietors. Its merits lie beyond the scope of the present argument. In referring to it, some of the newspaper proprietors in question spoke of themselves as conductors of an "industry." The term is more fully justified to-day than it has ever before been in the history of the Press. The large sums of capital, the huge plant, the complicated machinery and organisations that are needed to produce and to sell modern newspapers, overshadow in such a degree the profession of journalism that "the Press" may well be called an industry rather than a craft or a vocation. Nay, among newspaper men it is almost a disadvantage to be solely a journalist. It is said, probably with truth, of one large newspaper enterprise that its arrangements for distribution are so perfect that it could sell practically anything its proprietors might care to print. In these circumstances, mere journalists have to write what these proprietors (who are rarely journalists) and pride themselves on being "business men", wish to print—or to give place to others. One of the worst symptoms of the present disease of the Press is, indeed, the degradation of what is called its "editorial side and the glorification of the business side." But, again this is a symptom, not yet the disease itself.

An American Letter: Mr. Dan Singh of the Graduate School of Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois, U. S. A., has forwarded us a copy of a letter addressed by Mr. Boyd Tucker, a Missionary on furlough, having his address at Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill., U. S. A., to Mr. Stanley High, 150, Fifth Avenue, New York City, which contains an emphatic remonstrance against what he calls uncalled for criticisms made by the Rev. Fred Perrill in the Indian Witness of June 10th. We have been requested to publish this letter. It is stated in the letter that the main burden of Rev. Perrill's criticism of the International Parley held in Lincoln, Nebraska, which was in the charge of Rev. Stanley High, was directed against the writer's Mr. (Tucker's) friend, Mr. Dan Singh who, it is said, has been deeply wounded over the unjust criticism. Mr. Perrill is said to have criticised Mr. Singh being called a Hindu in spite of his being a Christian and for his being a personal friend of Mahatma Gandhi, a fact which has been taken advantage of for posing as a friend of greatness. Most educated persons even in this country know that the term Hindu applies to all Indians in America irrespective of caste or religion, and we are unable to think that the Rev. Perrill, whom we know as a staunch friend of the Prohibition movement in this country, would criticise in the way he is reported to have done. We do not, however, think it fair to publish the letter as requested, as we have not made any reference to Mr. Perrill's article in the Indian Witness of June 10th of which the letter under notice is a criticism. The best course for our correspondent and for Mr. Tucker would have been to address the criticism to the Editor of the Indian Witness who would have dealt with it properly. We simply call attention to this in this short notice, as we do not wish to ignore the communication addressed to us by our correspondent, and we hope he would appreciate our reasons for not giving publicity to the whole letter.

Purity Mission Society: In the course of a representation to His Excellency the Governor on behalf of the Purity Mission Society, which is a body of workers promoting the cause of Purity and Temperance reform among the masses, Mr. Jhabvala, after thanking His Excellency for his sympathy in the efforts of temperance reforms, writes:—"I need not emphasise upon your Excellency the dire painfulness of situation among the lower and middle classes of people arising from intemperance and free use of those pernicious intoxicating drinks which have been the ruin of thousands of homes. The poor man in India is averse to drinking. I assure your Excellency that even the much-maligned Bombay labourer hates drinking. Yet the poor man and the labourer are to-day addicted to this pernicious vice mainly because their domestic environments are unhappy and their social life corrupt. In the workers' localities there must be as few drinking houses as possible. But during my movements in the area, I have found that adjoining the factories there are in certain localities at Parel and De Lisle Road, Parabhadevi and Lower Parel chawls as well as at Chinchpokli and Dadar, four to five and even more taverns close to each other which are heavily visited especially on pay days. Pay days are some of the saddest days in the life time of a worker's family for the nights present one of the most melancholy pictures in the industrial history of this town. The Excise authorities should be compelled not to permit any further liquor shops either country or foreign to be opened in the working areas and the policy should be in practice to close down even those that are there. If your Excellency's instructions are enforced Bombay will be a much better place to live in and will remember your dear name for generations to come."

Widow Re-marriages in Karachi: The following widow remarriages have been arranged through the Sind Vidhwa Sahaik Sabha, Karachi, during the month of August 1925:—(1) Shrimati Premwati was married with Thakur Narainsing Drigh Road; (2) Shrimati Rajabeti was married with Mr. Hukumsingh, N. W. Railway, Karachi Cantonment; (3) Shrimati Moongabai, Gujarati lady was married with Mr. Rewagir, Ranchore Lines; and (4) Shrimati Parbati was married with Lala Lekhraj, Munim, Messrs. Dhanpatrai Bhagwandas.

Hyderabad Hindu Sabha on the Age of Consent: The following resolution has been passed by the Hindu Sabha, Hyderabad, Sind: "This Sabha wholeheartedly supports the bill, which Mr. Har Bilas Sharda, M. L. A., is going to introduce in the Legislative Assembly, fixing the minimum marriageble age for Hindu Boys and Girls at 14 and 12 years respectively. The Sabha is of opinion that the purpose of the Bill will be much better served by raising the respective minimum ages to 20 and 14 years. The Sabha hopes the Legislative Assembly will pass the measure unanimously, when before it."

The Great Betrayal: The Prince of India of Delhi writes: "None can congratulate the Indian Legislative Assembly on its latest performances. Even at the last Delhi sessions our legislators had begun their downward march by reducing themselves into illogical groups and working at cross purposes with one another. Now their defection is complete by their refusal to consider Mr. Joshi's Maternity Benefits Bill and by referring to a Select Committee the Contempt of Courts Bill which, as we pointed out in a previous issue, is a new menace to the Indian press. This failure on the part of the legislature ought to be an object lesson to those credulous individuals who fondly hope that this "parliament," of India will lead us to the promised land of self-government. We hope that the electors will exercise more discrimination at the next general elections and the practice will come to be established, of the popular representatives in the different legislative bodies gauging the public opinion and getting a clear mandate from their constituents, on all important measures, before they meet at each new sessions."

Race Course Betting: The Bombay Provincial Liberal conference held recently at Poona passed the following resolution: This Conference urges, especially in the interests of the poorer sections of the community, that (1) bookmakers in connection with horse racing in this presidency shall in no case be reallowed (2) the running of III class race special be discontinued; (3) the third enclosure on the race courses in Bombay and Poona should be closed, and (4) the minimum stake should be raised from Rs. 3 to. Rs. 10. Proposed by Mr. D. V. Ambekar (Poona) and seconded by Mr. H. G. Parkhe (Ahmednagar).

Women Franchise: Although the major provinces in India have extended franchise to women to vote at elections to provincial legislatures, women are not yet enfranchised as regards voting to the Central Legislatures. Replying to an interpellation in the Legislative Assembly last week, the Home Member said that the Government proposed to move both the Houses to give effect to the recommendations made by the Muddiman Report regarding the grant of franchise to females.

Madras Temperance League: Rao Bahadur T. A. Ramalinga Chettiar presided at the annual meeting of the Madras Temperance League held recently. Sir T. Sadasiva Iyer, Mr. Jinarajadass, Miss Brockaway, the Rev. J. E. Neill and Rao Bahadur O. Kandaswamy Chetty were among the principal speakers on the occasion. The report which was duly adopted referred to the various activities of the League during the past year and expressed a deep debt of gratitude to Rev. Herbert Anderson, who had been successful in influencing influential persons all over the country and arranging for a Conference to be held at Delhi in January next to form a Prohibition League for India. The report also appealed to the Minister for Excise to lay the foundation of prohibition by adopting a bold policy and thus enable the province to reach the goal at an early date.

Cochin Legislative Council on the State's Excise Policy: During the budget discussion in the Cochin Legislative Council the excise policy of the State was subjected to severe criticism and a motion for reducing the allotment for the distillery establishment by one rupee was carried despite Government opposition. Non-officials desired that the State should embark on a bold and definite policy of restricting consumption and working towards prohibition.

Local Option in Ceylon: The Hindu Organ of Jaffna (Ceylon) writes:—Local Option continues to make headway in various parts of the island, but its effects have been impeded by certain reservations and exceptions. Many temperance societies are carrying on an active educational propaganda throughout the Colony with a view to achieving further Local Option victories. Ceylon is undoubtedly in advance of India as regards temperance reform and there is a good prospect of the country becoming entirely "dry" at a comparatively early date.

A Dark Blot on British Administration: Mr. Myron O. Insko, the publisher of the Indian Witness, writes, in the course of his notes on the Sunday School Temperance lesson:—"It is a dark blot on British administration in India that it gives official sanction to the demoralizing traffic in liquor and opium. So long as the present policy continues the Mohamnedans and Hindus will continue to point the finger of scorn at the Government and they may well be pardoned if they refuse to believe that the Government have their best interests at heart. A Government that continues to be a partner in the business of selling liquor and opium cannot expect to gain the love and respect of the people who are being demoralized and debauched by drink and drugs. The Christian in India may well blush with shame when he reads of the efforts on the part of the Indians to bring about prohibition and how they are thwarted and laughed to scorn by some European representatives of Government. Certainly the time has come when the people of India should have the right to say whether or not they should continue to be burdened with a traffic that is preventing economic development, debauching millions of people and helping to sink into further degradation the people of this land."

NOTES

Anglo-Indians and Indian Nationalism: Anglo-Indians are specially referred to in Pandit Motilal Nehru's resolution, which was passed by the Assembly, as possessing special interests which should be represented in the Round Table Conference for preparing a detailed scheme of constitutional reform. While we are as desirous as anybody else that minority communities ought to have fairplay in any scheme of reform, we are by no means convinced that it does either such communities or others any good to be accorded a position of isolation from the general population. In Pandit Motilal's resolution, Hindus, Mahomedans, Parsis, Indian Christians, Jews, and Buddhists are all grouped together under the term "Indians", while Anglo-Indians with Europeans are mentioned as being outsiders. Europeans, of course, are outsiders, but are Anglo-Indians in the same category? We rather regret this implication as it lends colour to the extravagant claims put forward in the memorandum presented by the Anglo-Indian community to the Secretary of State. We know that a section of the community was opposed to the idea of this deputation, and, therefore, we do not regard the views expressed in the memorandum as those of the whole community. Anglo-Indians, according to the memorandum, want to be treated as Europeans for certain purposes and as Indians for certain other purposes, according as it suits their interests or sentiments. They ask to be allowed to enter all ranks of the British Army, "a communal preference" for employment on railways, and as "statutory natives of India" to enter into all schemes of Indianisation. Evidently, Anglo-Indians do not care to enter the Indian Army as Indians, and presumably they would not approve of Indians entering the British Army on the same footing as themselves. As for railways, the convenience of the travelling public should be the first consideration in the selection of employees, and it is unfortunately the case that the average Anglo-Indian employed on railways has not earned a reputation for sympathetic and kindly dealing with Indian passengers. Anglo-Indians as statutory natives of India are, of course, entitled to all the rights of Indians, but they cannot claim preference over the latter. We strongly support the demand that offensive inquiries into the legitimacy of descent should be avoided, but we cannot understand how Anglo-Indians who are statutory natives of India can claim to be tried by juries composed of a majority of members of their community, while a Mahomedan, Hindu or Parsi cannot do so.

Repeal of Repressive Laws: It is not at all a matter for surprise that the Council of State has thrown out by large majorities Mr. Ramdas's motion for consideration of the Bill to repeal certain repressive laws as passed by the Assembly last March, as well as the one to refer it to a Select Committee. From the very first, the Council of State has acted as a drag upon all useful legislation initiated by the popular and representative House, and Government have found in it a pliant tool with which to thwart the attempts of the Assembly. Mr. V. Ramdas, the Swarajist member from Madras, who piloted the Bill, in a vigorous speech appealed to the House to record its verdict also against these archaic, antediluvian and unjudicial measures which disgrace and disfigure the Statute Book. As early as 1921, the Right Hon. V. S. Sastri initiated a debate in the Council of State for a committee on repressive laws. The Sapru Committee which was appointed as a result recommended the repeal of four enactments with the exclusion of the Seditious Meetings Act. The Government, which accepted the report, took no steps, however, to give effect to its recommendations and the result was that Mr. Patel brought forward a Bill last March in the Legislative Assembly which passed it by an overwhelming majority in the teeth of Government opposition. The strong denunciation which has gone forth from one end of the country to the other against the Bengal Ordinance under the cloak of which political agitation has been stifled and political undesirables have been clapped into jail without even the formality of a trial, should alone serve as a warning against the retention of such laws even a minute longer. Mr. Crerar, the Home Secretary, who spoke on behalf of the Government pleaded for their retention as a necessity for a strong, good and efficient Government and incidentally raised the bogey of an insidious Bolshevik propaganda from China and Germany. The ordinary law is certainly more than sufficient to deal with crimes in the land, and the assumption of extraordinary powers by the executive except in grave emergencies such as war, is both unjustified and unjustifiable. This reprehensible action of the Council of State, coming as it does on the eve of the new elections, is sure to have a re-action on the electorate which, we hope, will take care to send the right sort of men to the Council.

Japanese Law Reforms: Speaking at a welcome banquet in New York, His Excellency Tsuneo Matsudaira announced two important legal reforms which had been recently passed. "Formerly," he said, "a Japanese born in this country, while acquiring American nationality by reason of birth, acquired Japanese nationality at the same time. This having been criticized in America, we saw the need of a remedy. By the new legislation a Japanese child born in this country shall not acquire Japanese nationality unless, within fourteen days after its birth, a special application is made for retention of Japanese nationality. In regard to the foreign ownership of land in Japan, a new law passed both Houses of the Diet last March recognizing the ownership of land by foreigners. The restrictions hitherto imposed on the sale or mortgaging of land in Japan are entirely abolished. It is true that there is a provision in this law whereby the Government may issue an ordinance putting into effect reciprocal measures in the case of citizens or corporation of a foreign country or part of a foreign country which denies or restricts the ownership of land by Japanese. It is the intention of our Government at present not to issue such an ordinance."

International Fellowship: It will be seen from the announcement published in our news columns today that it is proposed to hold an all-India International Fellowship Conference in Poona during the first week of October. It is some years since a small group of persons representing different races and religions interested in promoting international fellowship formed an Association in this City. Similar associations were formed in other cities as well, and the one at Madras has recently circulated among the members of the Fellowship a brief report of the studies and discussions conducted by a group of not more than a dozen members belonging to the Madras International Fellowship. The report will form the subject of discussion at the general meetings of the Bombay International Fellowship which will be held in the Wilson College Hall on Saturdays the 12th and 19th September. The report is headed "Conviction and tolerance in religion", and contains many valuable hints. Among the factors that have contributed to the present awakening in men and women of a new interest in the question are mentioned a growing sense of the need of unity and co-operation in all countries, more personal acquaintance and friendliness between followers of different religions, a fuller realisation of the limitations of our intellectual powers in questions relating to God, a deeper appreciation of the difference between religion and theology and a clearer understanding that religion is a spiritual matter where there is no room for force of any kind.

Religious Tolerance: As a result of the comparative study of Islam, Christianity and Hinduism, the Madras International Fellowship which conducted these studies, has come to the conclusion that none of the various religions, in its sacred books,—the Vedas, the Koran and the New Testament—and in the known records of its earliest followers gives any encouragement to intolerance or hostility towards outsiders. In spite of occasional outbursts of intolerance, it is plain that where people belonging to different religions have been living side by side as in this country, they have often learnt the lesson of toleration as they could not help feeling that in the midst of differences they had so much in common. We are glad to find that our conclusion which led to some controversies recently that persecution never kills a religion, has found support from such a body as the Madras International Fellowship. "In the light of all religious history", they observe, "it is plain that persecution never destroys or weakens a religion." It is clear from the references made in the report to the discussions of the Unity Conference held at Delhi that the Madras International Fellowship has taken full advantage of the discussions of the Unity Conference, and has naturally appreciated the significance of its failure to bring about that Unity which is still on the lips of every politician.

Nationalism and Internationalism: It may be questioned that, if national unity, in other words, national fellowship, still remains to be accomplished, is it not more difficult to bring about international fellowship? None of the promoters of the movement has underrated the difficulties of the task before them which is to seek the unity underlying the diversity of the phenomenal world. We have little faith in what is called political unity, that is, a temporary adjustment for some political purpose. It is not national unity and will not promote national fellowship, the feeling which rises above all considerations of caste or religion. The failure of the Delhi Unity Conference may be attributed more or less to the same circumstances that contributed to the failure of the League of Nations in bringing about international peace and unity. Nationalism is certainly not inconsistent with internationalism; the former is an essential preliminary to the latter. As observed on a previous occasion, true and complete international fellowship presupposes that the nations of the world should be so organised that none of them stands in a relation of political inferiority, economic subjection, or social, racial or religious antipathy towards another. Whether this is a distant dream or a possibility in the near future depends to a large extent on the support which movements like the International Fellowship are able to enlist from the nations. That the best minds in different parts of the world are engaged in giving their serious thought to this idea, is itself a hopeful sign.

The Shri Sadhbella Tirath, Sukkur: We have received a copy of the book which gives the history of the magnificent island temple of Shri Sadhbella at Sukkur and a biographical sketch of its revered founder and his successors. The book is only a close rendering in English of the pamphlets in Hindi and Sindhi published by Shri Swami Harnamdas, the present incumbent of the gadi, with a view to enlighten the large number of devotees who have a love and regard for the holy place, as well as to remove the many misunderstandings and misconceptions regarding the history of the place. Situated on the top of a rock and washed on all sides by the waters of the Indus, the temple possesses a picturesqueness and beauty rarely to be found anywhere else. On holy and festive occasions the place is visited by pilgrims from all parts of India. The Sadhbella (retreat for sadhus or Hindu monks), as its very name implies, is an orthodox institution and is opposed to all changes in the society. The opposition to the Patel Hindu Marriage Bill introduced in the Imperial Legislative Council in 1919 is claimed as a credit on the part of the present Mahant. We are glad to note, however, that the Sadhbella has been doing much philanthropic work in aid of the poor, the learned and the religious. The book is printed on fine glazed paper and contains many beautiful illustrations. It is priced Rs. 1-4-0 and can be had of the Mahant, Shri Sadhbella Tirath, Sukkur, Sind.

Vidyasagar's Daughters: In accordance with a resolution passed at the meeting of the Managing Council of the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association, the Secretary of the Association has sent us Rs. 25 towards the Fund started by us for the help of the late Pandit Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar's daughters. We have also received Rs. 10 from Dr. M. B. Udgaonkar M.B.B.S., Khondaji Building, Poibavdi, Parel, and Re. 1 from Mr. B. V. Dhadaphade whose address is given as care of Dr. Udgaonkar. The balance now in hand amouuts to Rs. 229-6-0.

Our Prohibition Supplement: As there appears to be some misunderstanding as regards our notice in the last week's Prohibition Supplement asking subscribers of the Supplement to remit their subscriptions, we desire to repeat what we have stated in the first issue of the Supplement, that the subscribers of the Reformer will get the Supplement without any extra payment. The notice was intended only to the subscribers of the Supplement who are not subscribers of the Reformer.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1925.

A MOMENTOUS DEBATE.

On Monday Sir Alexander Muddiman, the Home Member of the Government of India, brought forward a motion in the Legislative Assembly, now in session at Simla, for the acceptance of the principle underlying the majority report of the Committee, of which he was Chairman, which was appointed to examine and report on the working of the constitutional reforms introduced five years ago. The principle was that by means of a few adjustments here and a few re-adaptations there, the ship can be made tolerably safe for its crew and passengers for the next five years when it is due to go into dock to be completely overhauled. The majority, it should be mentioned, included one prominent member, Sir Mahomed Shafi, who, since his relinquishment of the membership of the Government of India shortly after the report was made, made public his opinion accepting in principle the minority report. This report which thus virtually became the majority report—the division being 5 to 4—held that the defects in the Reform scheme were fundamental to it and cannot be cured by anything short of fresh legislation expressly providing against the shortcomings disclosed in its working. Ministers and ex-Ministers who administered the Transferred Departments in the Provinces under the diarchical scheme of the Reform Act, testified before the Committee that they had found it unworkable, the only Provinces where it had worked with some measure of success being those in which the element of diarchy was discarded in practice and the administration operated as if it were a unitary system. Several of the Provincial Governors endorsed this view. Lord Olivier who was Secretary of State for India in Mr. Ramsay Macdonald's Cabinet, moving for a statement of Indian policy in the House of Lords a few weeks ago, associated himself, from his practical experience at the India Office, with the main contentions of the minority report. Lord Birkenhead in the course of his statement declared that he himself had from the first been sceptical of the workable character of diarchy, but he rather inconsequentially contended that the scheme has had no fair field owing to the Non-Co-operation movement, and should be given a further trial before the question of its revision could be considered. If a boat is found to have a hole in its bottom, the fact of the weather having been stormy when it was launched, cannot be urged as an argument for trying it on a voyage in still water before the hole is stopped. Yet this was precisely the position which Lord Birkenhead took in respect of the demand of the minority report, which is supported by all schools of Indian politics, for the adoption of measures to get the Reform Act revised in the light of the experience of its working gained during the last five years.

The amendment to the Home Member's motion, which Pandit Motilal Nehru, the leader of the Swaraj Party in the Legislative Assembly, brought forward on behalf of his own as well as the Independent and Liberal parties in the Assembly, was based on the principle of the minority report. It ran as follows:—

This Assembly while confirming and reiterating the demand contained in the resolution passed by it on 18th February 1924, recommends to the Governor-General-in-Council that he be pleased to take immediate steps to move His Majesty's Government to make a declaration in Parliament embodying the following fundamental changes in the present constitutional machinery and administration of India:

(a) The revenues of India and all property vested in or arising or accruing from property or rights vested in His Majesty under the Government of India Act, 1858, or the present Act or received by the Secretary of State-in-Council under any of the said Acts shall hereafter vest in the Governor-General-in-Council for purposes of the Government of India.

(b) The Governor-General-in-Council shall be responsible to the Indian Legislature, and subject to such responsibility, shall have power to control the expenditure of the revenues of India and make such grants and appropriations of any part of those revenues or of any other property as is at present under the control or disposal of the Secretary of State for India-in-Council save and except the following which shall, for a fixed term of years, remain under the control of the Secretary of State for India: (1) Expenditure of military services up to a fixed limit, (2) expenditure classed as political and foreign, (3) payment of all debts and liabilities hitherto lawfully contracted and incurred by the Secretary of State for India-in-Council on account of the Government of India.

(c) The Council of the Secretary of State for India shall be abolished and the position and functions of the Secretary of State for India shall be assimilated to those of the Secretary of State for self-governing Dominions save as otherwise provided in clause (b).

(d) The Indian Army shall be nationalised, within a reasonably short and definite period of time and Indians shall be admitted for service in all arms of defence and for that purpose the Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief shall be assisted by a Minister responsible to the Assembly.

(e) The Central and Provincial Legislatures shall consist entirely of members elected by constituencies formed on as wide a franchise as possible.

(f) The principle of responsibility to the Legislature shall be introduced in all the branches of the administration of the Central Government subject to transitional reservation and residuary powers in the Governor-General in respect of the control of military, foreign and political affairs of a fixed term of years provided that, during the said fixed term, proposals of the Governor-General-in-Council are submitted to the vote of the Legislature, but that Governor-General-in-Council shall have power notwithstanding the vote of the Assembly to appropriate up to a fixed maximum any sum he may consider necessary for such expenditure and in the event of a war to authorise such expenditure as may be considered necessary exceeding the maximum fixed.

(g) The present system of dyarchy in the Provinces shall be abolished and replaced by a unitary and autonomous responsible Government, subject to the general control and residuary powers of the Central Government in interprovincial and all Indian matters.

(b) The Indian Legislature shall after the expiry of the fixed term of years referred to in clauses (b) and (f) have full powers to make such amendments in the constitution of India from time to time as may appear to it necessary or desirable.

This Assembly further recommends to the Governor-General-in-Council that necessary steps be taken

(a) to constitute in consultation with the Legislative Assembly a convention, a round table conference or other suitable agency adequately representative of all Indian, European and Anglo-Indian interests to frame, with due regard to the interests of minorities, a detailed scheme based on the above principles after making such enquiry as may be necessary in this behalf,

(b) to place the said scheme for approval before the Legislative Assembly and submit the same to the British Parliament to be embodied in the statute.

The amendment asked for an immediate declaration by His Majesty's Government in Parliament comprising the points mentioned in it. The sum and substance of it is that the way of India to self-government should be opened by removing the barriers to it, the chief of which is the Secretary of State with his Council in London. So long as this Minister continues to be what he is, the Government of India will not be free to become responsive to the wishes and interests of the Indian people. The India Office, almost ever since it was founded, has been an incubus impeding the free functioning of the Government in India in sympathetic contact with its surroundings. Therefore, Indian opinion is united in asking that the India Council should be abolished and that the Secretary of State for India should be placed upon the same footing as the Secretary of State for the self-governing Dominions. The Dominions since 1911 have been pressing for the right of their Prime Ministers to communicate direct with the British Prime Minister. This has been objected to only on the ground that it would throw too much work upon the British Premier, and a compromise has been recently adopted by appointing a separate department for the Dominions under the Secretary of State for the Colonies. In view of the reservations of certain subjects which will be necessary for a time, a separate Secretary of State for India cannot be immediately dispensed with, but when these subjects are taken over, there will be no room for this functionary. The reservations are the Army, foreign and political affairs. All these are closely related to one another and must remain under the same control. The suggestion that a Minister should be the political head of the Military Department is essential to the steady prosecution of the policy of the Indianization of the Army without undue delay. In the provinces, diarchy must be abolished and a unitary autonomous Government should prevail subject to the general control and residuary powers of the Central Government in all inter-provincial and all-India matters. We have always insisted on the importance of a strong Central Government as the principal force to counteract the fissiparous tendencies of Indian history, and we are glad that Pandit Motilal's amendment amply provides for it. In any case, the Central Government must be a growth from below, and not as it is at present a dead-weight upon provincial administrations. The amendment wisely refrains from going into too many details. The two last clauses provide the machinery for drawing up a suitable scheme in consultation with all interests. The right of the British Parliament as the ultimate authority to sanction the scheme, is accepted. We think that it will be the opinion of impartial and disinterested persons that the Indian demand, as voiced in Pandit Motilal's amendment, is sound, reasonable and in strict accord with constitutional principles. The amendment was supported in weighty speeches by Sir Sivaswami Iyer, the Liberal leader, Mr. Jinnah, the leader of the Independents and President of the Moslem League, Sir Purshottamdas Thakurdas on behalf of the Indian commercial community, Mr. N. M. Joshi on behalf of Indian Labour, Dr. S. K. Datta on behalf of Indian Christians, and by a number of other members representing all communities. Only the European representatives stood aloof from this general consensus in favour of the amendment. We deeply regret their abstention because it is calculated to emphasise the line of racial cleavage as being also that of political cleavage. Pandit Motilal Nehru and other Swarajist speakers suggested that if Government reject the present offer, there may be no other alternative for them but resort to civil disobedience. We hardly agree with them there. We have only to re-produce among the educated classes and in the country on a larger scale the solidarity which so happily marked the proceedings in the Council, for the bureaucratic forces to capitulate at discretion.

HAS SOCIAL REFORM PROGRESSED?*

(By Mr. G. K. Devadhar.)

I must attempt an answer to a question which is often asked—Do the Social Conferences serve a useful purpose?—and our answer to that is that Reform is an inevitable factor of human progress and evolution. To remove "the peccant part" in the ever-working machinery of human society has been the task that has brought forth greatest thinkers, religions founders and nation-builders. It is a pressing need of every age and country; to ignore its claims is as good as to sign a death warrant. Nations and Societies striving for progress and prosperity have manfully faced the changes dictated by the spirit of the age and effected necessary reforms. These have survived; but decay, destruction and death have been the inevitable fate of those nations that have fought shy of them. Change is the sign of life and vitality and to prepare the people to submit willingly and intelligently to the dictation of this law is the aim of holding these Conferences. I know there are many who would be inclined to doubt the truth of this proposition, and I would ask them to look back upon the last thirty-five or forty years. They would be amazed like Rip Van Winkle at the vast strides made by the Society in almost each and every direction. According to some, it is the time spirit that is operating and not the spirit of the Age; but a moment's reflection will make it clear that the time spirit is not the cause, but it is the effect; where advocacy of the cause of Social Reform has been very dull and feeble, the time spirit has not stirred up the hearts of people to move rapidly. For an honest search after truth in this direction the changes are so very apparent and obvious that to catalogue them would be quite unnecessary.

I would, however, mention a few broad features of the changes for the thoughtful meditation of those who are inclined to cherish an honest doubt. I remember days when I was scolded and given a bath for touching a cowboy or rebuked for asking in a big town in Upper India, an inconvenient and horrifying question whether there was a school for girls. It was in Poona itself that caricatures of educated girls were staged and elderly women going to school to teach were laughed at while passing on public streets. From my personal experience I can say boys were married at the age of 13 to girls of 7, poor widows were subjected to involuntary tonsure in high circles and widows of poor parents supplied cheap cooks to the families of the rich; marriage of a widow was a novelty and widows who had married again were an object of popular ridicule and studied aversion. They were out-castes. I need not speak here of the storm in a tea-cup dividing the educated Brahmin community into two warring factions. Foreign travel was yet a subject for heated controversies. Rights of women, abolition of caste or the caste rigour or removal of untouchability, inter-caste marriages, monogamous marriages or divorce, were questions which one could hardly dare talk of publicly. Speeches by Social Reformers were looked down upon as freaks of mad men or jargon of idle dreamers or wreckers of society or breakers of religion. But to-day after the lapse of forty years in my own life-time and life's experiences I see a mighty change. In Poona where the Social Reformer was a butt of ridicule and an object to be shunned and where orthodoxy looked upon him as a heretic, he is today not only tolerated but is respectfully treated and heard and even honoured occasionally. There are hundreds of girls who remain unmarried after puberty even in orthodox families; they in almost all cases are being educated; hundreds of even grown-up women attend the Seva Sadan classes regularly from four to five hours a day while looking after their domestic work; one of the commonest complaints against the Seva Sadan is that it has made poor widows rare for the avocation as cooks and even those few that still have to work in that capacity insist upon the condition that they must be free to attend the educational or industrial classes from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. Boys refuse to marry uneducated girls without any accomplishments. Several College students who were married young and had uneducated wives send them to the Seva Sadan while they read at their School and College. Women have begun to fight for fuller opportunities and greater rights; a child widow is becoming a rare object of commiseration and the next generation probably will not see any young tonsured widow at least in Poona even in orthodox circles. Girls have begun to refuse being given in marriage to old men; even poor orthodox parents have begun to deem it a duty to borrow money to send their bright youths to foreign countries for their education; late marriages are becoming very common. Caste is losing its right and rigour; untouchables are today being befriended; even in the Seva Sadan there are today three women belonging to the untouchable classes and a fourth will join soon undergoing regular education making friends with high class girls.

I have no power to draw a brighter picture which the change highly deserves. But in the words of Shakespeare, I would ask the honest critic to look at this picture and that. Has the time spirit worked out these results or whether they were the achievements of men and a few women who laboured hard, faced the music of unpopularity and fought the battles valiantly, though to posterity they were generally unknown being "unwept, unhonoured and unsung?" These were the great benefactors of our nation. Honour be to them all.

What is true of Maharashtra must be or in many respects is true of Gujerat and other parts of the Presidency; but the smaller towns and the villages have slowly begun to feel the impact but very feebly, but even there the leaven is working and the Social Reformer is at large. Our effort has, therefore, now to be directed towards attacking the citadels of orthodoxy there as the forces of conservation are more powerful yet; and so long as the smaller towns and villages are not brought in line with bigger towns the car of reform will not march on smoothly and steadfastly. Village, which is the cradle of the nation, must be the centre of our attacks and affections. That alone will help the making of modern democracy.

Another and more potent feature of the Reformers' activity is the most welcome awakening and growth of self-consciousness and the spirit of self-assertion among the women folk of the advanced classes and the masses belonging to the backward communities. They demand equal opportunities and equal rights and privileges. These must be joyfully greeted as the natural outbursts of fresh awakening demanding justice and even special treatment. Social Reformers who are accustomed to look around and ahead are delighted at this sight and extend a hand of fellowship and friendship. They recognize that in the age of readjustment such claims reveal deeper seekings after betterment. These when realized will bring home to the aspirants the proper sense of duties, responsibilities, and moral obligations which make the souls restless and spur them to higher achievements and nobler services. This is both the weakness and the strength of democracy. It is reserved for the Social Reformer to turn these outbarsts which sometimes assume the form of communal wrangles to advantage and marshal these forces to all-round and all-pervading advancement of the community at large.

While speaking about the ramifications of the social and political animosities a writer on democracy in relation to India observes that they underlie larger problems and constitute some of the most formidable questions which confront the shrewdest statesmen with issues which convulse India over untouchability and caste which tend to create a large proportion of friction and absence of confidence and make the smooth working of the Government of India so difficult today. He further observes as follows :—

"There are people who seem to be overwhelmed by the strength and apparent universality of these bad feelings. I am not one of them. In my judgment they are the normal and inevitable accompaniment of an age of readjustment and will pass away, without irremediable disaster to anybody, if we keep our heads and our sense of humour, and have the self-control to resist the appeal to hatred or pride, violence or intolerance, to which they are always trying to allure us".

One marvels at the readiness of the people, that opposed out of sheer sentiment legislative interference with social usuages, to accept such enactments as a result of popular initiative in legislative directions. The Reformers while emphasizing the need of enlightened public opinion and their responsibility in regard to its creation always believed that there comes a stage in the solution of a social problem when legislative enactment either by State or the representatives of the people affords the greatest possible relief. Similarly the change in the angle of vision on the part of the orthodox politicians in regard to the need and importance of Social Reform to the all-round progress and steady advancement of the people is remarkable and calls for serious reflection. In fact, in political circles Social Reform has now come to be believed as a handmaid of political advancement so much so that some of the politicians now believe that politics divorced from Social Reform activity is barren and will be unproductive of abiding results. Like true reformers they have not yet realized that reform is the pivot of all progess and it must be achieved for its own sake and not with any ulterior motive.

"Social Reform is to be judged on its own merits and achieved for its own sake; like Swaraj, progress is the brith-right of every individual and anything that is imposed on him or her by customs and prescription and impedes the progress of the individual must be done away with. To ensure the solidarity of the nation all man-made restrictions are not necessarily helpful. Traditions and customs have their limited usage, but if they hinder the individual's onward march, they must be cast away.

The strength of the Social Reform movement and its outstanding merits lie in the fact that reformers make a clear distinction between true religion and the religion of the cooking pot or of the angle of 90° or 180° or a religion which is encrusted with wrong faith and superstitious beliefs or wrongful and unjust customs. He rightly says that these have very little connection with the true religion or his soul and thus a social reformer who naturally revolts against a social wrong or unjust practice or encroachment is not deemed to have raised a standard of revolt against true religion or his God. Some of our best religious preachers and saints venerated for centuries have been the greatest social reformers of their days and have suffered persecution for their zeal for social reform or their efforts at liberalizing the basis of the religion or broadening the outlook of the people. Social Reform in India, therefore, had its great heritage in the work of the saints, who worked for the uplift of the mankind.

SONNETS AND OTHER POEMS.*

Mr. S. M. Michael, the author of this small collection of sonnets, love lyrics and other poems, needs no introduction to our readers. Some of the poems published in our columns some time back in 1924 had already marked him out as a writer with the real poetic instinct in him. Even as a College student the author had won distinction as a composer of poems. As Prof. Seshadri, the eminent Professor from South India in the Benares Hindu University, remarks in the Foreword, Mr. Michael possesses all the essentials of verse-composition—a fine imagination, poetic inspiration and a fine mastery of English expression in verse which has been admired by one and all, Europeans and Indians alike. Mr. Michael could not have thought of a better subject for utilising his poetic talents than the eternal theme of love, the "perennial theme for poetic inspiration". He is at his best when he describes woman thus :

What Sphinx so strange was ever met ?
That speaks and laughs and yet is most secret ?
So simple, yet so subtle, like some stream,
Limpid though deep ? Little as thou dost seem,
Immeasurably great, yea, infinite,
So real to the sight, yet exquisite,
Intangible essence ineffable.

That he possesses a poetic imagery that can compare with the best in English poetry is well illustrated by the accompanying lines where he addresses Europe in a tone of despair :

Thy glory vanished now, thy splendour fled,
Thy loveliness all gone, thou all but dead,
O hapless Europe, how I see thee bleed,
Unhappy mother, by thy very breed !...
But now thy sun hath set in blood and tears.
Thou yet may last for millions of years,
But nevermore, aye, nevermore the same
To us who now have seen thy naked shame.
Long though thou live thy loveliness is fled,
Thy power broken and thy honour dead.

The "tragedies of Indian life today" resulting from such social evils as the dowry curse and child-marriage also receive adequate attention at the author's hands. We read the story of Snehalata, the Brahmin girl, sacrificing herself in order to rid her parents from the necessity of finding dowry for her husband according to relentless and cruel custom, with a pathos that is almost indescribable. Says she in reply to her weeping parents :

I've chosen Death my love. A lord I wed,
Agni, for nothing : soon I shall be dead
And save your home from its worst enemy—
Nor fire, nor flood, nor robbers but—from me ;
Nor now for me your home you need to sell
To pay my dowry as I heard you tell.

Equally pathetic is the lot of the child-wife ;

Thus passed her nights and days
In silent weeping, secret sighs and sobs
Until the dreaded day, the day of doom,
Her wedding day. And all that day she wept
And all the night ; nor was her "husband" fit
To soothe a bleeding girlish heart of ten,
For he was old, ill-favoured and morose.

Mr. Michael really deserves to be congratulated on his poetic gifts and we can confidently predict a great future for him in the realm of poetry which is open to only a few of us.

CALCUTTA LETTER.

(From our own Correspondent).

Mahatmaji has left Bengal after a stay of four months. He was fortunately present here during the critical period following the death of Deshbandhu C. R. Das and helped his utmost in furthering the cause of the Swaraj Party. His presence here was taken advantage of by every institution or association—not excepting the European and the Anglo-Indian associations—and Mahatmaji delivered several lectures, some concerning his constructive programme, some touching social reform and some concerning politics. All throughout, his never-failing smile and courtesy won him devoted audiences, Indian and European. The citizens of Bengal are grateful to him for what he has done here in her hour of need. His presence was very helpful in speeding up collections to the Deshbandhu Memorial fund and his numerous lectures on its behalf supplemented by the assiduous efforts of the 'wizard' collector, Mr. Manilal Kothari have brought the total so far to Rs. 7,76,846-14-11.

A crusade is being conducted through the columns of the Statesman against the squalor and dirt of Howrah. A distinguished visitor is reported to have remarked that the presence of the Hooghly is justifiable even if only for the mere fact that it served to separate Howrah from Calcutta. Any casual visitor can observe in Howrah the several dirty streets with open drains, lots of filthy liquid oozing out from the several go-downs, a peculiar sticky smell pervading the whole atmosphere, 'the primitive method of disposal of night-soil' and the several 'slowly moving streams of indescribable filth running through the chief residential centres. In fact it is not possible to exaggerate the wretchedness of Howrah. It is confidently expected of the present Chairman of the Municipality to take active step for ameliorating the present conditions. It is likely that the question of an Improvement Trust may possibly be reopened now.

The fresh elections to the Council of State will be keenly contested by the Swarajist candidates here. The Council of State has always been dubbed as wiser 'Counsel' by Government and Anglo-Indian dailies whenever they have succumbed to the wishes of Government in the teeth of public opposition. This sort of playing 'jo hukum' to Government benches will go far against the success of the old candidates when they seek re-election. Whatever they may do, the Swarajists have been doing things with the people's interest in their hearts and it is expected that their candidates will have a good chance this time.

CAN ASTROLOGY BE A SCIENCE ?

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Instead of prolonging this controversy with an abstract discussion about astrology, I think your columns would be better used if I were to give some hints as to how to test the truth of and how to study astrology for those who have a little spare time and the wish to do it. Then I would also help by private correspondence (or personal talks if in Bombay) anybody who wishes to study it. And as Dr. Kirloskar (who happens to be my class fellow) has put forth its medical or physical side and as I too have studied it from this point of view, I request the medical profession especially to interest themselves in it if they can spare a little time for side study. But to-day I am sorry I shall have to reply Mr. Karkare's letters which you have printed without any use of the 'blue pencil.' Really speaking, a person who cannot understand why I referred to radium in my last letter, and who asks whether a Brahmin girl should be married to a butcher or a scoundrel on the merit of his horoscope, because I said in my second letter that even caste barriers will have to be broken to satisfy the requirements of astrology, such a person should not dabble in scientific discussions, much less try to find out why honest people are spending their time in a search for truth. No research in any line was made until scores of highly intellectual persons apparently wasted the best part of their lives seeking a truth which they very indistinctly felt to exist. Fortunately astrology to-day is not in the early stages of evolution. But as Mr. Karkare's letters are likely to create some misunderstandings about its real nature, I shall again try to explain how it can be studied as a physical science, leaving the occult phenomena to their own field.

Firstly, the modern scientific researcher in any and every branch believes that there is some order in this universe, whether he believes in God or not. Even the atheist scientist believes that there are some fixed laws governing everything in this world, whether material or spiritual (or psychological as he calls it.) A scientific mind will not say that the 10% astrological predictions come true by chance, even if 90% were falsified. He will rather spend all his time in trying to find out why the 10% predictions come true and how to increase this proportion. From the beginning of my astrological study I have adopted this method of collecting together only the definite laws of astrology, and that is why I call it research. In this way, my predictions came true in continuously

increasing proportion, and when my predictions were not true, I did not leave those aside but tried to find out my mistakes, and I found that I was wrong only because I had not considered the other alternatives, or had not considered the point from all points of view. This is how I learnt to consider a horoscope from the different points of the विंशोत्तरी दशा, the yearly horoscope (both Indian and Western) and the transits. But you have to learn each point one by one and make predictions for gaining experience and understanding the real bearing of astrology in our physical and social life. There are many old and modern books to guide the new student, but he has ultimately to depend on his own experience, as is the case in all professions. The rules given by authors like Varahamihira are not to be taken as gospel truth. I came across many contradictory rules on some points in Parashari and Brihatjataka, both standard works. But I am not prepared to blame them or call astrology a false science because there are differences of opinion or different systems of working out a horoscope. I am thankful to all for being of some help to me. Mr. Karkare has quoted a statement of Raphael's and he thinks that he has knocked down the point and with it the whole of astrology by his experience of 3 pairs of twins. Obviously the wording of Raphael is too comprehensive, but anybody who has read anything of astrology will understand the basis of his statement. He does not refer to twins only but to any number of persons born about the same time and in the same town. I will go a step further and say that the effects of a bad transit can be seen in all persons having the same ascendant or the same degree of Sun or Moon, even if they are born at different places and at different times. Saturn passing at present through the 7th Sign of Zodiac did not affect the late Mr. C. R. Das only, but millions of other persons with the same degree not only of the Sun but also of the Moon, or the ascendant or the meridian or its opposite degree in all these four cases. Of course, the results will vary widely according to the differences in other respects. The transits of Saturn over the Moon, Sun, and ascendant of Mahatma Gandhi did not kill him. Anybody who understands a bit of astrology knows that Saturn makes a complete circuit of the Zodiac in about 29 or 30 years and thus will make all sorts of good and bad combinations every 30 years, but the effects will vary according to the other combinations. If Mr. Karkare has not grasped the basic principles by his study of the Western books of astrology, he should leave the subject aside and better not show his ignorance to the public. He should remember that to criticise astrology or any subject, one has to know it from more points of view than those studied by the ordinary professional men in the subject.

It is needless for me to take more space in order to criticise every irrelevent assertion of Mr. Karkare from his four long letters. But I shall refer to two more important points which he has raised. Mr. Karkare asserts with much force (of his knowledge?) that 'differentiating element of one man from the other is within him and his parentage and heredity and certainly not in the sky.' Now, parentage and heredity which are the same thing, do not explain why one man differs from another, though they apparently explain why a few children resemble their parents or grandparents in some respects. The addition of 'divine heritage,' a very vague thing also, does not help in the least, and saying that the differentiating element is within him makes us no wiser. It is only astrology which explains the resemblances from heredity as well as the differences between different men, and like 'transits,' the resemblances between horoscopes of different members of a family can be put forth as a proof of astrological influences. Thus it will be seen that Mr. Karkare's assertion 'certainly not in the sky' is without any ground. One may admire his bravery (to give it a good name) in making such groundless assertions, but they do not make any case against astrology in a scientific discussion. And calling names to astrology such as ugly superstition, or rank fatalism, without being able to understand its basic principles, speaks bad for his intellectual capacities.

I have said in my former letters that astrology is one of the sciences, and it is a mistake to suppose that everything could be predicted from the horoscope alone. If astrology had stood for fatalism, there would have been no attempt to avoid or minimise the bad effects of stars either by medicines or psychic power. No Mahant is needed to tell us that Divine Will is above influences of stars. I have already referred to 'fasting and prayer' in this connection as well as to the daily 'religious' observances of Hinduism based on astrology. The reason why this idea of astrology being fatalism got currency is that a large proportion of the predictions come true, even though the intensity of the bad effect may be reduced by proper means. It is a common experience of many that especially the bad predictions are rarely falsified while the good ones are correct in a much smaller degree. The reason is that for the bad effects to show themselves no positive effort is needed on the part of the individual, while for the good one to happen, positive effort is needed. When the stars are bad and your vitality depressed, your daily food and work become too much for you and you get ill. When the stars are good, you cannot get stronger unless you take more exercise and proper food. Astrology does not deny the laws of chemistry, biology, etc., while students of these sciences alone deny astrology, just as the frogs in a well consider the well to be the whole world. You can live without studying astrology as you can do without learning chemistry. But the laws of the one will affect you just as those of the other, because 'ignorance of law is no excuse.'

I hope this will suffice to convince any open-minded person that astrology is not a fad or a hallucination, but a subject worthy of study from the modern scientific point of view, by those who have some time for such study. As I said in my first letter, it has important bearing on philosophy and medicine, and I propose to discuss the latter point in my next.

BIRTH CONTROL. I

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I am not surprised at your correspondent agreeing with Mahatma Gandhi in considering Birth Control an evil. Every body has not the necessary equipment to be able to think for himself, and great men like the Mahatma will always find people to agree with them in whatever they say. But when he states his agreement with Mahatma Gandhi as an argument, it will hardly do. The whole letter consists of assertions that it is an evil and melancholy predictions as to the probable evil effects. He quotes Hubert Stringer, who mentions it among the twelve chief causes to which rescue-workers in London attribute the undesirable conditions in the city. The question is: who are these rescue-workers, and what is their mental equipment? A religious worker will attribute any evil to want of religion. If these people are working among prostitutes, as I take it they are, to 'rescue' them, it requires more than a vague assertion to prove that methods of birth control encourage prostitution. This is in fact highly absurd.

realpatidar.com

Holland, the only country where birth control has been consistently encouraged by the State during the last fifty years, has shown such a decided all-round improvement owing to the levelling up of the lower classes, that it is difficult to see how in London it can lead to undesirable conditions, unless indeed it is due to the fact that Birth Control is not practised to the same extent there owing to the ignorance of the lower classes? 'It has been discovered to be a moral evil in London', says G. H. J. And the theory of evolution has been discovered to be an evil in America! Indians beware!!

Pillars of strength like G. H. J. pity the weakness of mankind to which birth-control is a concession in their opinion. These people have to be reminded that their own existence in the world is itself due to precisely that human weakness! Animal passions indeed! And is not eating an animal passion? G. H. J. does not seem to have made that discovery yet, and—luckily for him, otherwise he may give up eating.

To pit against Hubert Stringer, I may mention the sermon delivered to the delegates of the Congress of the Royal Institute of Public Health at Brighton by the Bishop of Birmingham in favour of Birth Control. A committee of Quakers has recently published a pamphlet advocating Birth Control. Dr. Mary Halton, M. D., writes in the Birth Control Review for August: 'The contraceptive methods used by the better classes of society cause a proportionately low death rate of children born to them. It also saves the mothers. 'How important this is, we learn from the vital statistics of the United States which tell us that the second highest cause of death is maternity and its complications, the first being tuberculosis. It is of course here again among the upper classes that this protective work of Birth Control is operative, and as would be expected the death rate of women from causes connected with maternity is much lower in this class than in the unprotected lower classes.'

Obviously the same benefits would be derived by the lower classes when they are properly instructed in these artificial methods. While the rest of the world is beginning to see the value of Birth Control, people like G. H. J. are trying to frighten India by quoting Hubert Stringer. Fortunately, once people see the advantages, they are not likely to listen to G. H. J. And the consequences from all precedents, seem bound to be desirable in every way.

II

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Almost all the writers on this problem have considered it from an impersonal and scientific point of view. I intend to approach it from a personal point of view, which by itself will provide a new aspect of looking into the problem.

As I am myself not married, I am really ignorant of the subtle difficulties facing the married when they consider this problem. I am considering it purely from a theoretical—if I may not say imaginary—point of view.

The word birth-control itself has a jarring sensation for me when I think of it. My idea of children is that they are the living images of the love of whatever nature kindled within the breasts of their parents and borne by them towards each other. They are the angels sent to bless our homes. They are the one resort of their parents' world-ridden souls. They ennoble and purify it by their benign presence.

To think of preventing them from seeing the light of the day is an idea which seems almost demoniac to me. Marriage is not merely a social contract. It is a union of two souls which to be true must be a union of love, and a true test of love is that a sacred mystery envelopes the person who is loved. In such a true union, the pleasure of the intercourse for its own sake—some say it is natural, others go to the length of calling it sacred—will be deemed sacrilegious. I am sure if opinions are sought from married people, those that have known within their souls love for man and God will fully endorse my view. Love is the flowering of the conjugal relations. Children are their fruit.

But your readers will say this is an ideal. It cannot be reached by all. But is it not true that man is never satisfied in what he is? Real joy for him is in striving for what he should be. The ideal is the real. To the man turned away from the sun, the sun is nothing, his shadow is everything. To one immersed in darkness light is a thing unattainable. But we know that the light is a reality and it is darkness that is unreal! Darkness is only the absence of light.

And here I am reminded of a poem of Dr. Tagore. He says: "The traveller has to knock at every alien door before he comes to his own, and one has to wander through all the outer worlds to reach the innermost shrine at the end." So it is with man in every branch of knowledge. In his search for Truth he has to travel through many an entangling by-path of untruth. When he has traversed over everything that is untrue, then comes the glimpse of the True.

So is it with this problem. When life was simple in its movement, man never thought of discriminating his social life. But now that life has become complex, and moreover this being an age of science and discrimination, man will not rest until he has found a solution. Man is faced to-day with the problem of huge and growing populations. Instead of going to the root of the difficulty, he is catching at the nearest remedies. He will learn that these remedies degrade man and woman and bring them to a level lower than those of beast, for, when man behaves like a beast, he is worse than a beast.

Woman shall one day stand with her head erect and refuse to assist man in desecrating her shrine of love,—the Eternal mother in her heart. Then will man know that the heart of woman is sacred because love sits there on its throne. It is this love that sustains him. It is this love that she breathes into his home and makes it a peaceful balmy repose for his head and heart. Happiness shall be ours when we go to the root.

But what of the miseries to be suffered till then? Well, the path of Truth is a walk on the edge of the sword. Once the Truth is reached we are in the realm of bliss itself. Some are afraid man will be totally lost if he indulges in such unnatural ways of life. I have no such fear. These very freaks and fancies shall lead him to the portals of Truth. The sooner he arrives there, the better is it for us all!

Belgaum, 3-9-25. Yours etc., Y. N. JAMBOTKAR.

ANDAMANS COLONISATION SCHEME.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Ever since the establishment of British rule in India, few Governmental actions have ever been influenced by public opinion. There are instances without number, which serve to elucidate the mentality which holds the most cherished sentiments and feelings of the Indians in utter contempt.

realpatidar.com

The recent scheme launched by the Madras Government to shift hundreds of Moplah families from their much-loved land of Malabar to the strange Andamans under the familiar methods of pressure and persuasion is another instance of an outrage on humanity unheard of in the history of any modern civilized Government. In the teeth of opposition from the public in general and the Mohamedan community in particular, the Government persisted in carrying out their scheme for inscrutable reasons. It has been certified by the Jails Committee, an authority whose opinion even the Government cannot conscientiously defy, that the island is not fit for human habitation. The climatic conditions are quite unhealthy in as much as it is a malarial place. The Jails Committee had stated that the atmosphere of the island was distinctly unhealthy morally, and no self-respecting and decent man, even though he was a convict, would be willing to take a member of his house-hold to Andamans. The proportion of women to men is 1 to 6 and the majority of the population are convicts. In these circumstances, nobody can deny the fact that it is morally dangerous to send women to such a place, even with the consent of their husbands, who are convicts.

The chief and perhaps the only point the Government has to take shelter under is that it is done with the consent of the parties. Whether there was mutual consent is a fact, which is yet to be proved. The scheme emanated from the fertile brains of the authorities; these Moplahs were brought from the Andamans to Malabar under police custody; they were allowed to interview their relatives in the presence of the police: hence it cannot be satisfactorily proved that the prisoners, who were at the mercy of the Government servants responsible for the success of the scheme, were never influenced in inducing their families to go with them to an island, of the nature and condition of which they themselves had experimental knowledge. Such statements are only worth to be mentioned in Government Despatches, but do not satisfy the Indian public.

As regards the consent said to have been given by the families, who were taken to the Andamans, the true circumstances will never allow any sensible man to believe that they had given their free consent without any pain of heart, but it is just possible that they agreed to be enslaved on account of the pressure and persuasion brought upon, and the temptation and facilities offered to them, and the poverty of the male-ridden families.

In short, the Madras Government alone is responsible not only for the initiation of the scheme, but for its extension also. The Government wants to develop the Andamans, make it suitable for habitation at the cost of Indian men and money, and then hand it over to a few English capitalists, who will no doubt follow in the footsteps of their countrymen in South Africa in keeping those who are responsible for its development under perpetual servitude, and we can safely imagine what their fate will be in the future.

Now, public opinion is strongly against the scheme, humanity forbids it, and last but not the least important, the Madras Legislative Council, the majority of the members of which are persons who have grown grey in their loyal and faithful service to the British Government, has recorded its disapproval in the most emphatic terms. What will the Madras Government do? Will it suspend the scheme, and restore the families already taken to their old beloved land, or will it still stick to its pet scheme disregarding the force of public opinion?

RELIGIOUS CONVERSION AND SOCIAL UPLIFT

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In one of your notes of August 15th you say: "A man who changes his religion for the sake of social considerations is no credit either to the religion which he quits or to the one which he joins". I find that a difficult doctrine. If I belonged to a religion which, as I believed, taught that my touch was a pollution I should very likely to be no credit to anybody or any body whether I left that religion or stayed in it. But I cannot feel that my leaving it in order to join a religious society which treated me as at least a little better than a pollution would be discreditable to me. Do you mean that you think it would be discreditable? Doesn't your whole position really depend on the postulate "a man ought to stay in the religious society of his grandfather, whatever it is"? Would you still feel it your duty to stay in the Hindu fold if (per impossible) the Madras Government (Transferred Department) declared all Brahmans untouchables and persuaded the Hindu authorities to agree with them? Under these conditions, to remain in Hinduism, it seems to me, would be to attribute to one's ancestors a measure of wisdom which they would not have claimed for themselves and do not deserve.

My own feeling is that the doctrine of society taught and manifested in any religion is one of the soundest tests of the value of that religion; if it is the only test that a Panchama can supply, why blame him for applying it? It is so far, sound and reliable.

Madras, Yours etc.,
21st August 1925. C. Kingsley Williams.

[Certainly we should continue to be Hindus in spite of what the Madras Government (Transferred Departments) may do. But this need not be discussed hypothetically. The Jews in the middle ages were a despised race. But they clung to their religion all the closer for that. The more we think of it, the less do we believe in religious conversions which are brought about by any consideration except that of being brought nearer to God. There have been Pariah and Mahar saints whom Brahmins have adored.—Ed., I. S. R.]

SUPERSTITIONS AND HOW TO COMBAT THEM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Various superstitions prevail amongst various communities in various parts of India. These are the remnants of old times when knowledge was confined to the fortunate few and others were allowed to grow practically in mental inertia. They are queer and funny and exercise a very injurious effect on the people: Some of them are mean and ignoble, but even highly educated persons are their victims. They interfere with the daily routine of their life, and some of their failures can be directly traced to them. They cannot help professing them in several cases even in spite of themselves, when they have been nurtured upon these traditions from their very early years.

If this is the case with the educated, nothing can be said about the illiterate who are prone to all sorts of fits and fancies under the influence of ludicrous superstitions, though they have to pay dearly for them every year.

Various agencies are at work in combating superstitions. But still they persist in all communities though varying in respect of their intensity in inverse proportion to the absorption of modern culture. Under such circumstances, it may be suggested that social reformers of different sects should frame

lists of the superstitions and have them published in the shape of booklets in an attractive style. Like folklore which is becoming so popular a study in all civilised countries, these collections or compilations would prove very interesting. These would be highly profitable to those preachers, lecturers, novelists and poets, who consider it their mission to uplift humanity by purging society of its evils. But great care will have to be taken in their preparations. Superstition will have to be separated from religion, as chaff is separated from grain, and the work is to be undertaken in a sympathetic spirit, if it is to be effective.

THE CASTE SYSTEM.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

When Dupleix was ruler of French India, he conceived the idea of conquering India by the aid of Indians. He clearly saw that the Indians had no love for their own country and could easily be led to fight against their own countrymen.

This sort of mental decay and loss of patriotic feeling may be chiefly ascribed to the results of the caste-system, which forces the people to respect and bless their own servitude. It has made them incapable of and unwilling to submit to the discipline of unity. It has made the different parts of our society too distinct and too dissimilar to blend together. It has made the people powerless to work out their own salvation. It was for this cast institution the mass of population in ancient India cared very little for a change of rule, which left unaltered the miseries of their situation.

Such is the debasing influence of our caste-system, which the champions of orthodoxy now try to defend.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Bombay International Fellowship: An all-India International Fellowship Conference will be held at the Servants of India Society's Headquarters in Poona on October 1st 1925. This Conference will be attended by present and probable future Fellowship Secretaries, together with several other interested members and workers. The delegates will represent about twenty-six places in India. Among the questions to be discussed are the following:—The purpose of the Fellowship, the place of religion in the Fellowship, the future work of the Fellowship, the federation of Fellowships in India, the feasibility of an all-India Conference in 1928. In preparation for the consideration of these questions, two general meetings of the Bombay International Fellowship will be held at Wilson College on Saturdays, September 12th and 19th.

"Madhuri": We have received a copy of the Sravan number of the Madhuri, an illustrated Hindi monthly journal edited by Messrs. Dularelal Bhargava and Rupnarayan Pandey, printed and published at the Navalkishore Press, Lucknow. The magazine contains several neat, beautiful and attractive artistic productions. Among many interesting subjects dealt with in the journal are those on astronomical and geographical nature-studies, articles on the history of Rajputana and a character sketch of the late Mr. C. R. Das. Articles on Parasurama and his Ashram, with special reference to the part played by him in Ramayana by [Sri Avadhavasi Sitaram, and Forest names in Ramayana are of special interest. The article contributed by Mr. Gopaladatta Pant Sastri on the stone inscription in Maharaj Bhojadeva's time, found in Ahar by Balandshahr District Magistrate and its transcription in Nagari and comment on the same by Rai Bahadur Pandit Gaurishankar Hirachand Ojha, Superintendent of Rajputana Museum, Ajmer, will be found interesting to research scholars. The magazine also contains several other well-written articles contributed by both men and women, besides book-reviews, cartoons etc. When the subject of a lingua franca for India is receiving the serious attention of Indian national leaders, most of whom are in favour of adopting Hindi as the national language and Nagari its common script, magazines of this nature are invariably a necessity to interest and educate the public on the subject. The only regret is that there has not been a larger number of such publications in Hindi. The annual subscription for the journal is only Rs. 7-8-0. We wish the Madhuri all success.

Bombay Presidency Women's Council: The Bombay Presidency Women's Council was brought into being to act as a co-ordinating and directing body for all social and philanthoropic work connected with women and children throughout the Presidency. Whilst performing its duties as a clearing house for all organised effort, the Council has in addition permanent activities of its own which include a Home for Indian women at Tardeo and a Women's Employment Bureau. Mrs. Dadabhoy is the present Honorary Secretary and the funds of the Home now show a balance of about Rs. 4,000. Two new admissions came to the Home in July and at the present moment there are four inmates. The Employment Bureau, which supplies a greatly needed want, continues to receive inquiries. The Parliamentary sub-committee suggested several subjects which were thought suitable for the Council to consider, and Mrs. Stockbridge, Government Inspectress of Schools, has been asked to open a discussion on Thursday, September 10th, the subject being "Moral Education in Schools." Mr. C. F. Andrews has also been asked to speak later on the "Opium Question in India," while it is hoped some time in the near future to talk on the teaching of Domestic Science. A medical sub-committee suggested the necessity of more hospital accommodation for the treatment of women and children suffering from venereal diseases, reported that there was an urgent need for extra beds to be arranged in separate wards in the existing medical institutions. The Women's Council has forwarded a resolution to Government and the Municipal Corporation strongly urging them to take early steps to meet this great want. Representing a large part of the women of Bombay the Women's Council has resolved to send a resolution to the Government of India supporting Sir Hari Singh Gour's Children's Protection Bill, the Council being convinced that the future of India depends largely on the health and well-being of coming generations and calling upon the Legislative Assembly to pass the Bill unmodified, making the age for the consummation of marriage for girls at least 14 years.

A Widow Re-marriage: Mr. R. S. Nimbkar, a young journalist of Bombay, and an ex-Secretary, Maharashtra Provincial Congress Committee, married Mrs. Indirabai Deshpande, now Mrs. Sushilabai Nimbkar, a Brahmin child-widow and a Seva Sadan Nurse from Sholapur, under the auspices of the Hindu Missionary Society on Friday. The marriage was also solemnised under the Civil Marriage Act on Wednesday last. This is perhaps the first incident of a social reform marriage in the Maharashtra Nationalist Party.

The 16th Bihar Provincial Conference: The Secretary, Reception Committee, writes to say that the 16th Bihar Provincial Political Conference will hold its sitting at Purulia in the District of Manbhum of the Chota Nagpur Division on the 12th and 13th September next. This is the first time in the history of Chota Nagpur, that a Conference of any nature is being held. Chota Nagpur, which presents a very big field for national work for it is being peopled mainly by the most hardy, honest and truthful aborigines, has unfortunately been neglected by the leaders of our country. The District of Manbhum, again, is of considerable importance industrially and maintains a large number of labourers who after hours of hard toil are hardly able to take part in the deliberation of the present-day problems of our country. It is also understood that Mahatma Gandhi will come and guide the deliberations of the Conference.

A New Canker in Social Reform: A Correspondent writes to the Leader, Allahabad: Sir.—May I crave the hospitality of your columns to warn the parents of girls of marriageble age against a new canker in the social reform movement? Recently an advertisement appeared in the matrimonial columns of a paper about an England-returned Hindu gentleman seeking a bride. As no caste restrictions were to be observed, I was naturally interested, specially as I am seeking a suitable life partner for my own daughter. A little correspondence revealed the important fact that the young man 'was married long ago but has not lived with his wife'. Yet this England-returned educated gentleman has no hesitation in advertising for a second wife during the lifetime of the first. An exactly similar experience fell to the lot of a dear friend of mine last year on following up a similar advertisement in this very paper. The only safeguard is to insist on the marriage being registered under the Special Marriage Act, which lays down a heavy punishment if either party has a partner living. Under this Act the marriage must be monogamous.

Elections and Communal Bodies: We are glad to see that the Working Committee of the Hindu Mahasabha, at its meeting held recently at Simla, decided, with only one dissentient, that the Hindu Sabhas should not [illegible] Communal representation has already proved to be a veritable apple of discord and it would have been a calamity if it was decided to run the elections on a communal basis. We congratulate the Hindu Sabha on its wise decision.

Bangalore Vigilance Association: The Bangalore Correspondent of the Hindu writes under date August 4:—

A well-attended drawing room meeting was held at "St. Marthas Cottage," Government Offices Road, Bangalore City, on the 3rd August for the purpose of considering the advisability of forming a Vigilance Association for Bangalore. The convener, Mrs. O'Brien, commenced the meeting by introducing Mrs. Hume Stanford, Hon. Presidency Magistrate, Madras, and Hon. Joint Secretary, Madras Vigilance Association, who would explain the methods of running vigilance work. Mrs. Hume Stanford, who is a well-known trained social worker in London, S. Africa and Australia, etc., then sketched out briefly the great need for vigilance work in all large cities, to protect women and girl workers, and rescue fallen women, both by pressing for legislative action and by co-operation with Police and social bodies, education of public morals, and to run and support rescue houses. Owing to her wide knowledge of the subject, she was able to give graphic details of some of the difficult cases occasionally met with. After an informal discussion it was decided to start a Bangalore Vigilance Association which will be affiliated to the Madras Vigilance Association. A committee was formed and two Joint Secretaries were elected. Particulars may be had from the Hon. Secretary, B. V. A., 6, St. John's Road, Bangalore.

NOTES

The Problem of Factory Labour: The current number of the Labour Gazette publishes the Introduction written by Sir Stanley Reed to Mr. Burnett-Hurst's book 'Labour and Housing in Bombay'. In it he points out that the whole prosperity of India is not so much a question of tariffs owing to the adventitious influence of the exchanges and the cheaper and more efficient mill labour of Japan and Shanghai, but an increase in the efficiency and stability of the labour force. The fact is that the employers have to deal with a fluctuating labour population consisting largely of semi-agriculturists who reside in the towns only for a part of the year and return to villages during the agricultural season. "The chief consequences of this incessant migration", he writes, "are a low standard of technical efficiency, and absence of responsibility arising from treatment of factory work as a disagreeable necessity only to be practised long enough to enable the worker to earn enough to return to his village, and a social disruption separating the worker from his home and his family for long periods". Two other evils which he points out as arising from the migratory habits of the Indian workmen are that the higher wages are too often lost in increased absenteeism reckoned as high as 20 per cent, and that a heavy toll is being taken of the worker's wages by the money lender, the jobber or labour supplier, the foreman and the liquor seller and the bucket-shop keeper. The migratory habit, however, does not arise from any defect of character but is forced upon the worker as the only means whereby he can survive the conditions of life generally in Bombay City. If by any means other than a great and congenial transformation of these conditions, the worker is permanently cut off from contact with the country-side, he will degenerate morally and physically much more rapidly than at present. The same reason which impels the wealthier and well-housed classes to seek occasional change of scene and air on the hills, operates to draw the worker to his village. We consider it a healthy habit and would rather adapt industrial conditions in Bombay to it than take measures to check it before it can reproduce in some measure the amenities of rural life in the housing and living conditions of factory workers.

Bombay Mill Strike: Over 40,000 mill-hands representing something like 23 mills in the city have gone on strike since Tuesday last. Though a strike was regarded as an eventuality, it was not expected to come so soon and suddenly. It was thought that a strike might occur somewhere about the middle of October when the workers would receive their reduced wages. The Assembly passed on Wednesday by a large majority Sir Purshottamdas Thakurdas' resolution asking Government to suspend the collection of the excise duty for the remaining months of the financial year because of the critical time through which the mill industry is passing, despite Government's opposition to it on the ground that it would throw their financial arrangements out of gear. The present strike is largely due to the action of the rasher elements among factory workers, as strikes often are, and the majority of workmen seem to have been obliged to acquiesce owing to absence of organisation and leadership. On the first day, there were signs of a tendency to hooligan methods, but wiser counsels seem to have prevailed and the last three days have passed off peacefully. The real trouble will come, however, when a fortnight or three weeks hence, the strain of worklessness begins to be felt by the workers.

Bombay City Police: The report of the Commissioner of Police, Mr. P. A. Kelly, on the administration of Police in the city of Bombay for the year 1924 is an important document which, though primarily a review of the crime and administration of the police in the city, throws interesting sidelights on the social, economic, moral and political aspects of the life of the general public in the City. The Director of Information, in forwarding a copy of the Report, has sent us a well-written summary which reproduces its salient points. A notable event during the year under review was the mill-hands' strike at the beginning of the year lasting for two full months during which the police acted under severe strain with commendable endurance. The Report says that there was the usual "periodical panic" about Pathans in May and June. We are unable to understand the significance of the outbreak of "Pathanism" during a particular period every year as if there is a particular season for Pathans when they become out of control. The phenomenon, if, as observed by the Commissioner, is a seasonal occurrence, deserves investigation with a view to throw light upon its causes which may then be dealt with. We are glad that the Commissioner had several meetings with the leaders of the Pathan community with a view to exercise through them a strict watch on new arrivals and to find out bad characters among them. Crime is on the whole on the increase. It has been steadily increasing since 1922. While a slight decrease was noticed under culpable homicide, rape, grievous hurt, kidnapping, criminal force to public servant, etc, there was a noticeable increase under murder, attempts at murder, unnatural offences, attempt at and abetment of suicide and the administering of stupefying drugs. The statistics as regards motor vehicles show that American automobiles have a strong hold on the Bombay market, the number of American cars registered during 1924 being nearly double the combined total of English and Continental cars, although it is stated that the number of the latter appears to be on the increase. There was a slight decrease in motor accidents. The Report records with evident satisfaction the political lull in the city as a result of which the Police had very little to do with politicians. It is stated that the spread of communism was checked in Bombay by the prosecution of Shripad Amrit Dahge of Bombay who was convicted in the famous Bolshevik conspiracy case in Cawnpore. The fact is that there is nothing like communism in Bombay or elsewhere, and we cannot help thinking that the reference to the solitary case of Mr. Dange, a young man who was editing a weekly hardly known outside the circle of his friends, and the credit claimed by the police for checking the spread of communism, is rather misleading. There was a slight reduction in the strength of the Police force of the City, the number at the end of the year being 3,817 as against 4,024 at the close of 1923. It is significant to note that of these only 217 officers and 1,482 men are able to read and write.

Infanticide and Murder: Of the 61 murders and attempted murders recorded in the Report during the year 1924, 18 were cases of infanticide the motive of which, as the Report observes, was apparently the desire of the mother to conceal her shame. The one essential difference between infanticide and other crimes is that in the case of the former, the male partner in the guilt is allowed immunity whereas the female, who is oftener the victim than the offender, is hauled up before the court on a charge of murder. Out of the 18 cases recorded, only 3 ended in conviction, and of these three, the sentences of transportation for life were passed, as required by the law, in two cases by the High Court Sessions. We have on more than one occasion recently referred to the public feeling distinctly in favour of a change in the law of infanticide as distinguished from murder. Evidence of this is to be found in the small proportion of convictions in such cases. The Bombay Government generally commutes the sentence of transportation to one of two years' imprisonment, and this, we understand, is the practice in Madras and some other provinces. In some cases in Bombay the women were permitted to serve their term in the Pandharpur Orphanage. We hope that the opinions expressed by the presiding Judges recently on the necessity for a change of law in the case of infanticide and the strong public feeling in favour of it will encourage some member of the Legislative Assembly to bring in a Bill to amend the existing law of infanticide, and that it will not be long before cases of infanticide are dealt with as distinct from murder.

Abolition of Slavery: A Reuter's telegram dated the 9th September says that Viscount Cecil on behalf of Britain unexpectedly submitted at the Committee of the League of Nations proposals for eventual abolition of slavery including domestic slavery in all parts of the world. The proposals are said to be the most important of their kind since the Brussels Act of 1890. It is a pity that slavery should still exist in this world after the splendid work done by Abraham Lincoln and William Lloyd Garrison in America and Wilberforce in England to wipe off all slavery from the face of the earth, and still more pitiable that there should have been found delegates in the League representing some of the so-called civilized countries of Europe emphasising the importance of not moving too rapidly. The splendid and noble lead set by the State of Nepal in taking energetic measures to suppress slavery, an account of which we publish elsewhere, should serve as a model to all countries in effecting this urgent reform. But, strange as it may seem, it is the country which Viscount Cecil has the honour to represent in the League that has sanctioned forced labour in Kenya, a custom, in some respects, worse than slavery, and it is to be hoped that in the interests of humanity and of her own good name, Great Britain will take early steps to put a stop to this inhuman custom prevailing in some of her colonies.

The late Dewan Bahadur Swamikannu Pillai: In the death of Dr. Swamikannu Pillai, South India has lost one of her great sons. Born in February 1865, he had a distinguished educational career in the St. Joseph's College, Trichinopoly. After taking his degree at the early age of 17, he started life as Professor in his own alma mater. In 1890 he entered Government service as Deputy Collector and served Government in various capacities as Collector and District Magistrate, Registrar of Co-operative Societies etc. When the Reforms Act came into operation he was appointed as Secretary of the Legislative Council. In this capacity he was deputed by Government to England to study at first-hand Parliamentary procedure and practice. After the retirement of Sir P. Rajagopalacharya he was nominated President of the Legislative Council, and when the post became elective, he became its first elected President. The late Dr. Swamikannu was a profound scholar and linguist. He knew many languages and he could converse as easily in Latin and French as in Tamil and English. He was an authority in scientific astrology, astronomy and chronology. Even shorthand claimed his attention and students of shorthand are familiar with his treatise on the subject. Mr. Pillai's brilliant talents and scholarship would have found greater scope if he had taken to research instead of to Government service. His loss is especially a great loss to the Catholic community to which he belonged.

Traffic in Girls: It was only recently that we drew attention to the dearth of girls in the Telugu districts of Madras and the considerable difficulty experienced by Brahmins in the Tamil districts in finding bridegrooms for their daughters, while commenting on a case decided by the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao. This is borne out by another sensational case which the Kumbakonam correspondent of the Hindu reports to that paper. It would appear that a few days back an Andhra youth, aged about 24, said to be a native of Driggupalli in Andhradesa and a resident in the Hyderabad State, came to Kumbakonam with 40 tolas of gold and some cash in search of a suitable bride for him. A certain gentlemen took the bride-seeker into his confidence, and after extracting from him Rs. 1500, got him married to a girl aged about 12, in a neighbouring temple, without the knowledge of her parents It also transpires that the said gentleman took the girl from her grandmother with whom she was living, representing that he was settling her marriage with a College student. The day after the marriage, the husband wanted to take his wife to his native place. Meanwhile, the parents of the girl came to know of the marriage and the proposal to take her to Hyderabad, and the girl's uncle carried her away to an unknown place. It is understood that a criminal complaint has been filed by the girl's relatives against all those who took part in the reported marriage including the priest who officiated at the religious function.

The Council of State: Before its dissolution, the Council gave two more proofs of its thoroughly unrepresentative character and its utter subservience to the Executive Government. It rejected the Hon. Mr. Phiroze Sethna's amendment to the Government resolution on the reforms, which was substantially identical with that of Pandit Motilal Nehru in the Assembly, and subsequently passed the Government resolution accepting in principle the recommendations of the Majority Report of the Muddiman Committee. After a heated debate, it also rejected Mr. Ramdas's motion for consideration of Mr. Rangachariar's Fire Arms Bill passed by a large majority in the Assembly. This unwise action of the Elders has brought about a grave constitutional crisis. It is understood that the majority of the Swarajists and Independents are contemplating resigning their seats and seeking re-election on the Assembly's resolution on reforms, thus exposing in all its nakedness the Council's pretence to represent any section of the country. Thus whatever little good work is done by the Assembly has been undone by the Council of State. The Viceroy showered praise upon the Elders for their wisdom, sobriety and judgment and wished them all success in the new elections, but His Excellency's eulogies will find no echo in the electorates.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1925.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The League of Nations is a governmental body, that is to say, its members sit as representatives of the Governments of their respective countries. In the case of countries which have responsible government the arrangement works fairly satisfactorily as the Government for the time being represents or may be taken to represent the mind of its people. In the case of countries which have national governments even if they are not of the representative, responsible type, there is no sharp discontinuity between society and the state, and it may, therefore, be presumed that the Government represents in a general way the moral and intellectual tendencies of the nation. In the case, however, of countries like India which have no national government, and where the state is superimposed upon society, the Government can at best claim only to represent the static features of the community. There was, consequently, much dissatisfaction in the country with the way in which India's delegates to the Assembly of the League of Nations were nominated by the Executive Government every year; and the demand was made with increasing insistency that the Government should choose its representatives from a panel recommended by the Legislature. Instead of responding to this demand, the Government of India this year has gone back even upon its previous practice of nominating one Indian public man without any official position among the three delegates which it is entitled to send to the League Assembly. Sir Ali Imam, Sir Sivaswami Ayar, the Right Hon. Srinivasa Sastry and Mr. Hassan Imam had been nominated in previous years; and though they belong to different political parties and religious communities, they comported themselves in the League as representatives of India without reference to caste or creed. This year, however, the Government of India has omitted, for reasons which have not been explained, even one representative from the ranks of independent, non-official public men. It has nominated instead Sir Atul Chatterjee, High Commissioner for India in London, who is a member of the Indian Civil Service and a subordinate of the Indian Government. This, it may be said, is in accord with the practice of the Dominions which often send their High Commissioners in London as their delegates to the League. But the Government of India is not a responsible Government as the Dominion Governments are, and that makes a world of difference.

This departure from the usual practice has had a deplorable result. In previous years, the British Indian delegate, being an outstanding personality with a position in public life, took the lead in voicing Indian sentiments especially in matters pertaining to the humanitarian and, in our view, by far the most important side of the work of the League of Nations. This year the role has devolved upon the Maharaja of Patiala who has been selected by Government as the representative of Indian States. With notable exceptions, which are not numerous, the Indian States and especially the ruling Chiefs hold, in respect of many of the subjects comprised in the humanitarian activities of the League, views which are far less advanced than educated Indians in British India. Apart from this, their own personal position face to face with the representatives of the world's democracies, imposes upon them, whether they like it or not, the duty of upholding the existing order of things in social as in political affairs. It would be a great mistake, therefore, to take what seems to have been a totally irrelevant outburst of the Maharaja of Patiala on the question of "age of consent" in the Assembly, as representing educated opinion in the country. His Highness, indeed, seems to be unaware of the fact that the principal recommendations of the League in this matter have already been adopted and embodied in laws passed by the Indian Legislature with modifications suggested by the special conditions and requirements of this country. The Maharaja, it is reported by Reuter, > declared that the nation to which he belonged had ever been conspicuous for its interest in benevolent and peaceful activities. He emphasised that the Committee must be careful not to defeat its purpose by any action that could be construed as an attempt to interfere with the domestic concerns of particular peoples. For example, the Committee must proceed in a most cautious manner with regard to the age of marriage and the age of consent. If the work of the Committee was confined purely to the collection of information without any attempt to draw deductions from it, or to formulate conventions of universal validity, little harm could be done, but any attempt to prescribe for India the age of consent or an age based on western ideas was not only doomed to disaster, but would actually set back the cause of social reform.

We received by a recent mail a copy of a survey of the work of the League of Nations from January 1920 –June 1925 compiled by its Secretariat at Geneva. From the section relating to traffic in women we see that the Committee upon which His Highness of Patiala has been put, had only one Convention, that of 1921, to deal with. This Convention provides that in all the countries adhering to it persons who procure, entice or seduce girls "under age", even with their consent, or by fraud or force seduce women, shall be punished even if the offence may have been committed in different countries. The Indian Legislature has raised "the age of consent" to 18 in British India. We do not know if all Indian States have raised it in their territories. Indian States are technically foreign territory and enticing or seducing of girls from British India would be punishable under the law passed in conformity with the Convention. That, however, is a side issue. What we cannot understand is the Maharaja's exhortation that the Committee should proceed in a most cautious manner with regard to the age of marriage (which has never been raised) and the age of consent. We wish to say with the greatest emphasis that informed Indian opinion favours the further raising of the "age of consent," and that the Maharaja's plea for caution, if it was not put in merely as a didactic commonplace, is not supported by any feeling of want of caution on the part of the League or the Legislature in this country. Another Reuter's cable of the same date stated that the elder statesmen of Japan, represented in the Privy Council of that country, had disapproved of the reservations made by the Japanese delegation in signing the Convention as being disgraceful to Japan and that eminent public men are bringing pressure to bear upon the Government to cancel them. This is as it ought to be. India can never attain a high position among the nations unless her laws give equal protection as the most advanced of them to her women and children.

PRISON REFORM.

One of the marked features of modern jurisprudence is the triumph of the reformative over the deterrent principle in the punishment of criminals. It is more and more coming to be recognised that criminals too, after all, are human beings who commit crimes on the urge of the moment spurred on to do so by some abnormality and degeneracy on their part. Hitherto, too much attention has been paid to the crime and too little to the criminal, but there is now a growing tendency in all countries to take the human factor into consideration. As the chances of reformation are greater in the case of young and juvenile offenders, nearly all countries have adopted the Borstal system which has proved to be a success in transforming the youthful criminal into a loyal citizen. The resolutions passed at the International Prison Congress held recently in London, cannot but be of interest to us, accustomed as we are to the evils of a defective jail system. Lord Cave, the Lord Chancellor, laid special stress on the reformatory side of jail life and said that it was the general opinion among judges and magistrates that in order that the Borstal institution might have a fair chance of success, a sentence of one year was of little or no value and that a sentence for a full term of three years, reducible by the offender's own exertions, afforded the best prospect of the conversion of a budding criminal into a useful member of society. Emphasis was laid on the fact that a criminal should not be regarded us an 'incorrigible offender.' The Lord Chief Justice said that the chief success of prison consisted in preventing people from becoming prisoners and laid stress on the 'method of probation.' Under the Borstal system, he said, 70 per cent of the boys and 80 per cent of the girls never got into trouble again. He also advised that Justices of the Peace, when they released an offender on probation, should follow up the case and see for themselves whether the probationer was behaving himself properly and observing the conditions of release. It was also held necessary that a judge, before sentencing an accused person, should possess by means of police enquiries a full knowledge of the "physical and psychic conditions and the social life of the accused and the motives of the crime." The Congress passed a resolution that "it was necessary that accused persons, as also convicted offenders, should be physically and mentally examined by specially qualified practitioners," and that necessary services for this purpose should be installed with a view to determining the biological and sociological causes of criminality. The Congress, with a view to prevent contamination, also resolved that prisoners should be classified according to character and ability to reform and, wherever possible, should be confined in different buildings.

The Indian jail system, we need hardly say, is not all that it should be, and we would commend these resolutions to the careful attention of the Government of India. We congratulate the Madras Government on the introduction of the Borstal Bill in the Legislative Council. The success of the Borstal school at Tanjore warrants an extension of the system on a large scale throughout the Presidency. We have already referred in a previous issue to the striking disclosures made in the Bande Mataram case of the corruption in jails and the inhuman treatment and punishment accorded to criminals the gravity of which attracted wide-spread attention. Lord Birkenhead's reply to Lord Olivier in the House of Lords that "the findings of the court were obviously disquieting" and that "the matter clearly required to have the closest consideration by the Local Government, the Government of India and the Secretary of State for India in Council," was reassuring, and we hope that the Government of India will institute a searching enquiry into the Indian jail administration. The administration report of the Bombay Jail Department for 1924 records some desirable changes in the revision of the rules regarding the punishment of whipping in jails, the imposition of handcuffs and fetters, and the increase of general holidays.

CHRIST AND THE PHARISEES.

(By Mr. C. F. Andrews).

A letter has recently been handed over to me to answer, which deals with a somewhat difficult Christian subject. The writer is distressed, because he has been told that the verse in St. Luke's Gospel, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," is not found in one of the oldest manuscripts discovered last century upon Mount Sinai. The writer had also been led to believe that in practice Jesus did not forgive the Pharisees, who plotted to put him to death, but only denounced them.

My answer is as follows:—It has been known for many years, and publicly acknowledged in the Revised Version, that certain very ancient manuscripts do not contain this verse from St. Luke's Gospel. We have indeed a whole series of short passages, which thus lack full manuscript authority. One of these is the story of Christ's treatment of the woman taken in adultery (John viii. i). Another is the ending of St. Mark's Gospel. Another is a part of the narrative of the Agony in the Garden (Luke XXII. 44). These passages are found in a great majority of manuscripts, but are lacking in at least one ancient line of tradition.

How are we to account for this? The simplest way is to regard them as not part of the original manuscripts, but added in the margin by a contemporary or slightly later hand. We must remember that the Gospels are collections of the sayings and deeds of Christ, handed down first by word of mouth and only afterwards written, in manuscript, as gospels. It would be natural, at the very first, for those who knew the original tradition, to put in the margin any well-known word of Christ which happened to be omitted by the author of the Gospel. Some of these marginal additions, like this verse in St. Luke, were taken into the text: others were not. We have actually instances, where the marginal addition did not get inserted. One of these relates how Christ saw a man working in the fields on the Sabbath day and told him that if he understood what he was doing, he did well, but if he did it against his conscience, he was a transgressor. A few very remarkable sayings of Christ were also recently discovered in Egypt. One of these runs as follows: "He that is near me is near fire".

Let me state quite plainly that I do not believe in the 'infallibility' of any scripture. Every scripture has to be judged by conscience and reason. Scientific criticism, also, has its place in deciding the genuineness of texts. If, then, I am asked, whether Christ actually said the words, "Father, forgive", from the Cross, I should answer that we do not know for certain one way or the other, and that it is quite possible that he did not say them. But we have abundant evidence to show, that the earliest disciples cherished these words and acted upon them and regarded them as being in consonance with Christ's character. For we find in the New Testament constant exhortations to Christ's followers to forgive their enemies even as Christ forgave his enemies. Thus St. Peter writes:—

"For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully.

For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? But if when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God.

For even thereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his steps:

Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth:

Who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not, but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously."

We have very strong evidence, which goes to prove that the early chapters of the Acts of the Apostles give a faithful record in the main of the events of the first days of the history of the Christian Church. When we examine that record, we find that Stephen, the first to suffer death, prayed for his murderers. Peter and the apostles were cast into the common prison and beaten, but offered no resistance,—"rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name". Saul, the persecuter, was won over to discipleship by seeing a vision of Jesus, who said to him, "Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me..... I am Jesus whom thou persecutest". It would not be too much to say, that the whole society of the early Christians, while they suffered martyrdom joyfully by thousands, was built up from the tradition that Christ himself suffered in the same manner leaving them an example.

Furthermore, when we read the whole story of the crucifixion of Jesus, as it is simply told by each evangelist in turn, we find that it is one long record of patient, silent endurance without one word of recrimination. The symbol of the Cross has become classical in literature for that very reason, and we speak today, nineteen hundred years afterwards, of 'taking up the Cross' and 'bearing the Cross', meaning, thereby suffering patiently.

This then is the general trend of the New Testament and there can really be no doubt that it was the impress of the character and personality of Jesus which brought about this change among men, just as the impress of the character and personality of Gautama brought about the same change in India more than five hundred years before. Personally, I have expressed the opinion that these two movements in humanity are not independent, but that the Christian teaching of Ahimsa drew inspiration from the earlier Hindu-Buddhist teaching. I came to that conclusion when I was in South Africa nearly twelve years ago, and I have not changed my mind since.

"But," it may be asked in conclusion, "did not Christ rebuke the Pharisees too severely?".

As I read the story of Christ, I notice two things: (1) his leniency towards the publicans and sinners, (2) his extraordinary severity towards the Scribes and Pharisees. Yet, the longer I have lived, the more certainly I have felt that such an emphasis, in both cases, was sane and just. Sins of the senses, such as drunkenness and open vice, carry with them their own self-condemnation. Sins of the soul, such as religious hypocrisy and selfishness, are a far greater danger to the inner life of man, because they carry with them no self-condemnation, but rather self-satisfaction. Love has to be very stern, while probing to the depth the secret evils of religious arrogance and contempt.

It is of the utmost importance to remember, that at the end of Christ's terrible denunciation of the Pharisees for their religious hypocrisy and impenitence, He is reported to have uttered the tenderest words of love:—"O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest the one which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, as the hen gathereth her chickens under her wing, and ye would not! Behold your house is left unto you desolate."

This is no cry of hate or revenge; it is the cry of a broken heart.

OUR TRAVANCORE LETTER.

(From our own Correspondent).

TANKS FOR ALL.

A resolution which came up for a lengthy debate in the Legislative Council was that permission may be given for all tanks, constructed or repaired at Government cost, being thrown open for the use of all people in the State without distinction of caste or creed.

The mover urged the usual grounds of equal rights. It was explained on the other side that there were tanks in the premises of temples and palaces. There were again tanks in localities confined to certain sections of people who have been using them for years for religious purposes. Though these tanks were constructed and repaired at Government cost, they could not be thrown open to the public as contemplated in the resolution, though they are open to the 'public' as defined in the General Clauses Regulation, i. e., a section of the public. The wording of the resolution was not happy and could not be accepted as there would be a serious violation of vested rights and breaches of peace, if the resolution in its present form was given effect to. Religious susceptibilities and feelings of important sections of the public have to be taken into account.

Mr. K. Narayanan Pandalay, Chief Secretary to Government, opposed the resolution. He was glad to know from the learned mover that it was not meant to include within the scope of the Resolution tanks which are in any manner connected with temples or Devaswoms, though they might have been constructed by Government and though some repairs might have been executed by Government out of the general revenues of the State. There were, however, other difficulties in the way of all tanks repaired or constructed by the Government being thrown open to all classes alike. There were certain streets inhabited by particular communities and there were also tanks in these streets which have all along been used only by the people occupying those streets. If all of a sudden an innovation was to be introduced whereby such tanks are thrown open for all classes, such a proceeding might lead to a serious breach of the peace. Whatever may be the educated opinion in the land in this matter, there was no ignoring the fact that the ordinary masses have not as yet come to the condition in which they would take to these changes so rapidly.

While he was the District Magistrate of Quilon, a dispute between the Sambavars and Pallars—both depressed classes—in Shencottah arose. These Sambavars used to go freely through a certain way which was lined on either side by houses belonging to Pallars. On a petition presented to him that the Pallars were preventing them from proceeding along that way, he wanted to satisfy himself as to the intensity of feeling which existed between the two communities and he went there for the purpose of inspection. A large number of Pallars and Sambavars collected on the spot. He enquired what the cause of the difference was and he found that the tension of feeling was so high that he was in imminent danger of being assaulted. For their life the Pallars would not permit the Sambavars to enter the street. If he had not visited the place, he would have granted permission to these Sambavars to pass along the way. In that case he was quite sure that there would have been a number of deaths and serious bloodshed.

There was the same intensity of feeling among all the communities and that was a question, more or less, of religious and social reform in which the hands of Government could not be forced; nor was Government in their executive capacity able to do much in that direction.

This House and the people outside know what the general attitude of Government has been in these matters. Wherever possible and to the extent possible equality of civic rights and equal opportunities had been allowed to all the communities alike. But in order to satisfy the self-respect and sentiments of one community, it was not possible to sacrifice the religious sentiments of other communities. After all, what was the object of this change? It was to promote fellow-feeling and good-will among the communities. The object would be defeated if Government should, by a stroke of the pen, introduce a reform against the will of the other communities concerned.

It was not possible at present to catalogue all the tanks which would have to be excluded from the scope of the Resolution. Therefore, the best thing to do would be to consider each case on its merits. If, in the case of a particular tank, Government saw no objection, they would not hesitate to throw it open to all classes. Local needs have also to be attended to and, if expenditure was incurred on those local needs, the expenditure could not be characterised as one not intended for the benefit of the public. The Government were prepared to spend their funds for the purpose of digging separate tanks for each community if a necessity is made out to the satisfaction of Government.

After a lengthy discussion and after considerable time was spent over a very intelligent and practical amendment made by that astute lawyer-member, Mr. P. K. Narayan Pillai, the Dewan President came to the help of the House with his resourcefulness and tact and suggested an alteration which was accepted by the House. The resolution in its final form ran as follows :—

That this House recommends to the Government that the use of all tanks which are maintained by the Government out of public funds and over which no special rights have been created or recognised by Government be thrown open to the general public without distinction of caste, creed or religion so long as such tanks are needed in the interests of the general public.

The resolution was passed, 25 for and 19 against it, the officials voting en bloc for the resolution.

CALCUTTA LETTER.

(From our Correspondent).

All those who are interested in the well-being of our country are of opinion that Panditji's amendment in the Legislative Assembly is the minimum demand on which we can honourably co-operate with the ruling class. Panditji put the principle embodying the majority report in a nutshell when he described it as being, 'Give as little as you can and make sure that in the little you give the power and prestige of the bureaucracy is not in the least jeopardised", and as such no Indian can accept it. The Government of India were already aware that public opinion in India was solidly against the majority report and knowing full well that it would be rejected by the House, wanted to have a farce enacted. Mr. Rangachariar rightly asked: "If the Government were not going to change the principle then why this farce of discussion and why this talk of fellowship, comradeship and friendship ?" "To work the gas and bolier", was Mr. Jinnah's apt reply.

Anglo-Indian dailies are of opinion that the Swarajists have lost a great deal in not accepting the majority report and in failing to respond to the friendly overtures of Lord Reading. To this we can only say that we have recognised rather timely that the hand of fellowship the bureaucracy is offering is leadingus definitely to a deep pit.

It was a foregone conclusion that the Government would be able to get whatever they want done by the Council of State and the latest news that the majority report has been passed by that body is as it should be and is not taken seriously by any party.

Dr. A. Muir of the Tropical School of Medicine spoke on Thursday night at the Y. W. C. A on the 'Leprosy Scourge'. In the course of his speech he observed: "People who were afflicted by leprosy suffered the most terrible mental anguish; they were ostracised socially and were despised by everybody, so that in the end they come to despise themselves. Thus they looked forward to death for relief. They would do much in ridding the country of tuberculosis by tackling the leprosy question first because the same sanitary improvements in homes, municipalities and in country districts,which made for the stamping out of leprosy, would also tend to militate against tuberculosis". Dr. Muir described the methods by which the British Empire Relief Association would proceed to tackle the problem. Those were (1) to do away with the ignorance of doctors by seeing that proper instruction was given regarding leprosy in the medical curriculum, (2) to establish skin clinics in all important centres and (3) to carry on intensive propaganda throughout the Empire to make known fully the dire effects of this vile disease. An appeal was made to those present to help in making Bengal's quota to the fund.

Regarding the post-graduate teaching of the Calcutta University, the Vice-Chancellor at yesterday's meeting of the University Senate said: "His Excellency renewed the assurance which he gave at the last Convocation that the Government were prepared to give to the University adequate financial assistance for the post-graduate department and for any other needs of the University. The Government accepts the position that there must be expansion in the work of the University, but asks that if this involves further Government assistance they should be consulted beforehand."

TOWARDS A CRITICAL UNDERSTANDING OF JESUS I.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Mr. G. Y. Chitnis' letter from Oxford raises some very important questions. I think that he is correct in saying that Dr. Schweitzer did not go out as a 'missionary,'—in the technical sense of the word. But I know from his own lips that his devotion to Jesus Christ has been the origin of all that he has felt bound to do to relieve the terrible sufferings of mankind in Central Africa. Certainly he has gone, in this sense, as a message bearer of the good tidings of Jesus. All that I saw of him in England showed me that he himself had kept the simple piety of his childhood unbroken and was living daily in the consciousness of the presence of Jesus Christ.

Mr. Chitnis' further point in his letter, with regard to Dr. Schweitzer's historical representation of the character of Jesus, is one of supreme interest to me; and I shall be eagerly looking for his articles on the subject in the Young Men of India. I understand that recently the pendulum has swung back away from Dr. Schweitzer's own contention that the eschatological element in the Gospels is their primitive historic background and foundation. I would like to add that, from talks I had in England, I gathered that Dr. Schweitzer himself had somewhat receded from the extreme position taken up in his book, called The Quest of the Historical Jesus. Two or three vital issues present themselves. Perhaps the most vital is this: When did the extreme hostility against the Jews begin among the early Christians? Does it go back to Christ Himself and the Apostles, or was it a later development, due perhaps to the effects of persistent persecution? If the account in the early chapters of the Acts of the Apostles is to be relied on, and if the evidence of the Synoptic Gospels is also given full weight, it would appear that there was no really bitter hostility against the Jews as such in the earliest days. Indeed there would appear to have been some closeness of approach between the Jews themselves and the early Christian Church. This picture of early Christianity is singularly corroborated in Burkitt's little book called Christian Beginnings. But in such a chapter as the eighth chapter of St. John's Gospel we get quite another atmosphere and tone. There is a rooted hostility. We have here put in the mouth of Jesus Himself such words as, "Ye are of your father the Devil", spoken to the Jews as such. Personally I believe that this passage, as it stands, is quite unhistorical and that it represents a later phase in early Christianity, not the earliest record.

The chief difficulty, with regard to the extreme eschatological view of Schweitzer's early days, lies in this, that the passages, where these vehement expressions of eschatology are used, are those that seem poles apart from the whole picture of Abimes, such as is given vividly in other records of the teaching of Jesus. They appear to be fundamentally "violent". The real problem of Christ's historical character is to reconcile these passages with those which so clearly have about them the teaching which we meet in the Buddhism which sprang from India.

If Mr. Chitnis can do anything to resolve this paradox of history, he will be doing one of the greatest services; and I hope he will give his conclusions in the Indian Social Reformer as well as to the Young Men of India.

In conclusion, I would refer to a most unfortunate misunderstanding of Schweitzer on the part of Mr. Mahesh Chandra Ghose to which I called attention in the Modern Review. Mr. Ghose declared that Schweitzer along with Professor Drews and J. M. Robertson and W. B. Smith had conclusively proved that the Jesus of the Gospels had no historical existence. In his rejoinder, he referred to some passages at the end of Schweitzer's book. But again there was a misunderstanding of these very passages, which would require too much space to explain. I would wish to make it absolutely unquestioned, for anyone who reads Schweitzer, that the historical character of Jesus is to him fundamental and even axiomatic. The only difficulty to Schweitzer, as with all of us, has been to find out from the abundant historical evidence which we possess, what the true character of Jesus really was. Was Jesus, that is to say, really a fanatical enthusiast penetrated through and through with strongest Hebrew ideas of a divine display of force immediately impending on the lay world? Or does He represent a revolt from these fanatical Hebrew ideas prevalent in His time in the direction of a Gospel of goodwill and peace to all mankind?

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In the September 5th issue of your paper, I note that Mr. G. Y. Chitnis questions the accuracy of a statement made by Mr. C. F. Andrews about Dr. Schweitzer, and claims that the latter "has gone to Africa as a philanthropist and not as a missionary of the gospel of Jesus." I am not quite sure just how Mr. Chitnis would define the last-named phrase, viz., "the gospel of Jesus", but if by it he refers to the good news connected with God's Fatherly Love to mankind and its varied manifestations, then surely Dr. Schweitzer's own words confirm Mr. Andrews' statement. In his book, On the Edge of the Primeval Forest, the doctor has given us an insight into the nature of his work. He refers to an operation which he has performed, and then states :—

"The operation is finished, and in the half-lighted dormitory I watch for the sick man's awaking. Scarcely has he recovered consciousness when he stares about him and ejaculates again and again, "I've no more pain." His hand feels for mine and will not let it go. Then I begin to tell him and the others who are in the room that it is the Lord Jesus who has told the doctor and his wife to come to the Ogowe, and that White people in Europe give them the money to live here and cure the sick negroes. The African sun is shining through the coffee bushes into the dark shed, but we, black and white, sit side by side, and feel that we know by experience the meaning of the words, "And all ye are brethren."

With this quotation may be conjoined another from an earlier book of Dr. Schweitzer's, The Quest of the Historical Jesus. This is how the author closes his study in that book of Jesus[:

"He comes to us as One unknown without a name, as of old by the lakeside. He came to those men who knew Him not. He speaks to us the same word "Follow thou Me," and sets us to the tasks which He has to fulfil for our time. He commands. And to those who obey Him, whether they be wise or simple, He will reveal Himself in the toils, the conflicts, the sufferings which they shall pass through in His fellowship, and as an ineffable mystery they shall learn in their own experience who He is."

Dr. Schweitzer is undoubtedly a philanthropist, but he is a philanthropist who is also a messenger of Jesus Christ and who, by his life and actions, is seeking to make known to the ignorant people of Africa the gospel of Jesus.

THE CASE FOR EVOLUTION, I

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

On reading a letter—The Case Against Evolution—by Geo. F. Enoch in your weekly of the 29th August 1925, I cannot resist encroaching on some of your space to say something for Evolution.

"The people of Tennessee", says Mr. Enoch, "desire that their children should be taught any and every fact possible of biology, zoely, geology and botany, but not that speculative philosophy which some men call evolution." If the Tennessean legislators do wish to teach their children all facts pertaining to biological sciences, should not the children be taught evolution, which has explained so many of the biological facts? How could the relations existing and so very clear in the embryonic state of life, between the chordata and the achordata; the vertebrates and the non-vertebrates, the amphibians and the reptiles, the aves and the mammals, be explained? Or is it that God made them so and that all the species and orders existing to-day were so designed by the Almighty at the time of creation? What then can explain the coming into existence of new species and the passing away into oblivion of old species?

A hypothesis or a theory may not be a proved law—and they are not intended to be—, still the very fact that they can clearly and rationally explain many doubts proves their utility; and if a hypothesis is of some use to us why not know it? If we are to accept only complete theories and reject those that are on the way to completion, how can science progress? The object of these hypotheses is to elucidate certain scientific doubts at times perhaps partially. Besides NATURE cannot be bound down to very hard and fast rules which can easily be proved; it is only in its abnormalities that nature reveals its true identity. Avogadro merely suggested and hypothesised that gases consist of molecules and that at same conditions of temperature and pressure, equal volumes contain the same number of these molecules, to explain certain chemical inconsistencies. Avogadro could not prove his suggestion nor could his followers. Could one expect Physical Chemistry to have advanced so much if the great scientists that followed him refused to accept the hypothesis? The scientists knew that the hypothesis would be useful to them and so they not only accepted it but also studied it.

Science is no doubt speculative in a sense; to prove certain facts, the causes or effects, if not found, have to be speculated. These speculations become laws if from these the existing facts could be derived. Speculation precedes all laws and theories. How could the kinetic theory of gases have developed if certain fundamental facts were not hypothesised?

Evolution has not entered the field of religion and destroyed all sacred beliefs held by men of every religion. Religion has on the contrary supported and supplied material for existence to evolution. The various births of the Hindu Gods from Matsyavatara to Nrisimhavatara and from Nrisimhavatara to Krishnavatara in serial succession show the truth of evolutionism. Even one of our biographies of Jesus Christ in the Bible alleges the descent of Christ from King David and gives a genealogy tracing Christ's evolution through David from Abraham.

That belief in God (Religion) constitutes a bar to scientific inquiry, is quite a wrong notion. Science and Religion go side by side; they are both complementary and one cannot do without the other. Frederick, Lord Bishop of Exeter, in a lecture—on the apparent conflict between Science and Religion—to university students in 1878 said: "Religion and science both begin with the will. The will is to science the first example of power.....And the will is to Religion the recipient of Divine command.....Science postulates uniformity; Religion postulates liberty." The great scientist and philosopher, Huxley, has also said: "True Science and True Religion are twin sisters and the separation of either from the other is sure to prove the death of both. Science prospers exactly in proportion as it is religious; and religion flourishes exactly in proportion to the scientific depth and the firmness of its basis."

If the Tennessean Law wants to observe neutrality and have deep faith in Bryan-Butler's Fundamentalism, the case of each Tennessean would probably be like that of an English boy, having Mr. Butler's belief, as precisely worked out by Mr. Bernard Shaw in the New Leader: "Now I have

THE ASIATIC BILL.

In our article in the Overseas Supplement last month, we commented on the recent Asiatic Bill introduced in the Assembly of the Union of South Africa by Rev. Dr. Malan, the Minister of the Interior which, as we pointed out, is a measure that surpasses all its predecessors in iniquity and oppression. Since then, we have seen the full text of the bill, which has been published and widely commented upon in the Indian press. The Bill makes provisions for the reservation of residential and trading areas in Urban areas for certain persons having racial characteristics in common and to amend or repeal certain laws. The Bill, virtually, is an attempt to oust and segregate compulsorily the Indian community.

At present in Natal and the Cape Provinces an Indian is free to buy, sell or lease land. In Orange Free State and the Transvaal, certain restrictions in this respect exist. But the Bill aims at ousting Natal Indians particularly, for they have a population of 140,000. The Bill provides for areas to be set apart in towns and cities and only in such areas shall Indians be permitted to buy and sell lands. Such areas will be proclaimed by the Governor-General in Council. They will also have to trade in these areas only and no other. It further provides that no Indian shall buy or lease land more than 30 miles away from the coast line except from an Indian within that limit. This means that Indians will be deprived of the right of purchasing or leasing properties anywhere, as they are now entitled to do. Moreover, the Bill empowers the Governor-General to deproclaim such areas, and therefore no sense of security will be enjoyed by them even after they are segregated.

Some drastic changes are suggested to amend the Immigrants Regulation. If a domiciled Indian stays outside the Union for a period of three years, he will be declared a prohibited immigrant and will be called upon to deposit a bail of £100 to prove his domicile. Under "Deeming Order" by virtue of which Asiatics are declared economically unsuited to the requirements of the Union, hundreds of Indians will be declared prohibited Immigrants. Another aspect of this section of the Bill is that an Indian will not, after ten years from now, be able to come to India, marry here and take his wife to South Africa. Such are some of the salient features of this iniquitous anti-Asiatic legislation. The Bill will have retrospective effect from the 1st day of August 1925 so as "to prevent a scramble by the Asiatics to become possessed of the vested interests before the Bill could become law." The Indian Opinion declares that "the death knell of the Indians in South Africa has been sounded by Dr. Malan."

In reply to a deputation that waited on the Viceroy in January last, His Excellency replied in very sympathetic terms and said that he was "deeply concerned at the turn of events and the possible reaction on Imperial relationship". His Excellency further stated that the Government of India were wholeheartedly at one with the object of the deputation in its desire to be of assistance to the cause of Indians in South Africa. At the opening of the Legislative Assembly last month, when the Viceroy had just returned from England, he declared that he wished that he was in a position to report an absence of controversial matters in regard to the position of Indians in South Africa. We have no reason to doubt the sincerity of His Excellency's anxiety to help our countrymen in South Africa as much as he is in a position to do so, But the irony of the situation is that in spite of the fact that the Government of India and all shades of political opinion are unanimous on this particular question, the position of Indians in South Africa has been steadily growing from bad to worse.

Mr. C. F. Andrews, in a series of exhaustive and illuminating articles recently contributed to the Indian Daily Mail, analyses the whole situation and comes to the conclusion that the Indian problem in South Africa is fundamentally a colour problem. Referring to the white settler in South Africa, Mr. Andrews says: "All that he wants is this, that the Indians should leave the country and let the White man deal with the African face to face, as it were, in a single combat, and also to let him alone with the spoils of South Africa and the prize of victory when he has, as he hopes, defeated and segregated the African race".

Obviously the Union Government in its attempt to solve the colour problem has entirely ignored the interest of the British Empire, of which it is an integral part, and has indulged in a short-sighted policy of overlooking the rights of Imperial citizenship. It is quite evident from their reckless policy of Anti-Asiatic legislation that they do not care a rap for the British Empire, and much less for the Indian Government. Otherwise, how is it that even after the Viceroy's solemn apprehensions that the present policy of the South African Government might react on Imperial relationship, they have proceeded with their nefarious work and introduced the Asiatic Bill? The Natal Advertiser describes the

Bill as "at once sinister, short-sighted, and ineffective".

In the Council of State the other day, Sir Fazal-e-Hussein was more "active" than Sir B. N. Sarma. The Hon'ble Member in a sympathetic speech said that the Asiatic Bill dropped as a "bombshell" on the Government of India. He was not "altogether without hope". He believed in the "proverbial patience of the Orient". A very minute scrutiny of what the Hon'ble Member said reveals the utter hopelessness and tragic weakness of the Government of India. Their anxiety, on the other hand, is so great that even Col. Sir Umar Hayat Khan was heard rattling his sabre to help Indians in South Africa. He said: "Let the Government of India be allowed to settle the question with South Africa direct, if necessary by force of arms". That is an indication of the Government of India's attitude towards the problem. But they are helpless.

It transpires from the discussion in the Legislative Assembly on the position of Indians in South Africa that negotiations are still going on between the two Governments and that "the Indian Government did not consider that the time had yet come for action under the Reciprocity Bill". Pandit Motilal Nehru and Mr. M. A. Jinnah discussed the whole problem with the Standing Emigration Committee and concluded that it is primarily an Imperial problem and therefore the Imperial Government should intervene and "pull up" General Hertzog who is freely proceeding with anti-Asiatic Legislation.

We understand that the Viceroy has consented to receive an Indian deputation from South Africa. Our experience is that such deputations do not materially change the situation and are, therefore, more or less futile. We know the limitations of the Government of India and their helplessness to compel the Union Government to retrace the step they have taken. But His Majesty's Government can disallow the Bill even if the Union Government carry it through both the Parliament and the Senate, and it is the duty of the Government of India to represent the grave consequences of the Bill, if brought into effect by the Union Government, and influence His Majesty's Government to disallow the Bill. We think that at this juncture the Dominions of Australia, New Zealand and Canada should lend the Imperial Government their moral support, so that pressure might be brought to bear upon South Africa to abandon its anti-Asiatic policy, which is sapping the very foundations of the British Commonwealth of Nations.

INDIANS IN BRITISH GUIANA.

(By Mr. S. A. Waiz.)

In 1854 slave trade was abolished by the British Parliament, and the planters in British Guiana began to explore other avenues for cheap labour. The emancipation of the slaves in 1834 brought matters to a crisis. The free negro was "incapable of giving any steady work". The planters, faced with ruin, had recourse to immigration and introduced a large number of Portuguese, natives of Madeira, Chinese, and Indians. It was felt at the time that "Indians with their love for agricultural and pastoral pursuits will probably leave a greater influence on the future of the Colony than all other races put together". But these various attempts at "Colonisation both before and after the abolition of the indenture system was to increase the "working power" of the Colony, which looked only to the immediate labour requirements without contemplating a system of colonisation. Indians had no special inducements to remain in the Colony after the expiry of their agreement. Therefore, it is not Indians who have failed, but the authorities in British Guiana, who did not make sufficient arrangement to get the best out of Indians.

Indians were first introduced into British Guiana under a system of indenture in 1838, which continued until the efforts of the late Mr. Gokhale abolished the "Semi-slavery" system in 1917.

When the shortage of labour grew great in British Guiana, a deputation headed by Mr. Joseph Nunan and Mr. Luckoo with an offer of new colonisation, the terms of which were more favourable, visited India in 1918. The Indian Legislature before deciding to re-open immigration decided to send a Committee of enquiry. Owing to various hindrances the Committee did not reach British Guiana till February 1922. But meanwhile it transpired that the Nunan-Luckoo scheme was not supported by the authorities in British Guiana, and that the Governor was submitting his own scheme, which on closer attention was found as a mere bait and that in reality it was a labour scheme rather than a colonisation scheme.

Owing to radical difference of opinion between the Indian members and their English colleagues, the Report of the Committee remained un-published for over a year and a half. Meanwhile the Indian situation in Kenya and South Africa was growing from bad to worse, and the country as a whole determined not to open immigration to British Guiana. So in spite of the "wild promises" of the Nunan-Luckoo scheme and the "Governor Scheme," the whole prospect of immigration to British Guiana fell through.

It was reported by the Committee of enquiry that, apart from the coast line which may be described as the "magnificent colony", the interior is "a land of marshy swamps, mosquitœs, of malaria and filiariasis". There is very little land for cultivation and no attention is paid to sanitation, drainage and water-supply. There is no good drinking-water. Moreover, on 23rd November 1923 the British Guiana East Indian Association passed a resolution to the effect that the Indian community of British Guiana would not favour emigration from India until 1930, as they require time to settle down and to raise themselves from the prevailing state of depression and backwardness. They urge that the immediate resumption of emigration from India would aggravate and prolong the existing evils.

To add to this a most unfortunate incident happened which is known as the Shooting Affair at Reumveldt on the 3rd April 1924, when in a riot following a labour unrest, 13 persons including two women were killed. Captain Ramsay's unauthorised firing on "an unarmed mob who was clamouring for better wages" was responsible for further alienating all sympathy, if there ever any existed, for emigration at any time to British Guiana. The affair was investigated into by a Commission presided over by the Hon. Mr. J. W. Gilchrist, which reported that the shooting was "justifiable homicide". This verdict has sealed the fate of any colonisation scheme for a decade at least.

The total population of British Guiana as shown by the latest census report is 297,691 out of which Indians form 124, 938, or 45% of the whole population but 1,529 less than in 1911. Owing to a slump in the Sugar Industry, the country is greatly depressed, the wages gone down, and there is great unemployment. During the last ten years several hundreds of Indians have returned to India, but under normal conditions, the Indian labourer is better off in British Guiana than his compatriot in India.

It was reported in January 1925 that Mr. Amery, the Colonial Secretary, speaking at an opening of an office and show-room established by the British Guiana Government at Westminster, remarked that there were few richer parts in the British Empire than British Guiana,.....and that the Government and the people of India were becoming aware of the fact that British Guiana provided a favourable opening for Indians.....The Government of India were making investigation through a Commissioner. It was suspected in some quarters that the Government of India were making secret arrangement for Indian emigration to British Guiana, but on enquiry the Government of India stated that they did not attach any official significance to Mr. Amery's speech and that his statement was made entirely in his individual capacity. But in reply to a question in the Legislative Assembly, Government said that they would be able to make an announcement on the deputation of an officer to the colony before the end of this month.

There is no racial bar existing in British Guiana and no legal discriminations are imposed upon Indians, who enjoy equal rights and privileges with other nationals. But though Indians have the franchise, they cannot become voters, because they are illiterate. Our ubiquitious friends, the missionaries also, discourage Indians to take part in politics. Indian children are entitled to free compulsory education, but the Indian parents do not avail themselves of this opportunity, because they are afraid the Christian Missionaries will make all attempts to convert their children to Christianity.

The Hindustanee is the only monthly magazine issued from George Town which is devoted to the moral, social, political, religious, ecomomic and general welfare of the Indian community in British Guiana.

It is earnestly hoped that Arya Samaj and the Anjuman Ishait-i-Islam and other religious bodies of the kind would send out workers and teachers to look after the moral and economic interest of Indians in that Colony.

The Malacca Outrage: We published in the July number of our Overseas Supplement details of a sensational Malacca rape case in which outrage was perpetrated on two Nair girls in a Malaya estate, and the father and brother of the girls were convicted on a charge of extortion by a European Magistrate. His Lordship, Justice A. V. Brown, in quashing the conviction, had some pertinent observations to make on the appeal preferred by the accused-appellants before the Johore Supreme Court on August 6th. "In this case", observed His Lordship, "the two appellants were convicted on two charges of what may be termed attempted extortion, and the suggestion appears to be that they demanded money from the two Europeans, Aylward and Brooker, telling them they had made complaints against them in regard to the detention of the two girls, and suggesting that if this money was paid, the complaint would be withdrawn. I am inclined to think that charges like this under such circumstances, could not have been properly laid. But even if such charges could be laid under this Section, it does not appear to me that the evidence supported the charges. There is not sufficient evidence of any actual threats being made, or that accusation had been made of any definite offence. That being so, I propose to allow the appeal, without calling upon counsel to argue it. My view is that the Magistrate was not justified in convicting these two men, even though he was satisfied that the story told by the two complainants in the case, was true. Even if their stories were true, there is not sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction." The Straits Times, an influential paper in the Settlement, commenting on the case calls attention to the need for redressing the wrong done to the poor victims and for taking adequate steps to see that such incidents do not happen in the future. The paper also draws attention to the danger of investing inexperienced men with larger powers as Magistrates and considers the whole business from first to last as unsatisfatory and that it would be sound public policy to refer it to an experienced Judge and one or two lay assessors giving power to enquire into all the circumstances by taking evidence on oath and extending the scope of the investigation so as to get a considered opinion as to whether present legal arrangements are satisfactory. It also suggests that every female immigrant should be under the express protection of the law as against the managerial staff of the estate and that her mere ignorant consent should be no defence in a prosecution for seductions. We hope the authorities of Malaya will institute a searching enquiry into the whole matter.

Government's Replies to Sir Purshottamdas' Questions Regarding Indians in Ceylon: From the Government's replies to a series of questions by Sir Purshottamdas Thakurdas regarding Indians in Ceylon, which we printed in our Overseas Supplement last month, it is clear that on several points—the registration of voters in the Indian constituency in Ceylon, the restriction on Indians born in Ceylon from registering as voters in the Indian constituency, etc.,—the Government's information goes to show that representations made by the local Indian community are being considered by the Government of Ceylon, and that the developments are being watched by the Government of India. As regards inadequate representation of Indians in the Ceylon legislature, the Government's reply shows that they are aware that the present provision of two elected seats is considered by the Indian community as utterly inadequate, but definite reply was not given as to whether they would make any representation to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Replying to Sir Purshottamdas' questions regarding the ban on Indians from entering the Colonial Civil Service and Government service generally in Ceylon, Sir Alexander Muddiman, the Home Member, explained that "the present position is that while Sinhalese along with other British subjects are eligible for admission to the Indian Civil Service competitive examination in London, candidates for admission to the Indian Civil Service competitive examination in India must be of Indian domicile. Only five Sinhalese have entered the Indian Civil Service during the last 35 years. Consequently the Government of India have not hitherto considered that the question has attained sufficient practical importance to require action on their part, but they will now consider whether any action can suitably be taken." As regards Government clerical services, the Home Member went on to say that the Government were not aware that Sinhalese were ordinarily admitted to clerical services in India as such appointments were almost invariably filled up from residents of the province or locality concerned. The Government did not, therefore, consider that any practical advantage would be derived by making any representations to the Secretary of State for the Colonies as suggested by Sir Purshottamdas. When Sir Purshottamdas raised the question of principle, the Home Member said Government acted not merely on principle but on practical grounds, and that if definite information that a large number of Sinhalese enter the clerical service in India could be furnished, he would take the matter up. This is not what Ceylon Indians wanted. They want not restrictions to be imposed on Sinhalese from entering the Government service in India, but the removal of restrictions on them from entering the Government service in Ceylon. As regards the minimum wage of 50 cents mentioned in the Ceylon Government's communique referred to by Sir Purshottamdas, the Government of India, while admitting that they were aware of the dissatisfaction among the Indian community at this low rate of wages, did not mention what they propose to do to allay this discontent.

Indians in New Zealand: With reference to a recent letter to the Bombay Corporation from the New Zealand Government regarding the treatment of Indians in the Dominion, Mr. C. F. Andrews states in an article to the Indian Daily Mail that since the war a deliberate anti-Asiatic campaign was undertaken by passing a new Immigration Act and making admission dependent on the discretion of the Agent General of Immigration. The comparison of figures of Indian immigrants during the years 1915 to 20 with those for years 1920 to 25 would, Mr. Andrews thinks, reveal the policy of White New Zealand pursued by the Dominion.

Indians in South Africa: The Bombay Corporation unanimously passed on September 10th a resolution requesting the Government of India to intercede on behalf of the Indian residents of South Africa regarding the Asiatic Bill introduced in the Union Parliament as suggested in a telegram recently published in the papers from the President of the Natal Indian Congress.

Indian Lascars and South African Sea-Men's Strike: We are glad that the idea of despatching Indian lascars to take the part as 'black-legs' in the place of the sea-men who struck work in South Africa, to be used by the employers against the sea-men in order to break their strike, was dropped. The sea-men struck work against a reduction of wages and their fight for a living wage should command the sympathy of all. If the proposed course were adopted, the bitter racial hatred existing in South Africa against Indians would only be intensified.

INDIANS ABROAD: SOME CENSUS FIGURES.

In the following article which we take from a recent issue of the Servant of India an attempt is made by Mr. J. B. Sen to present relevant figures, mostly from the latest census reports, concerning Indians living in British Guiana. The most important fact of the intercensal period is the abolition of the indenture system of recruitment. The abolition of this iniquitous and degrading system has to a great extent brought emigration under the normal operation of economic forces, enabling surplus Indian population to seek higher economic levels outside India. Civic and political disabilities, however, retard and in many cases prohibit the free outflow of the Indian population.

British Guiana.

The area of British Guiana is 89,480 sq. miles. The population in 1921 was 297,691, an increase of 1,650 persons over that of 1911. The total number of East Indians enumerated in 1921 was 124,938, showing a decrease of 1,529 from the 1911 census. Of the total Indian population 69,130 were males and 55,808 females or approximately 80 females for every 100 males. The following table shows conjugal conditions among Indians:

| | Male | Female | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| Married | 26,400 | 24,717 | 51,117 |
| Unmarried | 40,350 | 27,210 | 67,560 |
| Widowed | 2,380 | 3,881 | 6,261 |

Of the total number of children of school-going age, nearly 19,000, only 7,459 (M. 5,085, F. 2574) attended school. The Compulsory Education Act has not been effectively applied in the case of Indian children. The Indian population can be arranged as follows according to religious persuasions: Hindus—95,473, Mahomedans—18,217, Christians—10,000 (nearly.) The following figures show the electoral position of the different races in the colony: total adult male population—85,929. Total number of registered voters—4,976, Percentage of voters of different races to their population respectively: European—43·7, East Indian—10, black and coloured—88.

The Governor of British Guiana is assisted by a Court of Policy, a legislative body consisting of seven official members, and a Combined Court of Policy containing, in addition to the above, six financial representatives elected by the registered voters. The Combined Court considers the estimate of expenditure, raises the ways and means to meet it, and this court alone can levy taxes. Only one Indian has yet been returned to the Combined Court and no Indian has ever sat on the Court of Policy.

It will be seen that there are certain features common to all the four colonies. They are:

(1) Indians form a very large portion of the population of these colonies. Of the total population they comprise 70 per cent. in Mauritius, 39 per cent. in Fiji, 42 per cent. in British Guiana and 33 per cent. in Trinidad.

(2) Though, on the whole, the colonial Indians have a higher economic level in the colonies than the level they left or would enjoy in India, by far the largest number are employed as agricultural labourers and form what is known as the 'coolie' class.

(3) Educationally the colonial Indians are very backward. The colonial Governments do not offer them sufficient educational facilities. In British Guiana the Eduction Act is not effectively applied in the case of Indian children. Also, the schools being mostly denominational (Christian), Indian parents dislike to send their children to such schools.

(4) The influence of Indians in the municipal and political life of the colonies is negligible, due to their backwardness and lack of organization and leadership. No great improvement is possible until the colonial Indians pull themselves out of the rut of 'coolie' mentality and 'coolie' ideals of life. They have yet to traverse the distance between a 'coolie' and a citizen. Towards the achieving of this end they must rely on their own initiative more than on anything else, help from India included. Their civic and political importance must more and more correspond to their numerical strength. It will be to the permanent benefit of the colonies if their Governments recognize early that in the transformation of the Indian from the 'coolie' to the citizen lies the prosperity of these colonies.

not the privileges of knowing Mr. Butler personally, and therefore, cannot guess what effect all these complications of what now seems to him to be a simple and straightforward matter may have on him. But I can describe what happens in England when a boy who has been taught to believe what Mr. Butler believes about the Bible, discovers, as he must discover, when he grows, if he ever troubles himself about the matter at all, that he has been mistaught and deceived, and that no churchman or scholar of any distinction now regards that view of the Bible as other than grossly ignorant and superstitious. Please mark that he does not become an Evolutionist, nor a Rationalist nor a Scientist, nor a cultivated Botonian Pragmatic Agnostic. He just throws all metaphysical ideas overboard because he has been cheated once and is determined not to be cheated twice." That is the danger of FUNDAMENTALISM!

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Your correspondent, Geo. F. Enoch, seems to think there is a case against evolution because it has not been proved. If that is so, the case is much stronger against all religions, none of which has ever been proved or even shown to have the slightest foundation. He is certainly not right in saying that 'Science is a body of ascertained truths and facts.' Science is a good deal more than that. Science classifies facts, co-ordinating them so as to make them simpler to understand. Isolated phenomena, however true they may be, do not constitute science. It is only when certain phenomena are found to be of a similar nature, and a theory is formed so as to explain them simply, that science begins to deal with them. When there are rival theories which explain the phenomena equally well, that one is accepted which gives the simplest explanation. This does not mean that a particular scientific theory accepted at any time is the absolute truth. Only religions pretend to give out absolute truth. Science is not so conceited. It is content with giving the best possible explanation available at the moment, and to accept a better one when it comes. Newton's Law of Gravitation was a scientific theory and was accepted so long as there were no contradictions and no better explanation was forthcoming. Einstein's theory of Relativity has upset Newton's theory, and has become the current theory because it explains things better. This does not mean that it is the absolute truth. The fall of an apple from a tree was an every-day fact. It was not science. It was brought into the realm of science by Newton who tried to frame a law which would explain all similar phenomena.

Evolution is such a scientific theory. It does not matter if Darwin's ideas are not exactly accepted today. It is gross misrepresentation to say that Mendelism or anything else has disproved the theory of evolution. The theory may have been modified. But neither biology nor anything else has done anything to undermine the foundations as your correspondent asserts. He says it contradicts Genesis. Most certainly it does. But if that is a reason for not teaching it, practically all sciences will have to be excluded, at any rate, until geology fulfils G.F.E's expectations and upsets evolution, which it is not at all likely to do in a hurry!

The principal argument comes out in the last paragraph of his letter, namely, that evolution is contrary to the most sacred beliefs, or the most sacred ignorance of the parents of the children. The parents have a simple remedy. They have only to enact a law that teachers should be as ignorant as themselves of the elements of science. But even American parents will not be able to suppress knowledge!

A TOURIST'S JUDGMENT.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

My attention has been called to a letter by Mr. S. A. Waiz appearing in your issue of August 1st. under the heading of "A Tourist's Judgment", in which the following statement occurs :—

"Even in England there are people who "worship" a hair of Cairy's beard which is most religiously kept in a glass case at the Regent Park Theological College of the Baptist Mission (London).

The statement is quite untrue, and I have not yet encountered the "American Tourist" who is alleged to have called at the College this year and found it true. What any visitor might find is a medallion containing locks of the hair of Carey, Marshman and Ward, exhibited in the same case with the surveying instruments of the missionary, George Grenfell. But I have not yet seen anyone worshipping these exhibits, or any other objects in our Museum, to which I have now added your correspondent's letter, as another interesting curiosity.

24th August 1925. Yours etc.,
H. WHEELER ROBINSON,
Principal of Regent's Park
College, London, N.W.S.

MR. WAIZ'S REPLY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The letter of Rev. Wheeler Robertson, Principal, Regent's Park College, London, is an interesting little document. He has isolated one sentence from my letter in question and has based his opinions of what I said as being "quite untrue". That particular sentence should be interpreted in the light of my full statement. You will find that in order to show that the phrase "worship" was not my version but that of the American's, it is put within inverted commas. Even when I used it in the sentence which the learned divine quotes in his letter, it is a borrowed expression. I objected to that word which the American persisted in using for, say, "reverential curiosity". Now, when he tells me that, what I had told him is a fact, it does not mean that he saw Englishmen and English women worshipping a hair from Cairy's beard, but that he actually saw it kept at the College, which he was reluctant to believe when I first told him. What I really meant was, that the Indian Muslim did no more worship the relic at Delhi than the English Christian did the relic at Regent's Park College. The logical inference, therefore, from his letter is that he now agrees with me that the Muslims in Delhi do not worship the hair from the Prophet's beard. I regret, however, that I did not make myself quite clear.

Westerners are prone to overlook their own weakness and exaggerate ours. I have often seen them turning their noses at Maulvis and Pandits in mosques and temples where the latter ask for bakhshish. They say it is wrong for these people to spread their hands for alms. I quite agree with them. But what I cannot understand is that they forget that these very things are done in their own countries, and they do not seem to take any notice of them. One of the priests at the Milan Cathedral (Italy) refused to give back my hat to me unless I tipped him ! !

"O wad some power the giftie gie us
To see ourselves as others see us".

If Rev. Robertson failed to encounter the American tourist, I believe it was the misfortune of the latter, even as it was mine a couple of years ago.

I thank the Principal for immortalising my name by depositing and exhibiting my letter in the College Museum.

Bombay, Yours etc.,

ABOLITION OF SLAVERY IN NEPAL.

When the wheel of progress is moving in all directions in this country, it is a pleasure to note that far off Nepal is no idle spectator either. She has put up a stiff fight to do away with slavery—an institution as old as her religious traditions. The initiative in this direction was first taken by the Nepal Government as far back as 1896 S. E, when a "Lal Mohar" was promulgated "in which the four 'Varnas' and thirty-six castes were emphatically prohibited from recruiting or giving any free man, woman or child into slavery." This has since passed into law and has been re-enacted under every successive Government. Other laws also were subsequently enacted aiming at the amelioration of the condition of slaves. But the effect of the laws was not much in evidence as till recently the law codes remained confined within the four walls of a court and knowledge of their contents was the monopoly of a few. Now all that has changed with the progress of education and even the slaves are beginning to pick up a knowledge of their rights.

The mass mind was thus gradually prepared to receive the memorable appeal to the people of Nepal for the emancipation of slaves and abolition of slavery in the country, made on Friday, the 14th Marga, 1981 S.E. (28th November 1924), by His Highness Maharaja Chandra Shum Shere Jung Bahadur Rana, Prime-Minister and Marshal, Nepal. In his own scholarly way the Maharaja proved in his appeal, by quotations from the Hindu Shastrakaras and Western jurists and economists, that the institution of slavery was immoral, irreligious, unjust and unprofitable. He also put forth a constructive scheme for the abolition of slavery, which he summed up in three proposals as follows :—

(1) On and from a certain date, to be fixed as early as possible in consonance with the general opinion, the legal status of slavery do cease and terminate throughout the kingdom of Nepal.

(2) The owners be given the statutory price for every slave held by them according to the register, over whom claim has been fully established.

(3) The slaves, freed from the fixed date, are to be apprenticed to their owners for a period of seven years : that is, the slaves should be bound to labour for their masters, the latter in return providing them with food and clothing as at present.

There were 51,000 slaves, and Government being prepared to pay the statutory price of slaves to their owners, the Maharaja set apart 14 lakhs of rupees for the purpose and promised as much more as might be necessary.

The Maharaja's appeal received general support, and was so very successful that in Katmandu, the capital, all the slaves were emancipated within a short time. In the districts also the work is being carried on with great vigour and earnestness and already a large number of slaves have been declared free men. It is hoped that the time is not far distant when there will not be a single slave in the State of Nepal—Forward, Calcutta.

THE PLACE OF SOCIAL REFORM.

New India (Madras) writes :—A nation's life cannot legitimately, and without incalculable harm, be divided off into insulated cells of politics, social reform etc. It was, indeed, this tendency in India, resulting from the disorganisation of her own inborn attitude to life by reason of foreign domination, that was responsible for much of the lack of perspective and dissipation of effort visible some time ago in our public life. Then the principle was propounded by Ranade and others that a root and branch reform, an advance all along the line, is the very symbol of life in any social organisation. That principle is now the guiding principle of action everywhere. If particular emphasis is laid on political reform just now, it is because we have become conscious that our political disabilities are not only blocking avenues of advance in all directions, but are also undermining the energies of our National Will for endeavour in every field; and not because "those who have clamoured most for political reform are antagonistic to social reform, being fearful of untoward consequences," as The Madras Mail gratuitously assumes, nor because there is any lack of "a spirit of service, a sense of responsibility for one's fellows, out of which reforms spring." And it will grow apace, without however monopolising attention, as The Mail wishes.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Late Mr. C. N. Ramiah : Madras has lost one of her silent and unassuming social workers by the premature death of Mr. C.N. Ramiah, B.A., B. L, High Court Vakil. As the Secretary of the Southern India Brahmo Samaj, he was doing splendid work. The Adi-Dravidas of Madras recognised him as one of their trusted helpers. During the mill strike at Pulianthope, he went to their rescue and boldly championed the cause of the depressed classes, unmindful of the serious personal risks then involved in it. He also took keen interest in solving the problem of social purity and was an active member of the Hindu Yuvathi Sevanalayam (managed by Shrimati Yamini Purna Tilakamma.) He never courted self-advertisement nor aimed at leadership. He was always content to remain a humble humanitarian worker, pure and simple. His sisters, Dr. (Mrs.) Muthu Lakshmi Ammal, M. B. & C. M., and Miss Nalla Muthu, M. A, L. T., are now in England in pursuit of higher studies and we convey our heartfelt condolences to them and the other members of the bereaved family.

Convicted Persons and the Legislatures : The Assembly passed on September 16th by 48 votes against 47 Mr. Shamlal Nehru's resolution recommending to the Governor-General-in-Council that the rules made under the Government of India Act, 1919, for elections to the Indian and Provincial Legislatures be so amended as to remove all disqualifications which are at present imposed upon any person against whom a conviction by a criminal court involving a sentence of transportation or imprisonment for a period of more than one year is subsisting.

Animal Sacrifices and Excise Policy in Pudukotah : At the Pudukotah Council on September 8th a resolution was carried prohibiting animal sacrifices in temples. The Government also accepted a resolution appointing a committee of officials and non-officials to examine the question of drink.

In Aid of Rescue Home for Indian Women: The members of the Bombay Presidency Women's Council are holding an American sale at the Town Hall on Monday, September 21st, the proceeds from which are to be devoted to the Council's Rescue Home for Indian women, which is sorely in need of funds, and the general expenses of the work of the Council. The American part of the sale, we understand, comes from the idea that each member of the Council is expected to contribute one or two articles for sale and to buy at least one to take away. In this connection it is stated that useful articles such as tray cloths, dusters, handkerchiefs etc., or articles of fancy work will be preferred. Several stalls will display needlework, china vases and various useful articles for the home, and in addition there will be a fish pond for the kiddies, a stall with Indian sweets and pickles and a tea room where tea will be served at eight annas a head. Helpers at the various stalls include Mrs. Debdashti, Mrs. Mirza Ali Akbar Khan, Mrs. Shah, Mrs. Rustomjee, Mrs. Sirur, Mrs. Chandavarkar, Mrs. Byramjee Jeejeebhoy, Mrs. Duggan, Mrs. Foziar, Miss Atenwala, Mrs. P. M. Kanga, Mrs. Gilroy, Mrs. Hatim Tyabji, Mrs. Cosmos Fernandes. In order that the purdah lady members of the Women's Council might take part in the sale it will be open to ladies only from 4-30 to 6-30 p.m. when a variety entertainment arranged by Mrs. Sabavala will be held to which everybody will be admitted. No charge will be made for entrance to the sale but tickets for the entertainment at one rupee each may be obtained from the Secretary at the Council offices in the Town Hall any day of the week but Saturday between the hours of 11 and 1.

The Madar Sanatorium: This Sanatorium at Madar, near Ajmer, is intended for the treatment only of patients in the early stage of Tuberculosis. A Medical certificate from a recognised physician should be submitted by the applicant. As a general rule patients need to stay at least two months. A limited number of "N" cases will be admitted by special arrangement. Methodist patients must bring a letter of recommendation from the District Superintendent or the Manager of the institution from which they come, who will be responsible for the payment of Rs. 10 per month for each patient. Non-Methodist Christians must bring a letter of recommendation from some responsible person or pay Rs. 20 in advance. In the case of Non-Christians the nominal fee for poor people is Rs. 10 per month, but others are expected to pay according to their ability, and to furnish their own food. Some family quarters are available. Each patient should bring three changes of clothing, a warm coat, a cup and a plate and sufficient clean bedding, including one rezai and two blankets. Patients coming without previous arrangement and due notice, may not be admitted. It is understood that many Hindoos, Mahomedans and Christians from as far as Bengal, Punjab, Sind and Gujarat are availing themselves of the Sanatorium. All letters, telegrams, money orders etc. should be addressed to the Superintendent.

Removal of Restriction on ex-enemy aliens: The Government of India have just decided to withdraw the general restriction on the entry of ex-enemy aliens into India. We hope the Government will also abolish the restrictions on alien Christian missionary societies' organisations and individuals which will facilitate their coming in large numbers to India to continue their social and philanthropic activities in the country.

The Glasgow Tragedy: Judgment has been delivered in the Glasgow outrage case in which a mob attacked eight Indians in a house in Glasgow, as a result of which one Indian was fatally stabbed and others sustained injuries. The first accused has been sentenced to death for the murder of the Indian, the second to seven years' penal servitude for culpable homicide and the third to nine months' imprisonment for intimidation.

Compulsory Military Training for Students in C. P.: The Governor-General has refused permission to Dr. B. S. Moonje, leader of the C. P. Council Swaraj Party, to introduce a Bill providing for a compulsory course of training in infantry, drill and musketry for students in High Schools. Permission has been refused under Section 80 (A) of the Government of India Act, which provides that the Local Legislature may not take into consideration any law regulating any central subject without the previous sanction of the Governor-General. Dr. Moonje contends that his Bill seeks in no way to regulate any central subject.

Religious Education: The Director of Education in Cochin State has ordered that religious instruction should not be imparted during class hours in the Trichur St. Mary's English School. Vehement protests against this order are being made by the Catholic Christians of the State. Mr. Paul Mampilly, M.L.C., presided over an influential meeting of the Catholics of Narakkal the other day. It was stated at the meeting that the present order was a serious violation of the orders of the Sirkar to Catholic School managers granting them the right to teach catechism in so far as the Catholic pupils were concerned at any time during or after class hours. Resolutions were passed requesting the Director to cancel the order.

The Dowry Curse among Catholics: Commenting on the evil of the dowry system in South Canara, the Catholic Leader writes: "We believe the obnoxious system prevails also among the Catholics of the Tinnevelly District. This system is the cause of much worry and anxiety to many a Catholic parent, and we trust that public-spirited Catholic gentlemen will take effective measures to root out the practice or at least mitigate the evils of the institution. It is a pity that even educated young men should demand a determined sum of money in return for the marriage of a particular girl."

Widow Remarriages: Reports of 339 widow marriages have been received from the different branches and co-workers of Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha, Lahore (Punjab) throughout India in the month of August 1925. The total number of marriages held in the current year i.e., from 1st January to the end of August 1925 has reached 1589 as detailed below: i. According to Caste: Brahmin 299, Khatri 353, Arora 295, Aggarwal 115, Kaisth 51, Rajput 120, Sikhs 106, Misc. 250, Total 1589. ii. According to Provinces: Punjab and N. W. F. P. 1197, Delhi 33, Sindh 35, U. P. 220, Bengal 37, Madras 19, Bombay 7, C. I. 2, Rajputana 9, Hyderabad (Da) 5, Assam 25, Total 1589. iii. Voluntary donation received during the month is Rs. 70-0-0 and total during the year is Rs. 1303-4-0.

Schools in Jails: At a meeting held on the 2nd September, the Standing Finance Committee of Burma Legislative Council approved of the experimental introduction of opening of Schools with qualified teachers and libraries in the five district jails for one year in the first place with effect from the 1st March, 1926 The curriculum consists of reading, writing, arithmetic, elementary geography, history and health lectures.

Women's Part in Social Work: Commenting on the appeal made by Mrs. Ramanbhai Mahipatram Nilkanth, President of the Bombay Provincial Social Conference, to educated ladies to take up the programme of social reform as it contains many items chiefly concerning women, New India, Madras, writes: "We demur respectfully to the statement that women "should leave men to do other things," or that because "at any rate, the problems relating to women can best be solved by women themselves," therefore, "it is high time now that men should be relieved of this part of their work". Women must be in all men's work, and men in all women's, if real progress is to be achieved. We entirely disagree with the statement that any part of social work "is their (women's) own work". It is both men's and women's, at least the defects in it are due to men's wrong actions in the past, and they must now work with women, and under their guidance to set them right."

Poona Depressed Classes Mission Society: From the inspection remarks of the Assistant Deputy Educational Inspectors on the five educational institutions conducted by the Poona D. C. M. Society, viz., the Central Primary Boys' School, D. C. M. Society's Girls' School, Tailoring Class, Night Class and New Modikhana Primary School, we are glad to find that the Schools are making good progress. There is, however, a low attendance in some of the schools. We need hardly say that the Society deserves the encouragement of all in the educational work which it is doing on behalf of the depressed classes.

Age of Consent: Commenting on the Age of Consent Bill recently passed by the Legislative Assembly, the Praja Bandhu of Ahmedabad writes:—Though such a Bill is quite necessary for the improvement of our race, we should not overlook one of the objections which the orthodox raise that "one conviction would do away with the married life of young couples." After the Bill is passed in the Council of State and becomes an Act, if it is strictly enforced, many a husband would have to go to jail. There were amendments to modify punishment in the case of husbands but they were rejected. Even the Act, as it is, is not strictly enforced and we do not think that after it is amended it will be strictly enforced specially in the case of husbands. Its enforcement is difficult in the case of marital relation, and that difficulty can be avoided by prohibiting marriage before a certain age. Social reformers should aim at fixing the age of marriage by law rather than raising the age of consent in the case of married girls. To permit marriage but to prohibit marital relation is preposterous and mischievous. It is far more reasonable and desirable to prohibit marriage itself before a certain age.

Crime in America: The Catholic Leader of the 10th September writes: "Americans are alarmed at the enormous growth of crime and are urging the need of religion as the only effective remedy for the evils of the day. The task of suppressing crime and of supporting criminals costs America three times as much as to run its Government. Mr. Charles W. Shinn, manager of a "drive" for $225,000 by the New Jersey Protestant Council of Religious Education, declared in a recent address: "The criminality, law-breaking and common dishonesty of the American people cost us three times what it costs to run the Government—more than ten billions a year. The people of New Jersey and the nation as tax-payers and rent-payers must foot this huge bill. It is cheaper to invest money in the character-building process of religious education than to build jails and reformatories to protect us from the results of our neglect." It is only some standard of right and wrong which makes and keeps a man good and only religious education can furnish this standard; for conduct, in the absence of religion, will be largely determined by motives of expediency, advantage or tradition."

NOTES

Dasra or Durga Puja: The Durga Puja celebrations which are generally observed every year by the Hindus throughout the country, though with slight differences in the outward ceremonials according to the peculiar customs of different provinces, commence this week. The celebrations last from 9 days in some places to three weeks in other places. In South India the days are devoted to prayers accompanied by music to propitiate Sarasvati, the goddess of learning. In North India and notably in Bengal where Durga Puja is considered the greatest Hindu religious ceremony, prayers and sacrifices including animal sacrifice are offered to propitiate Durga or Kali—the war-goddess—who is worshipped as the combined spiritual force of the three god-heads in the Hindu pantheon, Brahma, Vishnu and Siva. The sacrifice of hundreds of goats in Kalighat, a practice which is repugnant to the sense of humanity and strangely inconsistent with the Hindu religion which emphasises the principle of ahimsa, as shown in the appeal of the Humanitarian League which we notice in our news columns today, has its origin perhaps in the belief that the sacred days must be celebrated to commemorate the great conflict between the Devas and the Asuras when the goddess Durga danced in the blood of the Asuras for whose destruction she assumed a frightful form. Bengal witnesses the greatest carnival among the Hindus during these days, and Bengal papers have devoted much space to the Durga Puja celebrations. The Forward of the 22nd instant has issued a Puja number with 68 pages wherein appear, besides a leading article on "the Mother", several special articles on the social, religious and spiritual significance of the Durga Puja and its origin from well-known professors and pandits. Numerous legends, varying according to different religious text-books and according to different provinces, are told of the origin of Durga Puja. But there is one thing in common, namely, that Hindu India devotes these days in offering prayers to the Divine Mother, Sakti, the spiritual force supposed to control the destinies of mankind. Bombay Presidency and especially the City are perhaps the least interested in Durga Puja celebrations and Dasra is not given as much prominence as, for instance, Deepavali showing thereby that her interest is mainly in commerce. Attempts are made by the Hindu Mahasabha this year to rouse commercially-minded Bombay to the significance of the days devoted for offering prayers to the omnipotent Devi, by organising public lectures with the accompaniments of kirtans and music for three days from yesterday. The moral behind the various legends regarding Durga Puja is that when righteous people are oppressed by those stronger in physical force, the Force of the Almighty manifests itself in suitable forms to save the oppressed devotees from tyranny and injustice. It is well for all, not excluding non-Hindus, to devote these days to meditate on the great moral that lies behind the outward demonstrations.

Lapse of News-Agencies: It is regrettable that the two premier news-agencies in India should have given publicity to news which has proved to be exaggerated and which has led to unforeseen consequences. Reuter was responsible for the news that the Wahabis under the leadership of Ibn Saud bombarded Medina and destroyed the Prophet's tomb along with many other things. This naturally created much consternation in the minds of the Indian Muslims. The more thoughtful among them, however, did not give any credence to the news, since Ibn Saud had guaranteed the safety of the holy places. But the more panicky among them stirred up trouble and vented their wrath and spleen on the devoted heads of Maulana Shaukat Ali, President of the Khilafat Committee, who contradicted the reported bombardment of Medina, and who was therefore suspected of siding with Ibn Saud. Although the rest of India was not so much agitated over this, Bombay held many meetings to protest against the Wahabis' reported sacrilegious action. In one of the meetings Shaukat Ali was almost assaulted and, but for police protection, his life would have been in danger. Bombay also witnessed the most unedifying spectacle of two devoted friends and co-workers in the cause of the Khilafat falling out with each other. It now appears that Ibn Saud captured Medina only very recently without bloodshed or any destruction of the holy places. If only Reuter's correspondent had taken care to acquaint himself of the real situation, Indian Muslims would have been spared all this mental agony. The Associated Press recently broadcasted the news of a serious communal conflict at Biswas in the Sitabaldi district of the United Provinces. But it now transpires that it was entirely baseless and that the Muslim and Hindu religious processions passed off peacefully. The strangest part of the whole affair, however, is that the Superintendent of Police of the place, when asked about it, remarked that it was news to him. There is always a tendency in some quarters to exaggerate and magnify every petty street squabble between a Hindu and Mahomedan into a big communal conflict, and it ought to be treated with the contempt it deserves.

The lot of Untouchable Converts: We referred in a recent issue to the irreligious character of the members of the depressed classes embracing Christianity or Mahomedanism with a view to elevate their social status. The demonstrations of the Malabar Ezhavas threatening mass conversion, however, attracted the Arya Samajists and Hindu Mahasabha workers to that district, and it was reported that, as a result of their efforts, "converts" to Arya Samaj were allowed entry into the Agraharams at Palghat. That the reports mentioned only isolated cases of the Ezhavas having taken advantage of the shelter offered by the Arya Samaj, shows that the community in general is far from believing that the sacred thread invested by the Arya missionary is capable of taking away the "pollution" from the members thereof. While news comes from Palghat of orthodox Brahmins having raised no objection of untouchable "converts" to Arya Samaj entering Agraharams, we find a report in a Mysore contemporary of certain Christians near Kottayam having objected to the untouchable converts to Christianity passing through public streets, and that too in spite of the recent attitude of the Travancore Government towards throwing out all public roads to all classes of subjects It appears that at a village very near Kottayam, the untouchables, even after conversion to Christianity, are not allowed to pass through the public streets. The local Christians are also supporting this custom. Recently a poor Pulaya Christian of six or seven was belaboured by some Christians for the heinous crime of standing on the road while he was passing. Are Christians near Kottayam more orthodox than Palghat Brahmins who are supposed to be very orthodox? Or is conversion to Christianity less effective in removing unapproachability than conversion to Arya Samaj which, as we pointed out the other day, is but an offshoot of Hinduism? The fact is that mere conversion to a particular faith will not bring about social elevation and that the converted generally find themselves worse not only in the social sphere but also in the religious sphere than what they were before conversion.

Allahabad Ramlila Celebration: The Hindus of Allahabad have decided not to celebrate the Ramlila this year as a protest against the order of the District Magistrate prohibiting music before mosques. The Ramlila is the most important festival in that part of the country, and according to old custom, it was decided to celebrate it this year also by means of processions with all the paraphernalia of music, etc. But certain Mahomedans of the place got alarmed at this and sought the protection of the Magistrate for preventing music before the mosques. The District Magistrate, instead of observing religious neutrality and maintaining the status quo as Government is bound to do, issued an order under Sec. 144 Cr. P. C. prohibiting music before certain mosques during sunset prayers Our complaint, on the present occasion, however, is more against the Muslims who sought government intervention in the matter, for their action is in direct violation of the resolutions passed at the Delhi Unity Conference which appointed a National Panchayat Board to which such questions ought to be referred for arbitration. There does not seem to have been even a single local leader on the spot capable of amicably settling the differences between the two contending sections The helplessness of the situation was only still more heightened by the fact that, when Mahatma Gandhi's arbitration was sought, he declined saying that he had no influene over both the sections. And this is the way the resolutions of the Unity Conference are being respected, for they are more honoured in the breach than in their observance. For our own part, we would welcome the day when religion, among all men, will be recognised to consist in the service of God and man through ways of peace and righteousness, and not through tom-toming and shedding the blood of innocent animals. True religion will never lead people to fight with each other. It is humiliating to see that Section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which has earned no enviable reputation in Indian politics, should be made the arbiter whenever any religious difference arises between Hindus and Mahomedans.

The Prostitution Act: The Bombay Police Administration Report contains not even a passing reference to the Prevention of Prostitution Act which was brought into effect from 29th October 1923. In our comments on the Act as soon as it was brought into effect, we pointed out that non-official work should supplement the Police work in this direction for the successful working of the Act. This cannot be done without some clear understanding between the non-officials and the police authorities. In a recent issue, we called attention to the necessity of amending the Act to make it more effective. In the meantime, we hope that some member of the Legislative Council will ask the Government to enlighten the Council, and through it the public, as regards the efforts of the Police to enforce the provisions of the Act. We understand that the necessity of having a similar Act for Madras is agitating the minds of certain social workers there, who are reported to be drafting a Bill, and we trust that they will take advantage of the experience of the working of the Bombay Act and will not rest content by copying some of its provisions. There are provisions in the Indian Penal Code which afford ample scope to restrict the traffic in girls and consequently the spread of commercialised vice. Street soliciting, which is punishable under the Act, has spread to every part of the City while before the Act the evil was confined to certain localities only. Even Hornby Road, the business locality where residential quarters are few, is not free from wandering prostitutes who do not hesitate to loiter about in such a way that street soliciting is made no uncommon thing. In almost all cases, it is the man who makes the first move, although the woman by her manners, makes her profession quite plain to encourage the man fo take the initiative. The Vigilance Committee ought to be more vigilant in the matter.

No Local Option for Bombay: We have repeatedly referred to the retrograde excise policy of the Government of Bombay in spite of its avowed committal to a policy of total prohibition. The high hopes entertained of Mr. Pradhan's Local Option Bill which has received wide support throughout the Presidency and which is to have been introduced very shortly in the Legislative Council, have only been shattered by His Excellency the Governor's disallowance of the same on the same old plea of "financial considerations." His Excellency reminds us of paragraph 212 of the Excise Committee's Report wherein they say that before any steps are taken to introduce any changes into the present excise system, the necessary legislation should be passed which may enable Government to impose the taxation requisite to avoid financial difficulties. As against this, we need only say here that the Excise Committee itself recommended local option as one of the means of attaining prohibition. We also repeat what we said on another occasion that it is no business of the Legislative Council to find out means of additional taxation, which is purely Government's. We cannot help thinking that the Bombay Government have lost an opportunity of showing their sincerity, if at all they are sincere, in carrying out the policy of total prohibition to which they stand pledged.

Mr. Vithal Chandavarkar's Candidature: We are glad to learn that Mr. Vithal Chandavarkar, eldest son of the late Sir Narayan Chandavarkar, is standing as a candidate for the Girgaum ward in the next elections for the Bombay Municipal Corporation. Mr. Chandavarkar, after his College career in Bombay, prosecuted his studies at Cambridge and was also called to the bar in England. He has not, however, chosen to follow the legal profession, but has adopted an industrial and business career. It is a good sign that younger men of Mr. Chandavarkar's education and opportunities are coming forward to take part in civic life. We would bespeak the support of the electors of the Girgaum ward to Mr. Chandavarkar's candidature.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1925.

INDIAN CULTURE AND WESTERN CIVILISATION—I.

"After all," John Morley wrote in his Compromise, "the permanence of Roman power was only valuable to mankind because it ensured the spread of certain civilising ideas. And those ideas had originated among people so characteristically devoid of the sovereign faculty of political coherence as were the Greeks and the Jews." Is it probable that a writer on the philosophy of history a thousand years hence, may observe that, after all, the permanence of British power was only valuable to mankind because it ensured the spread of certain profound truths which had originated among the Hindus? In a suggestive article in the Bombay Chronicle, Professor M. M. Gidwani mentions some facts to show that Indian thought is beginning to influence English minds. Captive Greece, it has been said, conquered her conqueror, Rome, by her culture. Is captive India conquering England by hers? Mr. Gidwani suggests she is. He mentions a few incidents within his personal experience by way of illustration. There is, however, more weighty testimony to the fact that ancient Indian thought is profoundly influencing not so much British as Western thought. As Morley pointed out in the same context as the observation quoted above, practically, and as a matter of history, a nation is seldom at the same time successfully energetic both in temporals and spirituals; seldom prosperous alike in seeking abstract truth and nursing the political spirit. England for nearly seven centuries has been nursing the political spirit. She is, as Swami Vivekananda once remarked, the world's greatest teacher in the art of politics. But she does not care for abstract truth. Not only does she not care, but she has a positive contempt, for it. She has also a deep prejudice, which was unknown to the ancient Romans, against adopting or assimilating any idea or institution belonging to the subject people of India. When she is obliged to do so by force of circumstances, she does her best to persuade herself or to pretend that she has discovered or invented it out of her own head. Nine-tenths of the work of establishing and maintaining Pax Brittanica in India has been done by Indians. Many of the achievements claimed to the credit of British rule were made possible by the solid structure of Indian social polity and the work of Indians in the background. But the palm has always been appropriated by the Britisher, while the dust and drudgery of British rule has devolved upon Indians.

Western countries which have no political reason for concealing their indebtedness to India, have more freely acknowledged it, though even they have not wholly liked the idea of deriving any inspiration from a coloured people. In the course of a conversation with Professor Maximilian Lancsner, who is trying to interest the Bombay public in ancient Indian psychology by means of some exhibitions of the power of mind over matter, we happened to mention that Indian culture was more studied in American than in European universities. "No," emphatically protested the Professor. "It is we in the Continent of Europe that have done and are doing most to acclimatize the ancient thought of India in modern civilisation. The American Professors whose works create the impression in you are mostly Europeans. You know that we in Europe have been made destitute by the War. The Professors have suffered the most and the worst. So when the American millionaires come along, they are able to snatch away our best men, and these are the men who are moulding American thought." The Professor, it may be mentioned, is a native of Poland who received his education mostly in Sweden and Austria. He declares he has come to hand over to India the key to her ancient culture which she had lost, but which European thinkers have found. There is much truth in Professor Lancsner's claim. Even before the War, Continental European scholars were doing more to advance Oriental studies than British scholars. Professor Cramb in his "Germany and England", quotes the indictment of British rule in India by Dr. Karl Bottieher: "You govern millions who read their sacred books in Sanskrit and Arabic characters; but the fairest specimens of those types are still cast in German forts. A German taught you the meaning of the religion of that province which you regard as the brightest jewel in the English crown; and to German scholarship you owe the initiatory impulse to study each of the four great world-religions of your empire—Mahommedanism; Zoroastrianism, Buddhism and Brahmanism. Even today when British statesmen are seriously thinking of means whereby a self-governing India can be permanently affiliated to the British Commonwealth by bonds of mutual interest and sympathy, they are unable to think of anything deeper than Imperial preference!"

The fact is that the position of political dominance which Britain occupies is her greatest barrier to a sympathetic understanding of India and her problems. The absence of this barrier in the case of the Continental nations explains their comparatively greater appreciation of Indian thought and culture. Meredith Townsend, who is still regarded by many Anglo-Indians as the best exponent of Indian mentality, travestied it for the delectation of his countrymen in the grossest fashion. His method is very simple. He begins by pretending to appreciate the virtues of Indians and ends by showing that their virtues are all rooted in vices which are abhorrent to the European mind. A whole-hearted acknowledgment of the greatness of Indian culture or achievement in any sphere, would, so the average Englishman apprehends, destroy the moral foundation on which, he likes to think, the right of Britain to dominate India is based. The British people are deeply sensible of moral values. They like to feel that their national policy and methods are strictly compatible with, if they do not actually flow out of, ethical ideals; and three-fourths of the business of British statesmen is to discover or invent such an inspiration for their most imperialistic measures. For this purpose, they are obliged to study not the great achievements and the good qualities of subject nations, but their most miserable failures, their weakness, their communal and caste differences, and the corrupt and degraded aspects of their religions. The Christian Missionary of the old type was very helpful in this sort of work and hence Imperialism, whether of the German, British or American type, extended its protection, sometimes against the wishes of the finer type of Missionaries, to Christian Missions in India, China and Africa. The cry of "Down with Christianity" which was raised by the students at Shanghai during the recent riots, was entirely due to its evil association in their minds with the imperialism of the White races.

INDIA, AMERICA AND WORLD BROTHERHOOD.*

Messrs. Ganesh & Co., ought to be congratulated on bringing out this neatly-printed volume from the pen of that eminent American friend of India, Mr. Sunderland. The picture which Mr. Sunderland presents in this book of India and its problems is quite different from that which we ordinarily meet with in the writings of foreign writers. The book resolves itself into three parts, part first devoted to the three eminent Americans, Abraham Lincoln, William Lloyd Garrison and Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, part second dealing with India's great struggle for freedom and nationhood, and part third treating of World Wide Brotherhood.

The life and teachings of Araham Lincoln, the representative and torch-bearer of democracy, so to speak, are full of lessons to us. For years after his death his watchwords that democracy is "the government of the people by the people for the people," and that "no man is good enough to rule another man, and no nation is good enough to rule another nation," have continued to sway the destinies of nations. The time when Lincoln was elected President of America was one of great crisis, when the country was agitated over the question of slavery, and he replied with an emphatic 'no' to the question whether slavery should be allowed in the Southern States. Relations became so strained that they finally culminated in the inevitable conflict between the North and the South which dragged on for four years, and in the second year of the war, Lincoln issued the proclamation of the emancipation of every slave in the land.

Next to Lincoln, the name that Americans cherish most dearly in their memory with reverence and admiration is that of William Lloyd Garrison, the friend and collaborator with Lincoln in the anti-slavery work. The author has been kind enough to refer in flattering terms to his immortal words in the Liberator which appear at the head of this journal. The one thing remarkable about Garrison was that throughout all the trials and tribulations which he had to face in his early years and that, in spite of personal risk and unpopularity he had to experience at the hands of his countrymen during his later days, he remained loyal and faithful to his cause to the end of his life without compromising even in the least.

The third character which Mr. Sunderland places before Indians is that of Mrs. Julia Ward Howe. This remarkable American woman scorned the life of richness and luxury and dedicated herself to the service of humanity. She took a prominent part in all the social movements of the day chiefly directed towards the emancipation of women. She was one of the very earliest of the advocates of woman suffrage and she also enlisted early in the anti-slavery cause. All her life she was a friend of Italy and Russia and sympathised with their heroic struggle for national freedom and unity. Surely Indian women have much to learn from this gifted American lady.

The large part of the book, however, is devoted to India's struggle for Swaraj. The India of which Mr. Sunderland writes is the real India "as experienced by the 320 millions of Indian people who are not barbarians or 'half-civilized' as many seem to suppose, but people who represent an ancient and high civilization." He does not blind himself to the benefits British rule has conferred upon India, and he even admits that possibly no other nation would govern it as well. But his point is that no nation in the world can rule another without awful injustice, and that foreign domination, however benevolent it may be, is founded on force and not on justice, and is demoralizing, degenerating, and destructive to the character of those held in subjection, and is productive of a slave-psychology which robs them of all hope and incentive in life. He catalogues all the indictments generally made against British rule during the past one and a half centuries—the terrible famines that periodically stalk throughout the length and breadth of the country sweeping away millions and millions of people, the awful and growing poverty of the people, half the agricultural population not knowing from one half—year's end to another what it is to have a full meal, India's impoverishment through heavy taxation, even of the barest necessaries of life, the destruction of her indigeneous manufactures for which she was far famed in olden times, the enormous and wholly unnecessary cost of her civil service, the heavy military expenditure due to the maintenance of an army much larger than is necessary for the ordinary defence of the country and the vast annual drain of money from India in the shape of Home Charges amounting to nearly one half the income from taxes. The only hope he can think of for remedying these evils and sufferings from which India is suffering is for her to become an absolutely independent nation with no connection with Great Britain or else to be given as true freedom and as perfect equality as the Dominions enjoy. Two of the arguments oftenest used against India's fitness for self-rule are the differences of race, language and religion, and the consequent lack of unity in the country. He rightly says that such a state of things, far from justifying foreign rule, requires that it should be ruled not by foreigners but by its own sons who know most about these languages and peoples. He instances the case of America and Canada which grew united and strong under independence and pleads for a parliamentary government on the same model for Indians also, which would mightily increase their self-respect, their confidence in themselves, and their interest in one another.

The Montagu Reforms Scheme which Lord Birkenhead considers as a too liberal gift conferred upon India by Mr. Montagu, comes in for sober criticism at his hands. The first defect which he points out is that the British Government are the judges of the time and measure of each advance which practically comes to mean that Indians should have no voice whatsoever in determining their further advance, and that the Britishers alone, to whose interest it is to keep India in bondage as long as possible, should have the whole say when and what the next advance should be. The Assembly, in passing by a large majority Pandit Matilal Nehru's amendment to the Government resolution on reforms did no more but demonstrate its indignation against this insult to the sense of self-respect of the Indian people implied in the preamble. He aptly describes diarchy as an attempt to mix oil and water or to ride two horses going in opposite directions. In the closing chapter of this part, he appeals to Great Britain in her own interests to summon a representative Conference consisting of, say, twenty of India's wisest and most trusted leaders to meet with a corresponding number of wise and trusted representatives of Great Britain. And it is this modest demand that was made by the Indian Legislature when it passed a resolution in February 1924 asking for a Round Table Conference and more recently Pandit Motilal Nehru's amendment to the Government resolution on the Reforms. But will England act up to this?

The last part of the book deals with human brotherhood in four directions, between nations, between races, between individuals and classes, and between religions. The last few centuries which have witnessed tremendous changes in the physical world, have brought on their wake many problems with which the old world was not confronted. Distance has been annihilated, nation and nation, race and race, religion and religion, separated by thousands of miles of sea and land, have been brought together. The white man looks down upon the coloured; the stronger and the more advanced races tyrannise over and oppress and wrong the weaker ones. The greatest problem, therefore, today is how to reconcile these jarring elements and to evolve out of them a world wide brotherhood embracing in its fold every religion, race, and nation. The world should be taught to realise that "the fact that I love my nation is no reason why I should hate or distrust or encroach upon other nations", and that "larger than any nation is humanity". Mr. Sunderland pleads for the same spirit of toleration and brotherhood between religions and between the various classes. The book is a valuable contribution to the cause of human brotherhood.

WITHERING FLOWERS.

( By Mr. G. K. Nene. )

In those bitter moments through which every young man in India has to pass to-day, on the threshold of life, he finds all his sublime brightness of outlook suddenly darkened by the gloom of despair. In his college days, he learns with what comparative ease and peace of mind fellow-students in free lands travel on their way to academical honours and with what exubérance of hope they look forward to their entrance into life. He begins to peep a little deeply into the arrangements of things in his own country only to shrink back at the prospect of stonewalls on all sides save a crevice or a hole here and there. His very idealism is chilled: he descends down too precipitately from the heights of generous hope to the desolate plains of dreary reality. He resigns himself to that eternally consoling philosophy which leans upon the potency of fate and which is the mighty cause of the docility of the Indian to hardships and domination. He has now been honoured with a wig and a gown; he proceeds to see to what use he can put them. The knowledge dawns upon him that the crevices that met his sight as a student have been filled up with brick and mortar and that he is nowhere. What he can call his are the firmanent on high and the ground under his feet. He may wander and wander to wish at last that he had rather been never educated.

Of all problems of national reconstruction, the renovation of the youthful energy of the nation is by far the most important; yet it is perhaps the worst neglected as well by the Government as by the leaders. They are so intent upon legislating and debating that there is scarcely time for anything else left. All the same, the process of dissipation continues; nobody for a moment seems to consider that there is such a thing as unemployed youth and it is a perilous and calamitous thing. The leaders perhaps think that coming men will elbow their way up into the world and that it is no part of their patriotic activities to enquire into the nature of the difficulties, the obstacles, and the diappointments which young men in India have to encounter to-day. The question is a vital one, involving the replacement of some of our odd notions regarding capacity for character and work.

The experience of the present writer and some of his intimate friends has confirmed him in the view that square men in round holes is the order of the day in this country. Clerical labour, which is the one great pasture-land set apart for the gifted sons of the soil, is a mighty leveller. The talented and the foolish, the clever and the doltish, have to work side by side in a department where quickness, intelligence, self-respect are the least part of the matter. You may perhaps expect that a brilliant youth of a scientific turn will find his proper employment in the laboratory; that a sinewy youth full of warlike ardour will turn to martial exercises leading on to a military career. No—the principles of employmentology as conceived in this country are a triumph of no-logic and unbusinesslike ways. Bachelors of arts, bachelors of science, bachelors of laws, and masters of all these several arts, crafts, and sciences are cooped up within the great enclosure of clerkship. It is a bitter ridicule of education to compel a youth to undergo right through all the travail of physical and mental anguish and then to crown it with a worthless writership. He who has the literateur, the scientist, the administrator slumbering in him is a biological mishap. It may be a wise saying that chance must be created, but it has no application to India where individual exertion is confronted by the imperial governance of a parliamentary democracy. In spite of all that one can do, one can accomplish little because the very field of endeavour is fenced in.

Now, it is clear that the demands of clerkship leave little margin for talent. Its one requisite is a tolerably working knowledge of English and of its alphabet, and in this point of view a third-class matriculate is as good as a first-class graduate. There are, of course, scales of payment, but so far as the quality of the work goes, there is hardly any difference. For this reason it is that captains of industry and agriculture entertain not a very respectable opinion of the turn-out of the Universities. And it is for the same reason that English education has not made headway among the enterprising Marwaris and other classes who rightly think that they are better off than if caught in its meshes.

That, however, is not the whole story. The old haunts are overcrowded. There is quite a deal of disproportion between the clerical requirements of the country and its output of the educated. This disproportion has given rise to a phenomenal abundance of commendatory capacity which is almost without a parallel. The most capable person is left to contend with dire necessity if he is unfortified with recommendations from 'distinguished' men. These so-called commendations are very difficult to obtain owing to the canker of jealousy that is rampant today if it was at any time. It is yet to be recognized so far as it concerns this country that a variety of talent and accomplishment is the very source of national life. Jealousy shoots up into luxuriance in a subject country. By all means excel others: but have the generosity to keep the field open. It will pay to remember that the attempt to drown your fellow-swimmer will result ultimately in your own sinking to the bottom.

It is only just to remark that it is part of the general topsy-turveydom of things that those who are most in need of commendatory letters are those who cannot get even a scrap; while those who want only a hundred are loaded with twice as many. There is a sort of inverted aptness in that the man who is the least trusted among his fellowmen for integrity and honour is held qualified for granting certificates of character to men who are immeasurably superior to him in those respects and many others of the like kind. This great humbug of certification has so entirely beridden the minds even of many big people that a Tilak or an Asutosh is felt like an oasis in the sandy waste. It is a rare commodity, the discerning eye, the eye that dives into the deep and picks up the pearls. The meanness of raiment is enough to scare away some sane people under which the perceiving eye detects time-ringing genuineness. Commendatory letters have however a side which cannot be ignored. At present, when there is little need of special aptitude, the question of employment resolves itself into a question of pushing in and they are excellent so far as they tend to effect that purpose.

The harm that this state of things is doing to the country is incalculable. The frightful want of originality of thought and feeling and of powerful literature as a consequence is attributable to nothing so much as the absence of proper persons in proper places. The educational appointments in India in Government and private institutions most forcibly illustrate this point. The ghost of commendation has not spared even the sacred temples of learning; and, the same havoc here as everywhere. It is a common sight, professors having no more right to that title than the layman. It is distressing to find professors of history, for instance, giving notes to students that have not a line of individual impress upon them. Indeed, it surprised me once to hear a mutilated article from the Encyclopædia Brittanica being given out by a professor as his own—at least we were so led to suppose. Literary and philosophical pursuits ought to be the chief occupation in the cloister. On the contrary, it is thought quite a creditable performance and the beginning and end of scholarship to compile, in the most literal sense, notes on all conceivable subjects, and these, too, based upon those of some Western author, with which the market is uncommonly teeming. I am aware that the professorial chair is not a delphic tripod; but there are subjects, excluding, of course, poetic creation, which are wholly dependent for extension and investigation upon scholarship and habits of research. There are instances of capable persons being thrust aside to make room for others less capable and even incapable from purely extraneous considerations. Then, again, in India where libraries are not so widespread as to make their treasures accessible to those who do not finish off with text-books and degrees, the evil of educational appointments is doubly enhanced.

But, after all this has been said, the present problem of unemployment remains inexorable. Has the Government no duty to discharge to those young men who find no work and therefore no pay? Is it not the duty of public men to devise means for putting a stop to the useless fritteriug away of the nation's vigour, energy, and talent? It is no use telling people to be self-sacrificing; self-sacrifice is possible where there is something to sacrifice. Various suggestions have been made for getting over the difficulty. But the most remarkable seems to be the one thrown out in one of the Poona papers. The correspondent proposes colonization as a partial remedy. But then we must beware of a Kenya and South Africa, if the colony is at all allowed to make a beginning. The proposal is full of possibilities both as an accredited solution and as an immense contribution to the formation of an esprit de corps—that invaluable virtue which lies at the foundation of national greatness.

CALCUTTA LETTER.

The Police Magistrate of Alipore heard arguments for the complainant in the matter of the Corporation Overseer vs. the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Page. The Judge dismissed the suit under Section 203 of the Cr. Pr. C.

H. E. the Viceroy's address to the Council of State is as it should be. That Council has justified the trust reposed in it by the Government by its attitude towards the salt tax, the Princes' Protection Bill, the Bengal Ordinance Bill, Arms Bill and the resolution on the Muddiman Report. For all that they have done, His Excellency thanked them with all his heart. But what about the country to which these members owe their duty? That is of course a subsidiary affair in their eyes, and if they have betrayed its interests on important occasions, they have certainly gained glowing tributes from His Excellency. Commenting on the address, the Statesman remarks: "The Council of State is essential to the new order of things in India and we agree with the Viceroy that on the whole it has served India well. It cannot expect to be, and it certainly will not be, popular with the average Indian politician. Those who accept service in it must be content with their own consciousness of well doing and remain impervious to a great amount of criticism to which they will be subjected." But according to the Forward (and other pro-Indian papers): "The division lists in the Council of State furnish an abiding record of the huge fraud which the Government of India have been perpetrating not only upon the Indians themselves but upon world opinion. It was a packed House which acted as a "brake" admirably on Indian interests and Indian aspirations, adjusted the acts of the larger Chamber to the wishes of the bureaucracy. They furnish surely enough an abiding record of the Government's fraud, the Council's vassalage, abjection and betrayal." We only wish that the people will realise the game played by Government in the Second Chamber and work whole-heartedly in electing only those who will think of 'service to the country' before 'self'.

Judgment was delivered in the Garden Reach Bakr-Id Riot case yesterday. Out of the 31 accused persons 19 were acquitted by the Magistrate in agreement with the unanimous verdict of the jury, who found 28 of the accused not guilty and gave the benefit of the doubt in the case of three. The Judge disagreeing with the verdict of the jury has referred the case to the High Court, and directed that these 12 men should be released on a bail of Rs. 500 each.

THE PRAYER OF CHRIST FOR HIS ENEMIES.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In your issue of Sept. 19, Mr. C. F. Andrews alludes to the well-known fact that certain verses and passages in the Christian Gospels are of more doubtful authenticity than the rest, because they are lacking in some of the earliest manuscripts. He points out that one instance of this is the well-known prayer which (in the Gospel of St. Luke) Christ is said to have uttered for His enemies while on the Cross, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.' This verse is lacking in some of the most important early manuscripts,—not, as a matter of fact, in the best-certified form of the 'Sinaitic' manuscript, to which Mr. Andrews refers, but in the equally important manuscript known as 'B' (which, together with the Sinaitic, constitutes our main authority for the early text of the Christian Church in Alexandria), and also in certain manuscripts and early versions which seem to preserve the earliest text of Syria and Palestine. It appears, however, from the manuscript evidence, that the verse was probably contained in the earliest text of the Churches of Rome and the West.

Now, whilst Mr. Andrews has quite rightly stated that we cannot in view of this be absolutely certain whether Christ spoke these words or not, and that in any case there is abundant evidence that they are absolutely true to His character, our knowledge of which does not rest on isolated texts, still it may interest some of your readers (and Mr. Andrews also, if he does not happen to have seen the book in question) to know that Canon Streeter, who is rapidly becoming the leading authority in England on the origin of the Gospels, in his recent work on 'The Four Gospels', gives good reason for thinking that these words of Christ were, in fact, not later interpolations into St. Luke's Gospel, but were in the original Gospel which he wrote. I will briefly indicate this reason.

Mr. Andrews, in his letter, has pointed out that one simple way of explaining the existence of these passages which are found in some only of the early manuscripts and not in others is to suppose that they were originally written as notes in the margin of some manuscript, and later when a copy of this manuscript was made, they became embodied in the text. Till recently this explanation was supposed to cover all, or most, of such cases; and it was accepted as a canon of criticism that such passages were mainly of the nature of 'interpolations', and the genuine text of the Gospels was the shorter one which omitted them. Canon Streeter, however, has pointed out that this question of 'interpolations' has been set in an entirely new light by the researches of Mr. A. C. Clark, Corpus Professor of Latin at Oxford, who, in a book called "The Descent of Manuscripts" published in 1918, showed how, in the copying of texts, the accidental omission of words and phrases, and even whole lines, is a far commoner occurrence than interpolation, and that, so far from the shorter of two texts being the more original, the longer is usually to be preferred. Canon Streeter thinks that this position, which was worked out in connection with classical (viz., Latin and Greek) texts, needs certain modification when it is applied to the text of the Gospel, but that in the main it will hold good there also. He then proceeds to lay down a very important principle of his own, viz., that, when such accidental omissions occured, they would be most likely to be made good in the place where a book was originally given to the world, as in that place more than one copy made from the autograph would be in circulation, and it is very improbable that the same mistake would occur in all, whereas in the case of distant cities only a single copy of such a work would be in circulation, and so the mistake, once made, would tend to be perpetuated.

This principle has an important bearing on the case in question. St. Luke's Gospel belongs to the western part of the Roman Empire. If not actually written in Rome, it certainly arrived there very shortly after its composition, and became an accepted Gospel of the Roman Church at an early date. Those manuscripts, therefore, which give us evidence of the earliest Western text, are in the case of St. Luke's Gospel those which may be considered most trustworthy; and we have seen that these are the manuscripts which contain Christ's prayer from the Cross. There is, therefore, in Canon Streeter's opinion, a distinct probability that these words were in the original Gospel, and are not a later interpolation. They may have been accidentally omitted in the first copy which went outside Rome, and which became the parent of the other eastern copies; or a conjecture of Dr. Rendell Harris which Canon Streeter is inclined to approve, may possibly be true, viz., that the passage was deliberately omitted in certain manuscripts in the second century, because owing to persecution the feelings of Christians against the Jews was then so bitter that they could not believe Christ would ever pray for their forgiveness.

AN ANCIENT METHOD OF BIRTH CONTROL.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

This social and economic problem can be successfully tackled in accordance with the dictates of science and with due regard to human nature without resorting to the ways of the western modern scientific men. The problem should be solved by going to the root cause of conception as the ancients had done in the olden days when the West had not seen the light of civilization.

The root cause is that the conception takes place after menstruation. Regulated menstruation in women, will not only control the birth-rate, but also the death rate among the innocents. Very often weaklings are produced by child-mothers, and prolific bearing is the cause of the mothers, with their innocents, finding an early demise for want of good, long sustenance to both. How to prevent this, is the question. There are medicines devised and perfected in the Ancient Chemistry of the Agasthya School of the Indian Mystics and Hermetics, left intact and handed down to us, in their chemico-philosophic literature. These medicines, when administered with certain tonics (Anupanas) a certain number of times at certain intervals of their monthly periods, with certain dietary observations, enable the regulation of child birth. The physico-chemical action of these medicines which takes place in the frames of women begins to exert its influence especially on the ovaries in restraining the cellular incessant action of the nucleus which becomes inert and prevents the nature of menstruating periodically at regular intervals and thereby conception, until the energy of the medicine itself becomes frittered away in the ordinary course of time. This can be observed and studied even now.

The method mentioned above does in no way interfere with connubial happiness ; the child bearing mothers pick up strength and will produce healthy well-grown children. Even in well-to-do families in countries where there is no law of primogeniture and where there is law as observed under the Mithakshara and Dayabhagha systems of the Hindu Law, this is very highly useful to restrict the number of births in the family. This is the economic effect produced by these medicines. Whenever the mothers desire to have the usual course of ordinate lives, the desired effect of menstruating can be reverted to by taking another medicine which works as an antithetical one to the first. With perfect safety and confidence and with no apprehension of mercurial poisons and with no kind of deleterious after-effects of any kind whatever to the woman, these medicines can be had, with perfect ease, convenience and utility, to the greatest advantage to humanity. The Puranas bear ample evidence to the existence of this method of birth control in ancient India. These facts may be laughed at by people in their ignorance. Especially the man-made modern western medical man with his yet improving science, begins to say this and that, and induces others not to believe in the old stories. Those who practise the Indian system of medicine with their sonorous Sanskrit titles, though they may believe in the method I mentioned, may yet dissuade the lay folk not to have recourse to such means as it is not contained in their high sounding "Ayurvedic" Literature and as they themselves do not know it.

This is the only real scientific way, which is in accordance with Nature and of the laws of the Universe. The modern sage, philosopher, economist and the statesman can find this as the best means of solving the population problem to the greatest advantage of the country and community at large with perfect confidence. The undersigned shall be glad to furnish any more particulars to those interested.

APISH MENTALITY.

(From a Correspondent.)

To point out defects and shortcomings attaching to one's habits or customs is to do a service to him. No man is perfect, for the world itself is imperfect. The realities of the natural phenomena around us are hidden behind a thick curtain, to unravel which and to hit at the realities is the object of human life on earth. As is well admitted, by students of religious systems of the world, customs, manners, and habits and ideals of morality are affected by local environments as much as the climate of a country by the geographical situation. This is illustrated by the fact that in South India a piece of cloth to wrap round the loins is sufficient to cover nakedness, and extra clothing is uncomfortable and unhealthy. Those who ignore this necessary corollary of the law of nature should be prepared to pay the penalty in the shape of a heavy bill from the doctor at the end of the month. In Simla I find even the poorest are obliged to clothe themselves in warm clothing in three or four layers. Again, the diet of the South Indian consists of rice and vegetables as staple food and curds as good cold stimulant, while in Simla one observes strict restrictions with regard to these foodstuffs ; wheat and milk and nuts are essential to enable man to bear against the snowy winter. (I refer to strict vegetarian diet).

Although enlightened people do seem to appreciate these phenomena of an inviolable and relentless nature, they do conveniently ignore them and their implications, being unable to resist the enchantment of an illusory mirage.

The Christ who died on the Cross to found the basis of refined Judaism lived and died a Jew. Changing his costume, eating and drinking differently (in the material sense), shaving off his beard and moustache were not the manner in which he taught and practised, nor did these symbolise an inward change ; nor were these, or such, adopted by early Christians ; nor are these so warmly or customarily adopted by other countries in modern times. But what do we find in India ? In North India, particularly, the education and ideals imparted and instilled into impressionable minds in schools and hostels both by word of mouth and influence are such as to misdirect and misinterpret the significance of a Faith whose indifference and contempt for externals are such as to drive one to the conclusion that they are absolutely unreal and illusory. The modern reformer, Christian, Hindu and Muslim, scrutinises the external and counts the number of heads.

An up-to-date "Kala Sahib" is concerned more with his pair of trousers, neckties and collars, either clean shave to look like a woman or fairer, or retaining only two dark stumps just below the nostrils ; with his tables and chairs and mirrors (in cities unavoidable) ; and with the liberty to use

meat and drink—which, by the way, invariably goes hand in hand—than with the spirit of service, sympathy, goodwill and peace towards mankind, or the acquiring of such spirit. One of the ugliest developments is noticed amongst girls who after schooling for a year or two begin to feel most acutely the lack of a bonnet, a dozen skirts and frocks and stockings and shoes as high-heeled as they can bear.

Disconcerting as these are to themselves in the initial stages, it is still more so to the unfortunate husband who, captivated by the "beauty" and "grandeur" of the quaint costume, takes to occasional visits to the perfumery and the fashionable outfitter on the Mall,—and eventually brings his bride home to an ill-lit hearth, to a store ill-filled with provisions and to a ward-robe ill-furnished with refined paraphernalia. And when the glowing ardour of a dreamy honeymoon had exhausted and when the mists of the nights had vanished before the illuminating rays of the rising sun, the reality of an awkward situation staggers man and woman alike.

While one complains against the waywardliness of the housewife, the other murmurs against the petty purse and emphasises the necessity of dignity, "izzat", in polished society. To make both ends meet, wherever possible, by mutual consent, the little wife takes to some employment, as nurse or compounder, catechist or health visitor and the like, and while the husband sweats in the factory or racks his brains in office, the wife wends her way from home to home or from home to hospital.

Associates and gossips help to widen the gulf in due proportion to the degree to which these are resorted to. Days drag on, and the mustard-seed of distrust and discontent assumes grave proportions uncontainable in the narrowed breasts; until at length Dame Rumour wafts the news on to the restless winds the ominous word—"separation". The rest of the story is better left unsaid; they are too bitter, too shameful, too degrading to commit to writing. Excepting separation the rest of the episodes are experienced by the average Indian Christian of the north, central and east India.

The magnitude of the moral degradation caused by want of sense of responsibility corresponding to the respective degree of freedom claimed and eventually appropriated by both sexes is appalling. One who runs may read in the follies of an apish mentality the inevitable result it will end in, suicide of the individual, followed by a revulsion of feeling against those responsible and their institutions, until a new order has been brought into being which would be in better harmony with the traditions and culture inherent in the nation.

There is hope yet and it is not too late to mend.

INDIA AND JAPAN

Prof. J. Takakusu, Professor of Sanskrit in the Imperial University of Tokio (Japan), writes in the July number of the Young East, a Japanese Magazine of Buddhist life and thought:—

It was only in recent times that materialistic intercourse along the path of merchants was opened between India and Japan, but spiritual association or what Dr. Rabindranath Tagore beautifully calls "the path of poets" has been kept up between the two countries for nearly fifteen centuries. We, however, have known India chiefly in an indirect way, instances recorded in history of our direct intercourse with her being rather few, though it is quite probable that it was of much more frequent occurrences. Unfortunately history has failed to chronicle them and even the few instances known in history of our direct intercourse with India, which were of great importance to the development of Japanese culture, are now in danger of being forgotten. It is with the object of preventing it that I take up my pen to give a detailed account of these. By the way, I attempted this task many years ago and published some articles on the subject in certain journals, but without completing them. It is now my intention of accomplishing it once for all.

As a matter of fact, it was as early as the eighth century that Japan first came into contact with Indian civilization and received its beneficient influence. It came by sea to Japan and the country that sent it to her was the Vijaya Empire, which originally arose in the present region of Coromandel in Southern India. At the beginning of the fifth century, streams of Indian immigrants found a new home in Java, where during the eighth century that famous terrace of a thousand Buddha's, Borobudur, was built. Prior to this, Indian culture had been transplanted to Sumatra, where it bloomed with particular splendour at Sribuja, now Palembang, and Buddhist civilization attained a high degree of development, which was witnessed and recorded by the Chinese traveller, I-tsing, in the seventh century. Further some of these Indian people finally settled in Cambodia, and there they laid a foundation to the great civilization of Malay-India. It was with Lin-yi or Campa of this ancient empire that Japan first came into direct touch with in the eighth century by way of the sea and it was its civilization that powerfully influenced Japanese life and thought during the Nara epoch (710—793 A.D.). Even before this period, Japan had used to receive Indian civilization by land. All the gifts of Indian civilization carried by many "posts" first went to Central Asia and thence to China and Korea, and were at last thankfully taken by Japan through the medium of the latter two countries. Once they entered Japan, there was no exit for them to go out, so that during all the long years following, Japan has carefully and reverently preserved and are still in possession of these priceless heirlooms from ancient India.

It is very probable that in those early times there were travellers from Japan who proceeded to India or attempted journeys to that centre of ancient civilization. History, however, has but few records of such men. This was not due to any lack on the part of ancient Japanese of the sense of adoration and attachment for the land which gave birth to Buddhism, the faith which they so eagerly embraced. The fact that many Chinese and Korean travellers visited India in early times shows that "the path of poets" was already kept open between their countries and India. The stormy seas surrounding Japan, however, proved an almost insurmountable obstacle to any Japanese desiring to visit India for attaining their longing. In spite of it, it is plain that there were not a few Japanese admirers of India who hankered after a journey to that land. Myoye Shonin, a noted priest (1163—1222 A. D.) was certainly one of such men. In fact, so great was his desire to visit India that with the object of realizing it some day, he drew up Indian itineraries and maps, but being unable to carry out his cherished plan, he appeased his craving by giving Indian names to a hill and a stream near a temple he had founded at Togano in one of the suburbs of Kyoto. Even in such a later period as the age of the Tokugawa Government, a great scholar of the Avatamsaka school of Buddhism, Hotan by name, consoled himself by bathing his feet in the sea water at a beach in the province of Kii

and by indulging in the thought that the water extended to the shore of the motherland of Buddhism.

Kongo Sammai.

After the priest Hiuen Tsang of the Tang Dynasty opened "the path of posts" to India, many hundred Chinese and Korean priests undertook journeys to that country one after another. This we know from a record left by the Chinese traveller I-tsing that within only fifty years after Hiuen Tsang had succeeded in entering India as many as fifty-six priests, including eight Koreans, found their way thereto. In this connection, it may here be noted that not long ago an interesting account of a travel to India written by a Korean priest, Hui Chiao by name, was discovered by M. P. Pelliot of France in the Cave of Thousand Buddhas at Tun-huang. Certain is it that Japanese caught this fever of Indian adoration and in fact there was at least one Japanese priest who entered India in those early times. His name was Kongo Sammai or Vajra-Samadhi in Sanskrit. He travelled to India from China and in the 13th year of Genwa (818 A.D.) had already returned to his starting point. His name and his Indian journey are found mentioned by a noted Chinese literati Tuan Cheng Shih in Vol. III of his book, Yu-yang Tsa-tsu. Substantially the author says that a Japanese priest, Kongo Sammai by name, paid a visit to Middle India. He found hemp-sandals, spoons and chopsticks used by Hiuen Tsang painted over pictures of five-coloured clouds on the walls of several temples there, and that on festival days people came to pay homage to the painted mementoes of the Chinese Saint. The Japanese priests also found millions of big flies swarming the dining room of Nalanda Monastery during the hot season, but that when the priests came to take meal there all the flies flew away and remained on the trees in the court yard while the repast lasted. In Vol. II of the supplement to the same book, the author says he heard the Japanese priests tell him of a hermit he had met in Ssuchuan, and after giving a particular description of their meeting, says that it took place in the 13th year of Genwa (818 A.D.). Who was this Kongo Semmai and what became of him, we do not know. But a theory has long been advanced that he may be Kenye, a Yogin-like priest of Muroo, one of the disciples of the great Buddhist teacher, Kobo Daishi, who went to China in 804 A. D. and founded the Shingon sect after his return home. Nothing definite is known of the life of this man. It is said that he accompanied his teacher to China and also that he proceeded to India and never came back. This much, however, is known that he lived in a temple called Kongo Sammai In, of Muroo Monastery in the province of Yamato, and, founding there a new temple called Butsu-ryu-ji about 850 A.D., had a bell cast and wrote an inscription for it. He may be or may not be the Japanese priest referred to by the Chinese literati above mentioned. At any rate, it is certain that at least one Japanese saw India when she was in the height of her glory.

Hodo.

Another Japanese priest is described in an old manuscript I have discovered to have visited India in early times. For the past five or six years, I have been engaged in investigation of innumerable documents, records and copied sutras, which were made between the begining of the Heian epoch (800 A.D.) and the end of the Tokugawa Government (1867), and which are kept intact in many old temples of Japan. In the course of this work, I came across in the treasure magazines of Koyasan Monastery an old manuscript entitled Secret Notes of Koyasan. It consists of only two pages and gives a romantic or rather legendary story of a priest of the name of Hodo (Dharma-bodhi in Sanskrit). Briefly, the story runs to the effect that Hodo was engaged in meditation for a term of a hundred days in a temple called Horinji at Saga near Kyoto. On the seventieth day of his religious practice, a beautiful lady entered the room in which he was confined. He fell in love with her and was so ashamed of his sin that he went to China vowing that he would never return home. In China an idea struck him that he would travel to India to visit the Vulture Peak where Buddha is said to be living for ever according to the Lotus of the Good Law. A divine boy suddenly appeared before him to act as guide and presented him with a white horse. Hodo rode on the horse and crossed the Gobi Desert. He was also able to cross the Onion Range in Pamir by riding on a blue sheep supplied by his guide. Next a Yaksha appeared before him and presented him with a flying vehicle, by which he reached the Vulture Peak of Rajegriha. At the top of the sacred Peak he had the audience of Buddha and after being taught by the Great Saviour he was commanded to return to China, thence to his native country to teach the people. He then travelled back to China under the protection of the divine guide in the same manner as before and ultimately came back to Japan. Now this story appears to be entirely incredible, especially as the Indian journey of its hero is said to have been accomplished in about seven days. It is, however, not a rare thing in such stories of religious experiences and faith that time and space are transcended. Accordingly, I wonder whether something real lies concealed at the bottom of this romance or whether Kongo Sammai mentioned in the preceding paragraph and the priest Hodo mentioned in this story is one and the same man. Besides, there is reason to believe that the story, fantastic as it is, was written on the basis of accounts written by Hodo himself, for the story was handed down by Jitsuye (d. 857 A.D.), a contemporary of Hodo himself, and was further annotated by Doban (d. 1252 A.D.), a learned priest of Koyasan.

Prince Takaoka.

There was yet another Japanese who attempted to visit India in early times, the man being no less an exalted personage than an Imperial Prince. He was Prince Takaoka, Heir Apparent to Emperor Saga, known by the priestly name of Shinnyo Hō-Shinno. He had his hair shorn in Todaiji Monastery in Nara, became a disciple of Kobo Daishi, and after studying for some years in Koyasan Monastery, crossed to China for further study in the 3rd year of Jogan (861 A.D.) in company of the eminent priest Shuei and a large retinue. While in China he changed his name to Henmyo and planned to proceed to India. He probably went by sea and when he reached a place called Laot in the southern extremity of Malay Peninsula, was taken ill and died there. A legend has it that he was killed by a tiger, but this is probably an imaginary story.

The Prince was a man of great learning and enthusiastic student. Not satisfied with all what he had learned during his twenty years' sojourn in China, he still wanted to learn and that was the motive that led him to attempt the hazardous journey to India, which cost him his life. His memory has always been and is highly revered in Japan as a keen seeker after truth and pioneer in the path to light. The place where he breathed his last is supposed to be somewhere near Singapore and there is a pious and commendable plan on foot among Japanese Buddhists to erect there a monument in his memory.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

All-India Congress Committee: The All-India Congress Committee that met at Patna on the 22nd instant altered the present yarn franchise into the alternative franchise of four annas or 2,000 yards of evenly spun yarn, by adopting Pandit Motilal Nehru's resolution. There was a warm discussion whether Khaddar should be used habitually or only on Congress and other ceremonial occasions. The Committee protested against the use of Indian soldiers for suppressing the Chinese movement for freedom and condemned America's ban on Mr. Saklatwala, M. P. The Committee has recommended Congress organisations to call public meetings of all parties on the 11th October to protest against the treatment meted out to our kinsmen in South Africa.

Bombay Mill Strike: Since writing last week, the strike has assumed larger proportions. It is now reported that only three out of the 82 mills are working and that nearly one lakh and forty thousand people are out of work. The few labour leaders and those who sympathise with labour in their hardships are quite helpless beyond making representation to the Government to institute an inquiry into the present industrial crisis. The behaviour of the mill-hands has up to now been very peaceful and exemplary, considering their lack of organisation and unity. It is understood that nearly twenty thousand people have gone back to their villages and many are rushing to the Alexandra docks to take the earliest steamers for their homes in the coast.

The New Law Member: The appointment of Mr. S. R. Das, Advocate General, calcutta, as Law Member in the Imperial Executive Council in the place of Sir P. N. Sarma who is shortly to retire, has almost come as a surprise. Sir Chimanlal Setalvad, Mr. Jinnah, Ballubhai Desai and Pandit Malaviya were among the names mentioned for the post. This undue preference of Bengal to the neglect of Bombay has naturally caused the resentment of both the press and the public in Bombay.

Suppression of Brothels in Madras: It is understood that the Vigilance Committee of Madras of which the Archdeacon is the President is drafting a Bill to bring brothels and prostitutes under proper control with a view to their ultimate suppression. The Archdeacon is being assisted by the Servants of India Society, the Missionaries of the Wesleyan Mission and the Officer-Commanding, Madras. As soon as the Bill is drafted, the Committee will wait in deputation on the Hon'ble the Law Member of the Madras Government, and if the Bill could not be introduced as a Government measure, a private member of the Madras Legislative Council will introduce it. The Bill is on the same lines as those in Bombay, Calcutta and Rangoon.

Infant Mortality in Madras: In the course of a leaderette reviewing the City Health Officer's Report for the year 1924, New India writes: "Last year's Report recorded an infant mortality rate of 254 per 1,000 live births, the lowest ever recorded in the vital statistics of the City. The record excited premature jubilation in certain quarters where it was felt that at least in the Child Welfare Scheme, Madras had hit upon an expedient to counteract all the causes of infant mortality. This year's increased figure of 264 per 1,000 births shows that while Child Welfare work is highly desirable and effective the root-causes of sickness and mortality yet remain to be attacked."

Ban on Political Prisoners: Commenting on the statement made by the Home Member that a person breaking the law "was prima facie evidence that he was not a desirable person to be elected," in the course of the debate on Pandit Sham Lal Nehru's motion for the elimination of the bar against convicted persons, which was passed by the Assembly, the Tribune, Lahore, observes: "Has the Home Member ever asked himself against how many persons, ancient and modern, held in the very highest respect by humanity all over the world he is passing a sentence of exclusion from parliamentary bodies by the rule he is laying down? Is he unaware that under such a rule most of the members of the present Irish Parliament, including a good many of the members of the Irish Government, would have to be excluded from the House? Is he aware that his own chief, the present Secretary of State for India, would have been in exactly the same category if the British Government had been impartial in its treatment of Irish Home Rulers and of Ulstermen and their friends? In England itself have not ex-convicts risen to the very highest position in Parliament? In our own country have not at least two ex-convicts become ministers of the Crown, and did not Sir Alexander Muddiman himself acclaim one of them as his friend only the other day? It is unnecessary to pursue the line of inquiry further. A rule which disqualifies Christ in ancient times and Gandhi at the present day is a rule which stands self-condemned—beyond the possibility of redemption."

The Social Democratic Federation: The Organising Secretary, Royapettah, Madras, writes to us that, as the manifesto issued by him last year regarding the formation of a Constitutional Socialist party, called the Social Democratic Federation of India, Burma and Ceylon, has elicited a sympathetic and favourable response from several prominent public workers, it is proposed to convene a preliminary meeting at Madras at an early date to concert measures for inaugurating the Federation. Its main objects are: (1) nationalisation of the essential instruments of economic production and of all means of public transport and communication, (2) equitable distribution of wealth and equality of opportunities and (3) abolition of war and establishment of a Commonwealth of Nations. It will endeavour to achieve these ideals by constitutional means.

Animal Sacrifices: The Bombay Humanitarian League has addressed a memorial to the rulers of the various States requesting Their Highnesses to prohibit animal sacrifices either by the State or by the public on Dashera days and on other occasions. The occasion for this memorial seems to be the practice generally prevalent in many Indian States and elsewhere of sacrificing animals on the Dashera days. The memorialists rightly point out that our scriptures do not sanction such sacrifices, but that they have only come into vogue by misinterpretation of shastras. It is gratifying to see that many humane Indian princes have prohibited animal sacrifices in their respective States, and it is to be hoped that others also will follow suit.

Control of Family: The Catholic Leader writes: "The Church, far from objecting to, encourages self-control. There is nothing wrong in a couple getting married on the understanding of living as brother and sister for any length of time. This is self-control. Again, there are certain solemn and penitential seasons, like Lent, Advent and the Eves of great Feasts, and husband and wife may, with great merit, exercise self-control on these occasions from a religious point of view. But, it may be said—is not this in some way control of family? It is, but in a lawful way. What the Church will not allow, because it cannot, is any interference with the ordinary course of nature,—not observing self-control, but avoiding the consequences. This is to interfere with God's rights over life in its initial forms. It is always a mortal sin, just as murder is."

The late Sir Ramakrishna Bhandarkar and Christianity: The Subodh Patrika the organ of the Bombay Prarthana Samaj, writes:—"The English and the Marathi editors of the Dnyanodaya in their articles on Sir Ramakrishna, after describing him as India's truest saint, a fearless and ardent reformer, a great, chaste and conscientious scholar, have pitied him because, to put it briefly, he did not accept Jesus Christ as his saviour! Writes the English editor:—"Sir Ramakrishna has shown himself throughout his long life so ardent and fearless a reformer that, we repeat, that it is little less than tragic that he failed to realise that only in Jesus Christ will India obtain adequate reform in either the social or religious realm." The Marathi editor deplores that the Christian missionaries failed to carry the gospel of Christ to Sir Ramakrishna and considers that as an omission of duty for which they should hang their heads in shame! Sir Ramakrishna, these worthy friends perhaps are not aware, had studied the Bible as critically as some of them have done but his very conscientiousness as a scholar and a Bhakta came in his way of accepting the gospel as true. Sir Ramakrishna often used to wonder how men who are otherwise so intelligent as European Christian missionaries generally are, could make up their mind as to believe in the seven days' creation of the world, the virgin birth of Jesus, his sinlessness and his divinity, his miracles and his resurrection. It was a puzzle to him to see these men shutting their eyes steadfastly to the discoveries of Science and to believe in revelation and the Christ incarnation and their many other beliefs which had no foundation in Science. But he used to explain this phenomenon by comparing them with the Karmath-bigotted Brahmins to whom the Vedas with all their inconsistencies are a revealed scripture! As pointed out in our Marathi columns last week, Dr. Bhandarkar used to look upon the worship of Jesus as God and Unity in Trinity as sheer idolatry. And that was why he did not believe that only in Jesus Christ will India obtain adequate reform in either the social or the religious realms. Sir Ramakrishna was intellectually too honest to trifle with his religious convictions formed after mature consideration and study. It was his allegiance to truth which prevented him from calling anything which fell short of it by the glorious name of truth and light. Would that all Christian missionaries were as conscientious and as true devotees of reason as Sir Ramakrishna was!"

New India Assurance Company, Limited: We have received a copy of the Directors' Report of the above Company for the year ending 31st March 1925. In the Fire Department, the net premiums amounted to Rs. 63,95,908-3-6, showing a decrease of Rs. 16,66, 471-5-1 as compared with the previous year, and the net claims, paid and outstanding to Rs. 47,87,195-6-6. The large reduction in premium income in this department seems to be due to the Company's decision to cancel certain American reinsurance business. The reserve for unexpired liability remains at 40% of the premium income for the year. In the Marine Department, the net premiums amounted to Rs. 12,22,572-11-6, and the net claims, paid and outstanding, to Rs. 9,76,915-13-8. The Marine Insurance Fund stands at Rs. 7,98,250-12-6 being equivalent to 65% of the premium income. In the Accident Department, the net premium amounted to Rs. 1,64,148-1-6, showing an increase of Rs. 50,239-7-11 as compared with the previous year, and the claims, paid and outstanding, to Rs. 62,625-0-4. The Reserve Fund remains at 40% of the premium for the year. After making provision for everything, there remains in the Profit and Loss Account a balance of Rs. 5,85,184-7-6, and the Directors recommend that a dividend of Rs. 1 per share shall be paid which will absorb an amount of Rs. 4,74,737, carrying forward to the next account the sum of Rs. 60,447-7-6. The total funds of the Company now stand at Rs. 1,64,01,848-7-6 including Capital Paid-up, Rs. 1,18,68,425. The Company hopes very shortly to get the necessary sanction of the Court for reducing its capital from Rs. 20,00,00,000, to Rs. 10,00,00,000, when the face value of the share will be reduced from Rs. 250 to Rs. 125, of which Rs. 25 will still remain paid up.

NOTES

Is Hinduism Worth Saving? Lala Lajpat Rai has thought it worth his while to answer some persons in the Punjab, presumably Hindus, who, he says, hold that unless Hinduism is destroyed there can be no salvation for the country. Lalaji argues that this is an idle dream. Hinduism which has assimilated so many creeds and cults, which has survived so many catastrophes, and has persisted for so many centuries, will not be destroyed. He suggests that it should be improved by suitable reforms. Lalaji does not go into the secret of the undoubted vitality of Hinduism. Foreign observers who have no access to the soul of Hinduism and, therefore, complacently assume that it has no soul to speak of, think that it has been saved by its social structure. "I firmly believe," wrote Meredith Townsend, "caste to be a marvellous discovery, a form of socialism which through ages has protected Hindu society from anarchy and from the worst evils of industrial and competitive life—it is an automatic poor law to begin with, and the strongest form known of trades union." The poor law character of caste, by the way, is an incident and not of the essence of it, and as for trades unions, the fundamental principle of caste is totally opposed to that of these institutions called forth by the stress of modern industrialism. The European necessarily tries to understand Indian institutions by referring them to the nearest analogues in his experience, and as necessarily succeeds only in caricaturing them to himself and to those who depend upon him for enlightenment on Indian life. Now caste is no more an integral part of Hinduism than the House of Lords is an integral part of British Christianity or even the Church of England. The Parsis are a caste, the Khojas and Bohras are Mahomedan castes, Indian Christians fight over their caste privileges, and Englishmen in India are known for the strong spirit of caste which exists among them. On the other hand, many of the best Hindus of our day have ceased to believe in caste and have given it up in their daily lives. Clearly, then, we must seek elsewhere for the secret of the vitality of Hinduism. We can only say to-day that it is its Brahmagnyan—its longing to know that, which,—to quote the tense language of the Upanishad—being known everything is known. This to-day is what great western thinkers are pressing towards by the method of experiment which is the form of experience to which they attach most importance. The Hindus of whom Lalaji speaks, evidently do not know what Hinduism consists in. They evidently think that it is a matter of custom and ceremony and caste. They must pray for light—get some one to translate to them, that most glorious prayer for light, the gayatri. Even from the politician's point of view, the disappearance of Hinduism would mean the disappearance of the greatest influence that makes for religious toleration, which is the rock upon which the Indian polity has been reared from the dawn of history.

The Burma Expulsion of Offenders Bill: This obnoxious Bill which has aroused a storm of protest throughout the country, was passed by the Burma Legislative Council by a large majority on Monday last in spite of the opposition of Indian members and the non-official Europeans. Though the ostensible object of the Bill is to authorise the expulsion from Burma of non-Burmans convicted of a criminal offence or ordered to furnish security for good behaviour, it is principally aimed at the Indian residents in Burma who form the majority of the non-Burman population. The All-India Congress Committee which recently met at Patna condemned it in no uncertain terms. Its resolution rightly declared that it renders insecure the position of Indians residing in Burma for trade or otherwise and puts an affront upon them implying, as it does, that there are many bad characters among Indian residents requiring drastic course of expulsion. The Indians have settled in large numbers in Burma and, in fact, they have been the pioneers of industrial enterprise there and, as such, they have a large interest in its prosperity to which they have contributed in no small measure. But all this they will have to forfeit now for the sin of their being Indians. The Burmese may commit the most heinous crime, but the non-Burmese (which is practically tantamount to Indian), if convicted even on trivial offences, should be expelled forthwith as an undesirable. It is not difficult to understand the object underlying this policy. The truth is that all political progress in Burma is due to the Indians and, once this thorn on the side of Government is removed, they will have an easy time with the docile Burmese. So much for the effects of the Bill. But there is a fundamental objection to the Bill itself. In as much as domiciled Indians do not come under the purview of this Bill, it might have been something if domicile is defined. But it leaves the definition of domicile to the sweet will and pleasure of individual Magistrates. It passes one's comprehension how it is that the Government of India ever gave its consent at all to a measure of this kind. Now that it has been passed, the only way to prevent its operation is for the Viceroy to withhold his consent from it, if at all he is anxious to respect the wishes of a united India.

Tinnevelly Nadars' Conference: Communal conferences as such are not an evil. It is only when they have a selfish political objective behind them which embitters the relations between the various communities and thus renders the existing cleavages between them wider, that they ought to be discouraged. Any conference, therefore, that is designed to promote the well-being and happiness of a particular community without prejudice to other communities and also to solve its own peculiar problems, ought to be welcomed. The Tinnevelly District Nadar Conference that recently met, affords ample proof of what such conferences can do towards educating a community. Till recently the Nadars were a backward people. Their chief occupation is tapping toddy, and they were subject to many social disabilities and indignities. Slowly, however, by dint of organisation and effort, they have made themselves a political force. Some of the resolutions passed at the Conference are worthy of notice. One resolution requested the Nadars to continue firm in their endeavours to boycott the sale and tapping of toddy and another requested the Nadars in the local Legislative Council to press the Government to adopt a policy of total prohibition. That a community whose occupation is to tap toddy is ready to sacrifice it, is itself proof positive of the success of the prohibition movement in that part of the country as well as the realisation by it of the benefits of prohibition. One resolution regretted that the subordinate officials of the Abkari Department continue to harass by false and vexatious prosecutions the members of the community who refuse to tap or sell toddy at their request. This is a serious allegation. We hope the Department concerned will see that such things do not occur in future.

Churchianity or Christianity?: In his remarkable sermon to the students of Edinburgh, Dean Inge of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, observed more than two years ago that an intelligent and impartial student of the Gospels and Epistles might say that "Christ did not mean to found a religion; his example and teaching are deepening and elevating of the religious principle itself." Many educated Hindus who have openly acknowledged their indebtedness to the teachings of Christ have found themselves in the same position as that of the Hindu leader, who was reported by the Rev. Dewey, in his letter on "Religious Co-operation and Social Service" which we printed in the Reformer of the 5th September, as having declared how easy it would be to proclaim one's belief in the teachings of Christ while in no way altering his religious or social status in the community where he lives. We were led to these reflections when we read the comments of the Examiner, the local Roman Catholic weekly, on the statement of the Hindu leader referred to by the Rev. Dewey. We reprint the Examiner's comments in our news columns. The Examiner makes the astounding revelation that there is nothing like Christianity, but there is only the Christian Church better known as the Catholic Church the membership of which alone would entitle one to be called a Christian. Our contemporary forgets the significance of the remarks of the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Bombay about the Catholic Christian Kolis that, while being members of the Catholic Church, they could not be regarded as Christians unless "one was prepared to give a very broad definition (to the term Christians) to include them". We would commend to the Examiner a careful perusal of the thoughtful address delivered by Principal McKenzie as Chairman of the Bombay Christian Council at a public meeting which was held on the 9th instant. "There could be no more tragic misunderstanding of the mission of the Church", he said, "than that it should be thought that it was concerned simply with the turning of people into a community different from that in which they had been brought up." A recent number of the Dnyanodaya contains the full text of Principal McKenzie's address which deserves to be read and digested by all missionaries, especially by those of the way of thinking of the Examiner who want to supplant Christianity by Churchianity. The Examiner's exposition of Christianity cannot appeal to those who have discarded the outward forms and ceremonials of their own religion as a sort of weeds obstructing closer understanding of true religion. We might also draw the attention of our Catholic contemporary to a remarkable article on "the Christian ideas of Faith and Eternal Life" which appears in the January number of the Hibbert Journal from the pen of Professor James . Ward of Trinity College, Cambridge. "The profession of a creed", writes the eminent Professor, "is a poor substitute for a living faith in New Testament; and a baptismal certificate to start with and a priestly absolution on your death-bed are anything but a clear title to the fruition of eternal life as these understood. Yet, I ask again, are there not thousands of professing Christians who are content with this?" Professor Radhakrishnan's recent address to the Calcutta Missionary Conference reflects the attitude of educated Hindus towards Jesus Christ and organised Christianity.

Anglo-Indian Deputation's Misrepresentation: In an editorial note in the Reformer of September 12th, we made a passing reference to the memorandum submitted by the Anglo-Indian Deputation in England to the Secretary of State for India. That the memorandum contains several misrepresentations is evident from the amende honorable published by the Rev. H. Y. Necker, the President of the Anglo-Indian Association of Southern India and the editor of the Anglo-Indian, the official organ of the Association, as regards the Deputation's statement with regard to the appointment of Anglo-Indians in the Imperial Bank of India. In the September number of the Anglo-Indian, there appears an editorial over the signature of Mr. Necker wherein he refers to the statement of the Anglo-Indian Deputation contained in its memorandum that Anglo-Indians are definitely excluded in the scheme of training Indians for appointment in the official grades of the Bank, and quotes instances to prove that the Deputation's statement is a gross perversion of truth. He concludes: "We most sincerely hope that other similar statements which the memorandum contains will bear scrutiny better than this, for representations based on misrepresentations may discredit not only our Don Quixote and his Sancho Panza, but also us "Forlorns" whom they have sallied forth in true Quixotic spirit to rescue. We hasten to make public our amende honorable to the Imperial Bank of India, Madras, to disclaim all responsibility for the memorandum of the Anglo-Indian Deputation, and to express our thanks to those who do include the Anglo-Indian in their schemes for Indianisation." We do not wish to add to the comments of the President of the Anglo-Indian Association and the Editor of the Anglo-Indian, as the disclaimer of all responsibility for the memorandum coming from such a source is itself sufficient.

Bombay Prostitution Act: Referring to our note on the subject in the last issue of the Reformer, a valued friend writes: "I am interested in your note in the Indian Social Reformer about the Prostitution Act. As to the substance of it, I may mention that I asked Mr. H. Rahimtoola to put two questions on the subject, but Government at the Poona session said that time would be required to prepare an answer. I was not vigilant enough to notice your suggestions as to amending the Prostitution Act, but probably you know from the minutes that the Vigilance Association has sent to Government suggestions for amending the Act, mainly with reference to the punishment for soliciting and to arrest without warrant.....As to soliciting, I have made women on Choupathy move on, but the punishment to which they are at present liable does not make it worth while taking the trouble of prosecuting. My experience is that soliciting, save in Suklaji Street, is less common than it was ten and more years ago, but I may be mistaken. The best way in which to be helpful is to collect the evidence and send it to the Vigilance Association: there is little good in general statements. The phenomenon you seem to be referring to may be related to the reported increase of clandestine prostitutes. I do wonder what your generalisations are founded on."

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, OCTOBER 3, 1925.

INDIAN CULTURE AND WESTERN CIVILISATION—II.

The early Anglo-Indian statesmen, the men who built up the British Empire in this country, did not think that their own culture or civilisation was superior to that of Indians. They lived among the people, talked their language, understood their ways and appreciated their points of view. Sir Thomas Munro, giving evidence before a Parliamentary Committee in 1813, said in reply to a question :

> I do not exactly understand what is meant by the 'civilisation' of the Hindus. In the higher branches of science, in the knowledge of the practice and theory of good government, and in an education which, by banishing prejudice and superstition, opens the mind to receive instruction of every kind from every quarter, they are much inferior to Europeans. But if a good system of agriculture, unrivalled manufacturing skill, capacity to produce whatever can contribute to either convenience or luxury, schools established in every village for teaching reading, writing and arithmetic, the general practice of hospitality and charity amongst each other, and, above all, a treatment of the female sex, full of confidence, respect and delicacy, are among the signs which denote a civilised people—then the Hindus are not inferior to the nations of Europe, and if civilization is to become an article of trade between the two countries, I am convinced that this country (England) will gain by the import cargo.

Politicians like Lord Birkenhead may speak of India before British rule as a sink of iniquity, and Christian Missionaries, for propagandist purposes, fasten upon the dark points, such as exist in every society, of Indian civilisation and proclaim themselves to be the divinely-ordained saviours of Indian society. Even to-day when Europe and America do not wholly depend upon political and propagandist sources for their knowledge of India, the sedulously fostered old prejudices have not disappeared. But it is only fair to say that, so far as Christian Missionaries are concerned, a new generation has grown up which keenly realises the injustice of much of its predecessors' observation and methods, and gladly recognises that India, if she has much to learn from, has also much to teach to the West. In fact, some of them make no secret of their hope that from India will come an interpretation of the meaning of Christ's life and teachings which will help the Churches in their own lands. But the politicians are still at their old game notwithstanding that they must see that it is now nearly played out.

A heavy dead-weight of prejudice thus obstructed the recognition of Indian culture in European and American countries. The pioneer work in this direction was done by the Orientalists who made the Indian classics first accessible to the Western world. Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia" was the first great piece of literature which brought the results of research in the important field of Buddhism within reach of English readers all the world over. Next to the scholars, great credit belongs to the Theosophical Society for popularising Indian culture in western lands. Dr. Besant has herself done a great deal in this direction. Swami Vivekananda, and after him, his colleagues and disciples of the Ramakrishna Mission, have been another channel through which Indian culture has found its way to western countries. Individuals, like Swami Ram Tirth, have also helped the cultural appreciation of India by the West. The writings on Indian Art by Dr. Ananda Coomaraswami and Dr. E. B. Havell, should not be omitted in an enumeration of the ways in which Indian culture has become intelligible and understood in Western lands. The scientific researches of Dr. J. C. Bose, the poetry of Dr. Rabindranath Tagore, and the gospel of non-violence of Mahatma Gandhi, have profoundly modified the Western attitude towards India and Indians. The position to-day may be summed up in a sentence. The old prejudice against India has very nearly disappeared. There is a growing feeling among serious-minded men and women that the barriers which keep India from developing according to her own genius ought, in the interests of world culture, to be steadily removed. In another article, we shall indicate the main lines in which Indian ideas have influenced and are influencing Western culture.

FOREIGN CAPITAL IN INDIA.

It may be recalled that, during the discussion of the Steel Industry Protection Bill in the Legislative Assembly in June 1924, Sir Charles Innes, on behalf of Government, promised to take up separately the question of the influx of foreign capital into India by associating with Government a committee of the Legislature appointed for the purpose. It was in fulfilment of this promise that the External Capital Committee under the chairmanship of Sir Basil Blackett, the Finance Member, was appointed. Its report is now available. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Mr. Goswami have appended to it separate Notes of Dissent. The Fiscal Commission which reported some three years back, made an examination of the subject and, the minority dissenting, favoured the unrestricted influx of foreign capital except when the industry in question received any special concessions from Government, on the ground that such capital not only brought with it advanced technique but also allowed the benefits derived from it to remain in the country itself. The Committee in saying that, as a general principle, the inflow of external capital is not only unobjectionable in itself but is a valuable factor in assisting the development of a country and in

realpatidar.com

increasing its wealth and employment, has practically echoed the majority of the Fiscal Commission with this difference that it concedes that it is even more advantageous that India's requirements for new capital should be supplied from internal sources so far as internal capital is forthcoming. Nobody can dispute the fact that India cannot dispense with foreign capital altogether, for, proverbially shy as Indian capital is, it will be long before all owners of capital can be induced to invest only in productive and remunerative enterprises. But to say, as the Committee does, that foreign capital is not only unobjectionable but also a valuable factor, is rather going too far. It might have been so years ago when India was set on the path of industrialism, but under the altered conditions, far from being so, it is a positive evil. The benefits which foreign capital confers on India, are more than ever compensated by the vast amount of money which leaves the country in the shape of profits to enrich the pockets of the foreign investors.

The main question, therefore, which the Committee had to consider, as Pandit Malaviya says, was, what measures, if any, should be adopted to ensure that in every public company which may be incorporated in India in the future, a certain proportion of capital shall be Indian, and in regard to this point, the Committee cannot be held to have given a satisfactory answer to the Indian public. Except when definite concessions are granted to individual concerns, it says that restrictive measures would be either impracticable or disproportionately injurious to the Indian investor. This would have been justifiable, as Pandit Malaviya points out, under conditions of free trade. And now that Government have adopted a policy of protection of industries by tariffs and bounties, they are bound in fairness to the general consumer to see that the industries which benefit by such tariffs are either wholly or largely Indian, both in the matter of capital and control. The essence of protection is to stimulate indigenous enterprises by making the capital, control and management as far as possible rest in the hands of Indians. The registration of new companies in India with rupee capital, the definite reservation to Indian investors of a proportion of the shares, stipulation for a definite proportion of the directors being Indian and for facilities being afforded for the training of Indian apprentices—, these are some of the modest and reasonable demands made to further this protectionist policy upon which Government have embarked. If such restrictions were not placed upon foreign capital, the result would only be to encourage foreign concerns to come inside the tariff walls. As the minority of the Fiscal Commission observed: "If our colleagues' recommendation is accepted it will be open to every foreigner to establish manufacturing industries in India by means of companies incorporated in their own countries and in their own currency. This danger did not exist under a policy of free trade, but it is bound to materialise when the benefit of protective duties becomes available. . ... The consumer will have paid a higher price, due to protective duties, and the entire manufacturing profit will have gone out of the country". In these circumstances and with such facts as these before it, it is much to be regretted that the Committee has not though fit to adopt any of the suggestions made with a view to ensure the presence of Indian capital and control as far as possible. The Committee says that it has not attempted to estimate the amount of external capital in India, as any such calculation must be largely guess-work. Probably it has deliberately avoided such an enquiry in view of the astounding revelations it will make in regard to the extent to which foreign capital has hold of India. The only point on which there can be no difference of opinion is where the Committee recommends that, for the purpose of developing and making available for investment the large store of dormant capital, a preliminary survey should be undertaken by Government without delay of the whole banking organisation and credit facilities in India, the preliminary survey to be followed by a detailed examination by experts.

COMMUNALISM IN OUR PUBLIC LIFE.

(By a Rational Nationalist).

A Contrast.

The lecture delivered by Mr. Chagla, Secretary of the Bombay Muslim League, on "Hindu-Muslim unity" at the Students' Brotherhood in Bombay last Sunday (13th inst.), and the presidential address of Shah Mohammed Zubair to the Bihar Provincial Conference during the same week at Purulia are two distinctly welcome signs of the time. In the former case almost for the first time in recent years, it may be said, has a Muslim in India sounded the note of true nationalism and of rational politics, however haltingly it may be, and the younger generation of cosmopolitan Bombay may well be proud of it. The lecturer was for divorcing our politics from 'religion' (in the sectarian sense), and he, a Muslim, charged Gandhiji with having committed a "blunder" of the first magnitude in the manner in which the sectarian agitation of the Khilafat was tacked on to the national programme of Swaraj. How instructive is the contrast between this attitude—the only rational one to take—and that of Dr. Kichlu as President of the last year's Khilafat Conference! While the Doctor blamed some (unnamed) Hindu leaders for not taking sufficient interest or showing enough enthusiasm for the Khilafat movement, here is a would-be Musalman leader in Bombay who blames Gandhiji for having taken too great an interest in the same! While the Punjabee is inclined in true communal

realpatidar.com

fashion to suspect the other fellow's motives and to hint (unscrupulously enough) hostility on that fellow's part towards his own, as though all his own were pucca Khilafatists without an exception, here, on the other hand, is a young Muslim Bombayite frank enough (supposing he is a Sunni) to confess that in espousing the Khilafat cause Gandhiji loved the Muslims not wisely but too well! I make the reservation 'supposing he is a Sunni' designedly,—for, if Mr. Chagla happens to be of the Sunni sect, his declaration of the "blunder" of Gandhiji's participation in the Khilafat will be the more significant since the Ottoman Khilafat was really a Sunni affair only. It will also be interesting to know whether Mr. Jinnah, Mr. Chagla's political chief, is a Sunni himself, and why, even if he is a non-Sunni, he did not during the palmy days of the Khilafat come out and either take part in the 'Islamic' agitation, or boldly oppose it then as a 'blundering' mixture of politics and religion. No doubt it was a Sunni concern, but if a Hindu like Gandhiji could lead it, surely many non-Sunni Muslims in India might have participated in it,—but how many did? But be that as it may, both Mr. Jinnah's example and Mr. Chagla's confession knock the bottom completely out of the Tanzimite Doctor's petulant complaint aired at the Belgaum Conference about Hindu politicians' want of sympathy towards the Khilafat agitation,—not to speak of Turkey's own action in the matter.

Unconscious Self-contradiction.

However, it is a matter for gratification that the true note of national politics has been sounded at last in one quarter, and we may hope that it will be echoed soon in other quarters also. Not that Mr. Chagla and his chief have put themselves right on the communal questions as completely as one would wish; for, by their very positions in public life at present, they are directly, though unconsciously, contradicting their liberal professions. Thus while they deprecate any mixture of politics and 'religion,' inconsistently enough, one is the Secretary and the other the President of the Bombay Muslim League, a political body which is founded on a religious creed, because restricted to those who profess a particular religion, and they acknowledge no other political body, moderate or extremist, founded only on political principles. We cannot also forget that Mr. Jinnah is opposed to Dr. Besant's Commonwealth of India Bill, for the only reported reason that it does not provide for communal representation with separate electorates for Muslims, despite the fact that it provides for 'reservation' of seats for all claimant communities with, of course, a due time-limit. While Mr. Shaukat Ali, the erstwhile Moslem-Leaguer, has signified his satisfaction with the Bill including the said provision by signing the memorandum covering the Bill, we find that Mr. Jinnah, once acclaimed as 'the ambassador of Hindu-Muslim unity' and still professing to abhor any miscegenation of politics with religion, can bring himself to give the unkindest cut of all to a constructive national effort like Dr. Besant's. What a sweet irony this, for 'Hindu-Muslim' unitarians to contemplate!

The Lucknow Pact.

Such obvious self-contradiction in position is not all. Mr. Chagla's confession, remarkable as it is for an office-bearer of the Moslem League, still has some traditional fallacies lurking in it. They are not at all peculiar to him, but they are the shibboleths of every-day political life. They are implied in the term 'Hindu-Muslim,' itself—as when we say 'Hindu-Muslim unity,' 'Hindu-Muslim question,' 'Hindu-Muslim problem' and what not. In my opinion, the Lucknow Pact of 1916 which Mr. Chagla professes to admire as a national achievement or as a landmark, was in reality a piece of short-sighted, selfish 'log-rolling' (the Reformer's phrase) which was carried out between the short-sighted and selfish Hindu bosses of the Congress and the selfish and short-sighted Muslim leaders of the League. It was that Pact in the first place, and the Khilafat agitation only in the next, that have induced the 'Hindu-Muslim' mind, instead of the desired 'Indian' mind, into our body politic. The framers of that Pact were blind to two most vital facts which even a schoolboy less precocious than Macaulay's might have been alive to. First, whatever be the case with the Musalmans, the Hindus are not a community in any appreciable sense, except perhaps in a metaphysical or semi-religious sense. There are within the nominal Hindu fold sections and communities more backward than the most backward classes of Muslims, though infinitely less vocal than the 'politically important' Muslims. Indeed, if any sections of the Indian population need special protection by a Pact, they are the aborigines, and the 'untouchables,' 'unapproachables,' 'unseeables' and 'unhearables' amongst the Hindus. But what do our political bosses care for them, so long as there are no Depressed-Class Leagues to make themselves sufficiently inconvenient to the bosses? To our Pact-mongers the 'untouchables' have ever remained unthinkables! Yet a member of these classes has not hesitated to sign Mrs. Besant's memorandum, which Mr. Jinnah and his ilk think impossible to do! Secondly, Muslims and Hindus are not the only two 'communities' in India. Everybody knows, even Lord Birkenhead knows, that there are a good few others: Christians, Sikhs, Parsis, Jains, Jews and Buddhists. Already we have had the segmentation of Christians and Non-Brahmins in the South, and Sikhs and non-Sikhs in the Punjab from the irrational 'non-Mahomedan' kingdom out of the two contemplated by the 1916 Pact; and whereas then only the Mahomedans claimed and got separate electorates, now two more sections, viz., the Christians in Madras and Sikhs in the Punjab, have succeeded in getting themselves recognised as chosen peoples within the nation, and have separate electorates. But to judge from what our communalists have been incessantly saying, recommending and formulating 'Hindu-Muslim unity,'—these and other classes might not very well exist! They know only Hindus and Muslims. Who knows it will not be Sunnis and non-Sunnis to-morrow? For, are not the non-Sunnis (Qadianis, Khojas and other Shias) a minority among the Muslims? Why, only last year the Sunnis of

Thana held a meeting and protested against the appointment of a Shia Bohra gentleman as an Honorary Magistrate and called for the appointment of one from among themselves in place of or at least in addition to that of the Shia. So, where shall we stop? Surely Mr. Chagla and his political friends cannot expect that the revised edition of the Lucknow Pact on which their hearts are so fondly bent will be treated as the law of the Medes and Persians by any sectarian movement that may rise up in future to nurse a grievance against it, any more than the original Lucknow Pact is treated as such a law by the present Moslem League. It is so sacrosanct that Dr. Kichlu at the Belgaum Khilafat Conference wanted it to be 'burnt'.

CONTROLLING SEX.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Your correspondent 'Student', in his letters on 'Sex in Control' has indulged in a mass of verbiage full of contradictions. He admits that 'the sex relation...should be based first and foremost on...biologic compatibility and psychic affinity.' Also that 'the experience of sex should originate and centre never in overhead compulsion, but in the free choice of the heart's desire.' In the next letter, however, he advocates legal compulsion to monogamy without divorce, on the ground that the numbers of men and women are approximately equal, and that it is admittedly the best form of marriage. That a thing is admitted does not necessarily mean that it is true, and the approximate equality of numbers is no argument. He wants the help of education, legislature and religion to enforce a strict monogamy, not the present theoretical monogamy practised in Europe. I should like to know which religion advocates monogamy. Or is a new one to be started with a revelation about monogamy? He says he is opposed to divorce because he thinks it is an admission of failure of marriage, but would permit 'separation' if there is 'alienation of affection'. Is not separation a failure of marriage? Certainly, but it is not admission of failure. 'Student' does not mind failures, he only objects to an admission of failures! He says 'matrimonial mal-adjustments' can be prevented by marriage laws. Why not make a law preventing 'alienation of affection'? It would be equally sensible and equally effective.

He says 'Rational Control, (meaning compulsory monogamy) agrees that sex satisfaction is a normal experience deserving of public approval; but goes on to declare that the right to such an experience belongs...to any adult sufficiently sound in mind and body'. This right to sexual satisfaction is obviously not to be an absolute right since 'Student' himself admits that the free choice of both parties is necessary. If this is so, how is one to agree with the following: 'legal compulsion towards that end (monogamy), like a law for the equitable distribution of wealth, means essentially not restriction, but opportunity. If no particular class is allowed to hoard up a supply of mates, the opportunity for normal constructive sex satisfaction found in marriage will be generally available for every individual.' What I gather from this is that a desirable individual of one sex will naturally be desired by a considerable number of the other sex. He or she is to be monopolised by one individual only, so that the others will have to look elsewhere and be forced to accept less desirable mates, who would otherwise have not had any opportunity of getting one at all. And this is apparently 'free choice'! It is perfectly true that freedom in sex matters cannot be absolute, since it has necessarily to be modified by the freedom of other individuals. It is absurd to try to give satisfaction to every individual by legislation. And it is certainly contrary to the most elementary Eugenics. I am as opposed to polygamy as anybody can be, I mean, if the law has anything to do with it. I am equally opposed to legal monogamy. Monogamy is the perfectly unjustifiable legal monopoly of one individual by another. I oppose it on the same grounds as I oppose slavery even when the owner of the slave may be quite a humane person. Polygamy being the monopoly of several individuals by one, is of course much worse. The sex affairs of two individuals are their private concern, not affecting society, unless there are children or disease involved. Both these can now be prevented. The only sensible legislation in this matter will be to prevent undesirable parents from having any progeny at all, and all parents from having more than they can bring up, or, if society undertakes the bringing up, from having more than a certain number, to avoid over-population. Any other legislation is unnecessary interference with individual liberty and, as such, unjustifiable. Self-control is desirable to prevent excess. But the control must come from within, not from without. I do not require legislation to tell me how much I shall eat. The experience of every individual tells him what is good for his health, and any ontside interference is naturally resented.

'Student' thinks his solution is perfect because it takes scraps from three different theories. In reality he is influenced more by the 'Sinfulness' theory more than by any others. He says: 'Self-control, indeed, is always necessary; and especially before marriage, and between non-married persons.' Here obviously the function of self-control is not to prevent excess, but to prevent 'illicit' relations. Sexual satisfaction is apparently a sin allowed by law under certain conditions, as artificial abortion is sometimes legal.

After all this mass of contradictions, I have to congratulate 'Student' on arriving at conclusions as regards birth-control which are mostly acceptable to people who reason. But even here, 'Student' is not logical. If voluntary marriage means legal compulsion to monogamy, why should even voluntary parenthood be unrestricted? Here, at any rate, the State is directly concerned and would be justified in preventing undesirable children. But here, restriction being justified, 'Student' advocates perfect freedom!

Girgaum, Bombay, Yours etc.,

APISH MENTALITY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

May I write a few lines in reply to your correspondent who has written on 'Apish Mentality'?

Men and women living in cities are thrown into a fashionable society and they try to adapt themselves—their dress and manners—to the society in which they move. Is that wrong? And because they dress beautifully—according to their idea of beauty—does it mean that they lack the spirit of service, sympathy, good-will and peace towards mankind? May not an up-to-date 'Kala Sahib' have a kind heart beneath his stylish coat—a short coat held by one button, and may not the girl who wears a pretty bonnet to suit her face, a well-cut frock, silk stockings and high-heeled shoes, do social service?

It is only in cities that you find so much thought bestowed on dress. The very men and women who dress in the height

realpatidar.com

of fashion, when in a city, think no more about such things hen they go to the districts; their sense of beauty finds expression in other ways.

A man who is captivated merely by the 'beauty and grandeur of the quaint costume' suffers and deserves to suffer for his lack of insight, because he has failed to choose the true worth, the loving heart of a woman.

Does a girl who thinks so much about the 'izzat' in polished society, seek employment as a nurse or compounder, catechist or health visitor?

If by mutual consent the wife takes to some employment, it is because she feels that her husband and children are not comfortable enough with the money earned by the husband alone and that she ought to share the burden of earning, to keep the family fairly comfortable. If the husband had given his willing consent to the wife to work, then neither gossip nor criticism can ever mar their married life. Unkind people are ever ready to gossip but it does not affect great minds.

We are often told that freedom does not mean rebellion against authority—exemption from all responsibility. The husband who gives his wife full liberty, treats her as his companion, as one who is equally capable of taking a share in the support of the family. The wife who is so treated knows her duty to her husband and children and renders the service needed in the home. Granted that the children who attend Anglo-Indian and European Schools are invariably impressed by the externals are unable to find the real values. But why not send Indian children to Indian schools?

The woman who works cannot devote as much attention to the home as the one who stays at home, although her heart is there as much as the other's. But she must help her husband and give her children comforts and the advantages of movements which exist for the improvement of their mental and physical faculties, education, music and sports. I think the writer of 'Apish Mentality' is very severe and has drawn a very dark and bitter side of the picture.

THE PURITY MISSION SOCIETY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

A small leaflet has just come to my hands. It is the report of a new society called "The Purity Mission Society." The report says that the Society was started six months ago "under the auspices of the Central Labour Board with the object of propagating ideas of Temperance reform and purity of life among the masses, it being known that the workers waste their money in drink and in practising other evil habits." The beauty of the work is that Mr. Jhabwalla's comrades who go with him for propagating temperance etc., are themselves labourers. This is the right way of working as it is through the influence of the literate labourers that the surging mass of the illiterate can be roused. The aims and objects of the Mission are very laudable. I have had the good fortune of occasionally witnessing their activities and it was a pleasing sight to see this enthusiastic band under Mr. Jhabwalla working every Sunday. This party took with them a sadhu who used to chant religious songs etc. These songs together with the sermons of Mr. Jhabwalla and his companions visibly moved the crowd and once I saw a drunkard kneeling before Mr. Jhabwalla and taking a vow to keep Lord Bacchus at arm's length.

Besides music and sermons the party distributes freely handbills and the report says that more than 20,000 were distributed during six months. One of these handbills gave Lord Buddha's Ten Commandments. This is good propaganda work during its existence of six months.

Lastly the report says that the Mission distributed clothes to children from donations received from philanthropic gentlemen. Looking at the work done by the Mission during its short existence of six months, one can expect much more in the future. In concluding his report Mr. Jhabwalla appeals for funds to give food and clothing to these starving and naked children of Mother India. Let us hope the public responds and helps a deserving cause.

Bombay, Yours etc.,

INDIA'S POLITICAL CONFUSION.

The Dnyanodaya, the organ of the following six missions working in the area of the Bombay Christian Council—American Marathi, American Presbyterian, Church of the Brethren, Methodist Episcopal, United Free Church of Scotland and Wesleyan Methodist—has the following in its editorial notes in this week's issue:

We cannot help feeling that both the Government of India and the leaders of Indian politics are being guilty of frittering away the golden opportunity which offered itself on the return of Lord Reading from England after his conferences with the Secretary of State. We deplore what we cannot but describe as the Government's reactionary attitude to the Legislative Assembly's practically united demand for reform on the lines indicated in the Minority Report of the Muddiman Committee and we think Government is in danger of greatly over-rating the importance of the Council of State's negativing of the Assembly's proposals. Then too, what would Englishmen and Scotsmen in Britain itself say to a statesman who referred to the Prohibition decision of the Bombay Government in the apparently minatory tone Sir Basil Blackett seems to have adopted in his speech on Local Option and Prohibition for all India, a speech which was unworthy of any British statesman? If he were to adopt such a tone in the House of Commons, the Government would be turned out the next day. What kind of things enrage and irritate Indian public men is illustrated by the drama now being enacted in connection with a license which the licensing authorities wish to thrust upon the unwilling inhabitants all around Tribhuvan Road, Girgaum, Bombay, who have sent in earnest protests in a constitutional way, only to keep being frustrated. But if Government and some of its officials are making grave mistakes, what shall be said of the All-India Congress Committee which is stultifying itself in various directions, one being that 'though the Congress is pledged to prohibition, there are members of it who make no secret of their partiality for liquor, of course, in moderation. Mr. Gandhi and the Congress Committee have not had the courage to demand that every member of the Congress shall be a total abstainer, though he must be a spinner.

Dear Sir,—On September the 10th the Statesman had the following paragraph in its "Occasional Notes":—

"The complete withdrawal of the ban upon German entrants into India was of course inevitable, and the 5 years' period of grace or rather of disgrace—having now fully expired, the Government has given its formal sanction to their admission under conditions identical with those attaching to other immigrants. One wonders how many members of the old "Deutscher Verein" will have the hardihood to revisit Calcutta! It is significant that permission has not yet been given to German missionaries to return to their former spheres of work. The hesitation of the authorities is natural, and should be maintained at least until a more settled atmosphere prevails in India. Professing Christian missionaries who could take advantage of the hospitality of the British raj to undermine the loyalty of the simple people coming under their influence should not be given another opportunity of doing mischief."

The following letter was sent to the Statesman Office (by Rev. H. Anderson) on September the 11th.

Sir,—A few individual German Missionaries are already in India working in connection with other societies. The Government of India has now opened the door to German Missionary Societies to return if they desire to do so. Your charge against German Missionaries of disloyalty is an old calumny that will not bear investigation. As long ago as 1916 the Metropolitan of India, then Bishop of Chota Nagpur, characterised the anonymous charges of disloyalty made against German missionaries in that area as malicious falsehoods. They were charged with stirring up the Oraons but the Government of Bihar itself repudiated the suggestion as did the Anglican Missionaries working side by side with them. They were charged with having pictures of the German Emperor in all their schools. Enquiry proved that in 267 schools only one had seen a picture—and that had been placed there under very special circumstances. They were charged with inculcating disloyalty throughout a Mundari text book in use. That book had never been in use and did not inculcate disloyalty. Finally they were charged with praying for the German Emperor in their public services, where the truth was no such prayer was included in their liturgies—but one for the King-Emperor was regularly used. Our national reputation for fair play goes, if we charge a band of 800 men and women with a crime that could not be brought home at the worst to more than a very few individuals among them. The pre-war record of German Missionary work in India has been one of devotion and success.

OPIUM CONSUMPTION IN ASSAM.

(By Mr. C. F. Andrews)

It is necessary, in order not to discuss the matter too vaguely, to give the actual Government figures for opium consumption in Assam, comparing them with some definite standard. We have such a standard now offered to us by the League of Nations, which has fixed the normal consumption,—including all medical uses and leaving a big margin over for exceptional circumstances.—as 600 milligrammes per annum per individual or 6 seers per 10,000 when taking the whole population of a country.

How liberal this League of Nations' amount of six seers is, may be seen by taking the Sylhet figure for 1922-23, which only came to 0·991 seers per 10,000 in a population of two and a half millions. It is, when seen in comparison with such consumption figures as these, which are quite normal over very large areas of British India, that the enormity of the consumption in Assam, and especially in the Brahmaputra Valley, where the figures are between 200 and 300 seers per 10,000 becomes apparent. It is evident at once from these enormously high figures, that the Assamese indigenous races and the Hill Tribes are extravagant consumers. Such a conclusion is not a new one. It is found recorded in every book that deals with Assam. Nevertheless when comparative figures are given, the situation more readily strikes the imagination and leaves a deeper impression behind it.

First let me take the provinces of India and show Assam's position. Instead of the 6 seers per 10,000, of the League of Nations, the index figure for Assam in 1922-23, including Sylhet, is 52 seers per 10,000 of the population. If, however, Sylhet were to be excluded, the figure would be over 80 seers per 10,000; and if only the five Upper Assam districts were taken, it would be nearly 130 seers per ten thousand.

But let us take the Assam Province, exactly as it stands including Sylhet, and compare it with the other provinces. The list in 1922-23 reads as follows:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Assam | ... | ... | 52 |
| Bengal | ... | ... | 8 |
| Behar | ... | ... | 8 |
| United Provinces | ... | ... | 6 |
| Punjab | ... | ... | 11 |
| Madras | ... | ... | 8 |
| Bombay | ... | ... | 22 |
| Central Provinces | ... | ... | 16 |
| Burma | ... | ... | 28 |

Here it is clear that Assam has a thoroughly bad eminence having nearly double the consumption of any other Province even when Sylhet is included.

But let us go a little further back to the year 1919-20 before the Non-co-operation movement began. In that year the consumption of opium in Assam was 1,718 maunds compared with 961 maunds in 1922-23. Therefore the consumption for the whole of Assam came to the index figure (speaking roughly) 90 seers per 10,000 people instead of 52 seers per 10,000.

Let me now take the consumption, district by district, and give (i) the population, (ii) the consumption of opium in seers, (iii) the rate of consumption in seers per 10,000 people. We must continually keep in mind the League of Nations' index figure of six seers per ten thousand as our standard of comparison. Anything above that figure is bad; anything below that figure is good.

First of all, let us take the table for 1922-23 (using the Census figures of 1921 for the population.) The table is as follows:—

| District | Population | Consumption in seers | Rate of consumption per 10,000. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cachar | 527,228 | 1,032 | 19.574 |
| Sylhet | 2,541,341 | 252 | 0.990 |
| Goalpara | 763,523 | 173 | 2 268 |
| Kamrun | 762,671 | 3,472 | 45.524 |
| Darrang | 477.935 | 5,101 | 106.729 |
| Nowgong | 397,921 | 6,909 | 173.627 |
| Sibsagar | 823,197 | 9,133 | 110.945 |
| Lakhimpur | 588,295 | 11,176 | 189.972 |

Secondly let me take the figures of 1919-1920 before the Non-co-operation movement. The table is as follows:—

| District | Population | Consumption in seers | Rate of consumption |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cachar | 517,000 | 1,393 | 26.770 |
| Sylhet | 2,501 000 | 337 | 1.305 |
| Goalpara | 748,000 | 260 | 3.467 |
| Kamrun | 732,000 | 7,547 | 103.384 |
| Darrang | 474,000 | 8,301 | 170.167 |
| Nowgong | 389,000 | 11,923 | 205.720 |
| Sibsagar | 807.000 | 13,847 | 170.950 |

BOMBAY GOVERNMENT'S BETRAYAL.

We make no apology in filling the columns of this issue of the Supplement with Indian press opinions on the disallowance by the Governor of Bombay of the introduction of Mr. Pradhan's Local Option Bill, and with the remarkable rejoinder of the Council of the Deccan Sabha to the local Government's reply to its memorandum. The Governor's disallowance of the introduction of the Local Option Bill which has received wide support from the Indian press and public bodies including the various missionary bodies, marks the culmination of retrogression in the Bombay Government's excise policy to which we have referred more than once in these columns. Coming as it does so soon after the passing of the Prohibition resolution in the Legislative Assembly by the unanimous vote of the non-official Indian members, the Governor's action is not without some significance. Sir Basil Blackett's speech in the Assembly opposing the Prohibition resolution contains an indirect rebuke to the Bombay Government in accepting prohibition as the goal of its excise policy, and it is not unreasonable to infer as the Tribune rightly suggests that His Excellency's disallowance of the Bill means that either he is going back upon the declared policy of his Government under the influence and pressure of Simla opinion or his Government was indulging in a camouflage when it declared Prohibition as the ultimate goal of its excise policy.

We do not wish to comment at length on the action of the Bombay Governor which is in wanton disregard of the complete consensus of public opinion in the country. The singularly unanimous support of the Indian Press to the Assembly's resolution on Prohibition cannot but have a wide moral effect. The civilised world will come to know that it is the Government that stands against the people to bring about Prohibition in this country. Speaker after speaker during the debate in the Assembly pointed out that religious dictates, tradition and sentiment of both the Hindus and Mahomedans demand Prohibition. Dr. S. K. Datta, representing the Indian Christian community, showed in a vigorous speech that on medical and economic considerations Prohibition could not be delayed. But Sir Basil Blackett, the Finance Member, in a long speech, couched in the language typical of an anti-Prohibitionist, declared that it was quite impossible to accept anything in the nature of a commitment by Government to a statement that the ultimate goal of policy should be Prohibition. It is interesting to read the trenchant criticism of the Dnyanodaya edited not by an Indian extremist but by a sober Englishman, on Sir Basil Blackett's defence of Government's policy. In this week's issue, the Dnyanodaya, the organ of six different missions, characterises Sir Basil Blackett's speech as "unworthy of any British statesman." "If he were to adopt such a tone in the House of Commons", writes our contemporary, "the Government would be turned out the next day." We are unable to force the will of the nation on the Government. The Government has un-equivocally declared its opposition to Prohibition. It is a challenge to the nation, and we must take up the challenge by co-ordinating the forces at work for the cause of Prohibition. Fortunately in this respect, not only are the Hindus and Mahomedans equally strong in their demand for Prohibition, but we have also the support of that body of American and English Missionaries—who should be distinguished from others of their countrymen in that they have come to serve India in the spirit of their Master and not to rule and exploit according to the dictates of Imperialism.

BOMBAY LOCAL OPTION BILL.

Governor Disallows Introduction.

In intimating to Mr. R. G. Pradhan, M. L. C., the Governor's refusal to accord his previous sanction to the introduction of Mr. Pradhan's Local Option Bill, the Private Secretary writes to Mr. Pradhan as follows:

"With regard to the preliminary point whether His Excellency's previous sanction under Section 80 C of the Government of India Act is required or not I am to say that His Excellency after considering your arguments and on the advice of his legal advisers has decided that the Bill is a measure affecting the public revenues and cannot, therefore, be introduced without his previous sanction. As His Excellency has already explained to you every endeavour has been made to meet your wishes and the possibility of amending your Bill in such a way as you suggest so as to provide that effect should not be given to its provision until the taxation necessary to prevent any loss of revenues had been passed by the Legislative Council has been carefully examined but no such amendment has been found practicable. As matters stand however it is only the Bill in the form in which it was submitted with your letter of June 28th that is before His Excellency for consideration and in this connection I am to remind you that the Excise Committee stated in paragraph 212 of their report as follows: Before any steps are taken to introduce any changes into the present excise system the necessary legislation should be passed which may enable Government to impose the taxation requisite to avoid financial difficulties.

His Excellency has been advised to accept this recommendation of Excise Committee and does not therefore find it possible to accord his sanction to the introduction of your bill."

Indian Press Comments.

( The Bombay Chronicle.)

After deep cogitation lasting for months, the Governor has disallowed Mr. R. G. Pradhan's modest bill for Local Option which received widespread support all over the Presidency. The reason assigned is similar to that which the Government urged in their reply to the representation of the Deccan Sabha—in fact it is the one reason always assigned in this country for obstructing all progressive and beneficent measures, that of revenue considerations. Since anyone can quote the Bible, the authority is cited of the Excise Committee which held that before any changes were introduced in the excise system, legislation should be passed for filling the financial gap. As Mr. Pradhan's bill discreetly left out the problem of making up the fiscal loss, the Governor having been advised to accept the recommendation of the Excise Committee has vetoed the measure. This reverence for the Excise Committee's opinion is very touching but we wish His Excellency had been "advised to accept" some other pertinent facts also. Apart from the success of local option elsewhere or the responsibility of the bureaucracy for the exhaustion of the taxable capacity, the primary fact is that the Committee itself favoured the adoption of local option as one of the steps for enforcing a policy of prohibition and for the Government to rely on its opinion when it suits it is hardly fair. More important, however, is the fact that Government in their Resolution on the Committee's Report declared that "they do not think it necessary to make the increased taxation an integral part of their new excise policy." But while the recouping of loss to excise revenue is to be no bar against the acceptance of a policy of prohibition, it is enough to mutilate and scotch a concrete proposal for furthering that policy. If the perfunctory treatment meted out to the measure is an indication of the Government's sincerity in promoting prohibition, we prefer Sir Basil Blackett's frank negation.

( The Mahratta, Poona. )

The Prohibition Bill which Mr. R. G. Pradhan intended to introduce in the Bombay Legislative Council, has received strong support in the Presidency, but strangely enough, H. E. the Governor has refused to grant the necessary previous sanction to it. The ground on which the sanction has been refused makes an interesting reading. The report of the Excise Committee in its paragraph 212, states that "before any steps are taken to introduce any changes in the present excise system the necessary legislation should be passed which may enable Government to impose the taxation requisite to avoid financial difficulties." His Excellency has been advised to accept this recommendation of the Excise Committee and did not find it possible to accord his sanction to the introduction of the Bill. We fail to see any logic in this. If the necessary legislation to avoid financial difficulties must needs be undertaken who prevents the Government from introducing such legislation? If the Government proposal is unacceptable, the Council will suggest alternatives. In fact, the advocates of the policy of Prohibition have expressed their readiness to support any suitable taxation if necessary in order to stop the unholy trade in alcohol. Except a few officials, the real representatives of the people are unanimous that the money from this tainted source is not needed by the people. They would go to any length of new taxation if the Government puts a stop to the liquor traffic. Mr. Pradhan is resourceful and his armory is full. He would do well to table a resolution embodying the above desire of the people and put the Government in the wrong.

( The Tribune, Lahore. )

After the Finance Member's declaration in a recent debate in the Assembly against prohibition being made the goal of the Government policy in India, and his somewhat ironical observation about the Bombay Government having fixed the limit of one or two centuries by which to attain complete prohibition, it was only to be expected that the Governor of Bombay would refuse his previous sanction, under section 80 of the Government of India Act, to the introduction of Mr. R. G. Pradhan's Bill providing for local option as a step leading to total prohibition. Local option is a matter in respect of which enlightened public opinion in India has always been unanimous, and the acceptance of the goal of prohibition by the Bombay Government, to which more than one member referred in the recent debate, has no meaning and no reality if that Government is not prepared to support the introduction of local option as a step leading to it. The action of the Governor of Bombay can, therefore, mean only one of two things. Either he is going back upon the decision of his Government under the influence and pressure of Simla opinion, or his Government only indulged in a camouflage when it announced its acceptance of the goal of prohibition.

( The Swarajya, Madras. )

It is curious that the Bombay Government, which is supposed to hold very advanced views on the subject of prohibition, should have refused sanction to Mr. Pradhan's bill for Local Option. It would be remembered that the Bombay Excise Committee reported in favour of ultimate Prohibition and that this was accepted in principle by the Bombay Government. This bold declaration was hailed as a sign of a new and liberal policy in Excise matters, and it was confidently expected that the lead given by Bombay would encourage other provinces to start work on the same lines. But the present action of the Bombay Governor, in disallowing the Bill, stands in strange contrast to the declared policy. If Prohibition is accepted as the ultimate objective what objection could there be to a bill which merely seeks to carry out the policy of the Government? Should the Legislative Council be even prohibited from discussing such measures? The Government of India Act has been so framed that it is within the power of the Governor to shutout even from discussion any bill which affects the revenues of the province. But if these extraordinary powers, which are meant to be used for exceptional circumstances, are to be taken advantage of to disallow every bill of importance, it is a mocking irony to give it the grand name of "a Legislative Council." Probably the explanation for the Bombay Governor's present attitude is to be found in the speech of Sir Basil Blackett in the Assembly two weeks back. In a taunting speech which

he made on that occasion, he plainly declard that "in India the ultimate goal of Prohibition is an experiment which should not be tried or thought of." When reminded of the Bombay Government's view, he said; "It is not possible for the Government of India to give directions to Provincial Governments as to what their action should be in regard to Provincial Transferred subjects, but I am inclined to agree that if a policy of Local Option or Prohibition in going to be attempted by Local Governments with any great vigour, then the Government of India will not be able to look on." This threat seems to have had the desired effect on the Bombay Government. The Assembly voted for a policy of Total Prohibition, and desired as a first step, that Local Governments should be directed immediately to inaugurate a policy of Local Option. Within two weeks of the passing of this resolution, the very Government which declared Prohibition as its ultimate goal, has refused permission for even the introduction of a Local Option Bill. We do not know if the views of the Bombay Excise Minister have also undergone a rapid change. In any case, we do not see how he can appropriately remain in office after this decision of the Governor.

BOMBAY GOVERNMENT'S EXCISE POLICY.

Deccan Sabha's Rejoinder.

In a remarkable rejoinder to the Bombay Government's reply (which we printed in the July Supplement) to its memorandum (which we printed in May Supplement), the Council of the Deccan Sabha observes:

Government express the opinion at the outset that it is impracticable to lay down "an early time limit", in which total prohibition, which is the accepted goal of their excise policy, should be reached. It is not clear from the letter under reference whether Government think it impracticable to fix an early time limit, or any time limit, early or late. It would seem from a later paragraph in this letter that, in their opinion, it is not practicable to set any limit of time whatever. For the sake of clearness it would be well if Government informed the public what precisely they felt on the matter, whether they believed that it was not feasible to bring about total prohibition at an early date, or whether they believed that no date, near or distant, could be named when prohibition would cease to be an aspiration for the future, but would become an accomplished fact even assuming that normal conditions prevailed in the interval.

Government give two reasons for refusing to mention a period within which they would expect the measures of their excise policy to eventuate in a complete cessation of the drink and drug traffic: (1) the fact that the Excise Committee did not recomend a definite time limit and (2) the uncertainty of the Legislative Council voting the necessary supplies to replace the excise revenue. As to the first reason, the Council of the Sabha would point out that the Excise Committee did not recommend a specific period for the achievement of total prohibition because they were aware that such a time limit was implicit in their recommendations. "These steps (they say) recommended by the Committee will, in actual operation, lead to (the) extinction (of the liquor traffic) within a definite maximum limit of time and may hasten such extinction, but not delay it, should people and Government combine to bring it about sooner. In fact our scheme has been so devised as to admit of the whole traffic in liquor being totally abolished as soon as desired by the community, but will not, if once adopted and properly acted upon, delay the closing of the last liquor shop in the Presidency beyond any calculable limit of time". The extract shows that the Committee could calculate the outside limit of time when the whole Presidency would go dry, but did not lay down such a limit because they were sanguine that prohibition would come about much sooner. If the Committee's recommendations were adopted in toto, a time limit might be superfluous, but Government do not accept and do not mean to give effect to many important recommendations of the Committee, which fact renders it necessary that Government should declare a period within which, at the latest, total prohibition will, according to their intentions, be enforced throughout the Presidency. At all events Government, having turned down the Excise Committee's recommendation in favour of local option, by which the Committee laid much store, cannot in fairness now quote in their support the authority of the Committee against prescribing a definite time limit for the accomplishment of prohibition. In the absence of local option, it would mainly rest with Government when and how they would take successive steps required for introducing prohibition—a contingency against which the Committee guarded themselves in advance by declaring that they were altogether opposed to "leaving it to Government to carry out the final extinction of consumption according to their wishes and convenience and the fiscal and other exigencies of the State". It is clear from this that the Excise Committee's Report does not afford a justification to Government for their failure to lay down a time limit.

The other reason assigned by Government is equally void of justification. It is of course true that Government cannot carry out a policy leading by gradual steps to total prohibition without the co-operation of the Legislative Council; but the Sabha cannot understand how this self-evident truth militates against the laying down of a time limit by Government. What of course Government mean is that they may desire to introduce prohibition soon enough, but they may be foiled in the attempt to do so if the Council does not manifest a willingness to devise other means of raising a revenue equal in amount to what will be lost by prohibition. But the same reason can be advanced with equal validity against adopting any other measure of excise policy. Even such a small matter as the closure of shops in taluka towns on fair days, on which Government have decided, depends for its execution on the co-operation they will receive at the hands of the Legislative Council in replacing the revenue that will thus be lost. This has not, however, deterred Government from adopting this policy in advance. Evidently they anticipate the approval of the Council. This is precisely what the Sabha wishes Government to do in respect of laying down a time limit. Nor have Government any misgivings as to the Council's readiness to vote the necessary money, for they express complete confidence in the attitude of the Council in the following words in their Resolution No. 982-24: "Government have no doubt (they say) that both the Legislative Council and the public would willingly assent to any increased taxation that would be necessary to meet this two-fold drain on their resources" (viz., the extinction of the excise revenue and the additional expenditure on a larger preventive staff).

In fact, the support of the Legislative Council is necessary not only in making up the loss of revenue, but in adopting any policy whatever, apart from the financial consequences that may ensue therefrom. A policy of checking excessive consumption of alcoholic liquors, e. g., though it may not involve Government in any financial loss, still requires the Council's approval; and if this approval be not forthcoming, if on the contrary the Council be in favour of encouraging consumption, Government will not be able to put its policy into effect irrespectively of the question of money. A legislature's sanction is no doubt an indispensable prerequisite for the execution of any policy in all democratic countries, but in no democratic country does the responsible Minister wait on that account for an expression of opinion by the Legislature before he outlines the policy that he will carry out. He first lays down a policy on his own and on the Cabinet's responsibility, anticipating the support of the Legislature; should that support fail, he and the whole Government resign, putting into office those who caused the defeat of the policy in question. When, for instance, the first Excise Minister of the Bombay Government announced his policy of rationing, he had received no kind of guarantee from the Legislative Council that the latter would support him in that policy. There was of course the possibility of the Council demanding a gradual increase, instead of decrease, of consumption or a larger or a smaller reduction in the total supply of liquor than was actually proposed; but the Minister risked an adverse vote of the Council. Had the Council not approved of the policy he would have had to resign; but he obtained the Council's consent and could therefore retain his seat in Government and put into operation the policy mapped out by him. It is only in this way that responsible Ministers in popularly governed countries gauge the opinion of their Legislatures: they first decide upon the line of action which approves itself to their individual judgment and then seek a favourable verdict of the Legislature on it, their tenure of office depending upon their winning the support of the Legislature. The uncertainty as to whether the Legislative Council will or will not vote the money required for replacing the excise revenue is thus no reason why the present Minister of Excise should refuse to declare that it would be his aim to bring about total prohibition within a specified period (provided of course he felt for his own part that prohibition ought to be and could be brought about within that period.) When the Council of the Deccan Sabha suggested that Government should undertake to enforce prohibition within a certain period, they did not mean that the Minister should issue a fiat to that effect and give effect to it, no matter whether the Legislative Council agreed to this policy or not. The Legislature's approval is of course the governing condition of all the suggestions made by the Sabha. All that they meant by this particular suggestion was that the present Minister should announce the period within which he individually thought it was practicable to bring about prohibition and then challenge the Legislative Council to throw out Government's proposals for increased taxation that might be necessary to implement his policy. The immediate question, therefore, is not whether the Legislative Council will or will not give him the necessary backing (for their part the Council of the Deccan Sabha do not doubt that it will back him in all reasonable proposals and indeed Government themselves entertain no doubt on this score, as stated above,) but whether the Minister himself is or is not willing to propose to the Council a date before which he would aim at introducing prohibition. It is time the Hon'ble Minister of Excise took the public of the Presidency into his confidence and made an unequivocal statement of his own individual views on this important question.

Local Option.

The paragraph under this head in Government's letter makes it plain that the only difficulty which they anticipate in the way of the adoption of this measure is the financial one. Government fear that, under the exercise of local option, far more shops will be closed than they can at all cope with by bringing forward taxation proposals. The first remark that it occurs to the Council of the Sabha to move on this is that Government have made a complete volte face on this subject. Hitherto Government used to deny stoutly that there was such a predominant feeling in the country in favour of the stoppage of the liquor traffic that the grant of local option would immediately result in the wholesale closure of shops. An admission to this effect would have been tantamount to a confession that Government had forced the present liquor shops on the people against their wishes, and naturally Government were loth to make this confession. Now, however, the present Minister of Excise rests his refusal of local option on the sole ground that it would not give him the breathing space necessary to make the requisite financial re-adjustments; that his taxation proposals could never keep pace with the closure of liquor shops on a large scale that would surely result from the grant of local option. This, in the opinion of the Council, is a very valuable admission inasmuch as it clears the Deccan Sabha's discussion of this subject of all cant and places the difficulties of Government, which are such as to command the sympathies of all responsible persons, in a clear light. It may be added by the way that the Excise Committee was not unmindful of these difficulties and it was on account of these that they recommended that a reasonable amount of time should be allowed to Government for giving effect to the wishes of a locality, the local option enactment making it clear that "the delay was due to solely financial and no other considerations." The Council of the Deccan Sabha can see no conceivable objection to Government's adopting the policy of local option under such express proviso, unless it be that it would be embarrassing to Government to blazon it forth that they would not allow a locality to go dry merely because they could mint money out of people's drunkenness and they could not afford to lose it. Appreciating this position of embarrassment, the Council of the Deccan Sabha in their evidence before the Excise Committee, suggested a way out, viz., that Government should grant restricted local option somewhat on the lines followed by the Government of the United Provinces (vide the Sabha's memorandum quoted in the Excise Committe's Report). The Council earnestly hope that Government will still find it possible to see that their Advisory Committees will, after the changes they will undergo, aproximate to the position of the Licensing Boards in the United Provinces if local option of a wider character is not thought admissible.

Rationing.

In the letter under reply, Government claim that their orders on rationing do not lag behind, but rather go beyond, the recommendations of the Excise Committee on the subject. In the view of the Council of the Deccan Sabha, however, this claim is unfounded and cannot be substantiated. Government seem to believe that the Committee recommended putting an immediate stop to the system of periodic reduction of the liquor supply in rural areas. They make out therefore that in sanctioning the continuance of rationing in rural areas in the current year and at the same rate as in previous years, Government have left the Excise Committee far behind. The Council, however, regrets to observe that this is not a correct representation of the Committee's attitude. In the first place, the Committee recommended reduction in the quantity of liquor supplied to urban areas year after year. Government have no doubt continued rationing this year but refuse to commit themselves to continue it in successive years. This, it is clear, detracts very much from the Committee's recommendations. As to rural areas, the Committee did not recommend the discontinuance of rationing in them, as Government apparently imagine. All that they said was that in the case of these areas, Government might not be in a position to give the undertaking which was required of them in urban areas, viz., that an annual reduction by a certain percentage should go on automatically, that on account of the danger of illicit distillation, Government would be justified in exercising more caution in the application of rationing to the rural areas and even in discontinuing the further reduction where "the danger on this account becomes serious." Even Government do not contend that the danger of illicit distillation has yet become serious and therefore in continuing the rationing system for this year, Government cannot claim to have gone farther than the report of the Excise Committee. Moreover, the Committee's recommendation in this respect must be taken along with and as conditioned by the other recommendations they have made in regard to rural areas. They say that, "although rationing may cease in these (rural) areas (when and if illicit distillation is practised on a dangerously large scale therein), we believe local option will be brought into force in many of them." And, again, "reliance might in their case (i. e., in the case of rural areas) be placed on local option and other educative and preventive factors". It is grossly unjust first to adopt the Committee's recommendations in a truncated form by turning down their proposa for local option and then to over-emphasise the need for caution, which they merely say would be warranted in certain contingencies, so as to draw from such a perversion of facts the conclusion that Government's action is actually in advance of the Committee's recommendations. This is a conclusion not borne out by facts. On the contrary the conclusion becomes irresistible to an unbiassed reader of the Excise Committee's report that in the form in which Government have decided to act upon them, the Committee's recommendations in this behalf are divested of much of their value.

In conclusion, the Council of the Deccan Sabha would respectfully invite Government to define their excise policy in greater detail than they have done in their recent resolution. They have earned the gratitude of the public by enunciating prohibition to be the goal of their policy, but the means to be adopted in reaching the goal lack precision. A hand-to-mouth policy such as Government are now pursuing cannot satisfy the public mind which is intent on seeing an end of alcoholism as soon as possible. A more comprehensive policy ranging over the next few years, till prohibition is accomplished, requires to be set out in broad outlines. It is to be hoped that the Hon'ble Minister will take early occasion to expound the policy which he intends to pursue in order to attain its final objective, viz., prohibition.

It will be seen at a glance how good the figures for Sylhet are where there is no indigenous Assamese population and how bad are the figures for Lakhimpur.

What is to be thought of an administration that allows such figures to run on year after year and meanwhile increases the revenue by between 300 and 400 per cent?

There is one more table, which ought to be studied very carefully indeed. It is the table of revenue and consumption for the whole Province since the time that the Government exercised the complete control as a monopoly, in 1875—76, down to the Non-co-operation movement in 1921; and then the figures from 1921 onwards after the effects of the Non-co-operation movement had been felt upon the Government and upon the people. I can only give decennial figures at the outset, because otherwise the list would be too long. The salient figures are as follows:—

| Year | Opium Revenue Rs. | Opium Consumption Maunds. |
| 1875-76 | 12,25,141 | 1874 |
| 1885-86 | 16,75,363 | 1446 |
| 1896-98 | | 1318 |
| 1905-06 | 16,55,706 | 1415 |
| 1915-16 | 30,53,933 | 1560 |
| 1919-20 | 38,37,125 | 1748 |
| 1920-21 | 44,12,308 | 1614 |
| 1911-22 | 35,60,920 | 1013 |
| 1923-24 | 36,23,841 | 884 |

The things stand out very clearly indeed:—(i) The Government Policy, before the Non-co-operation movement, was dilatory in extreme. It did not deal drastically with the evil. It had the question of revenue always in mind.

(ii) There has been a remarkable change, since the pressure of the Non-co-operation movement made the Government realise for the first time the stern determination of the people not to trifle with the subject any longer. All the trouble of 1921-22 was worth while, if this has been the result.—The Times of Assam.—

MRS. FERGUSON'S LECTURE ON THE DRINK EVIL.

The first of the series of lectures arranged by the Danish Mission, Madras, to be delivered on problems affecting India was delivered recently, by Mrs. Ferguson, on the drink evil, with Sir T. Sadasiva Iyer in the chair. The lecturer began by saying that the drink problem was one of the greatest problems of India at the present time. The question seriously considered was, "Can drink be prohibited?" The lecturer took the audience through the several stages in America before reaching prohibition. Finally the whole nation expressed its will in favour of prohibition and the new Prohibition law came into force. It was true there had been violations of the law, mainly by strangers in America. The result of the law was, jails were closed, schools and colleges were over-crowded, unemployment became a negligible factor, savings had increased enormously, labourers built and owned homesteads—in one word, there was prosperity in the land. If India neglected the drink evil, she would have to pay dearly. The revenue of 20 crores ought not to be secured at the cost of souls and bodies of citizens and of their material gain. The drink evil must be up-rooted at any cost.

The Chairman envied America which produced women of noble qualities to work for India. If Indian women also were educated, they would be able to work in an effective manner. The drink evil had been in existence for a very long time and was one of the five deadly evils to be avoided. The higher castes had given up drinking and even they were gradually taking to it and the English Government were responsible for such a state of affairs. He once objected to the bar in the Cosmopolitan Club but his objection was over-ruled. After Mr. Gandhi's arrival the members of the Club stopped the bar but an attempt was made to revive it and the question was postponed. The sooner they got rid of the State revenue question connected with temperance the better. He was glad that the Legislative Assembly had taken up the question of prohibition. It was quite true that Sir Basil Blackett and others of his way of thinking on the drink problem like Lord Milner and Lord Curzon were heartless and irreligious people. After Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty India had no religious man as Viceroy. So long as India was ruled by such irreligious people India must suffer. India must fight against the evil and in that fight they wanted the help of white-skinned people. In a few days, he continued, a big memorial would be printed in the languages of the Presidency and Mrs. Ferguson would take the lead in obtaining signatures for total prohibition and he hoped that young men and ladies would show their earnestness for the eradication of the drink evil by associating with Mrs. Ferguson in her laudable efforts.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Social Service League, Bombay: The General Secretary writes to us that the Annual General Meeting of the members of the Social Service League, Bombay, will be held on Saturday, the 10th October 1925, at 6 p.m. (S.T.) in the Servants of India Society's Hall, Sandhurst Road, Girgaum, to transact the following business:—1. adoption of the Annual Report and the audited statement of Accounts for the year 1924, and 2. to consider any other business brought forward with the Chairman's consent.

The Late Maharaja of Kashmir: We regret to record the death which took place on the 23rd September of Lieutenant-General His Highness Maharaja Sir Pratap Singh Bahadur of Kashmir. The late Maharaja was seventy five years old, and was a great Sanskrit scholar. As a Rajput belonging to the ancient historical family, His Highness kept up the high traditions of the Hindu Kings. The heir to the gadi of Kashmir is Sir Hari Singh who figured as Mr. "A" in the sensational case in England which was calculated to undermine the reputation of any person of his position. We hope this experience must have been an eye-opener to H. H. Sir Hari Singh and that it must have so completely metamorphised His Highness that the apprehension entertained in some quarters regarding the future of the State will prove to be unwarranted.

Indian Christians and Politics: The Forward writes.: "An Indian Christian from Maymo has been quoting the Bible to explain why Indian Christians do not take part in politics, as Mahatma Gandhi observed. It is a well-known fact that before the emancipation of slaves in the U. S. A, clergymen of the Southern States supported slavery also by quotations from the Bible. As a rule the Scriptures are not in fault but the interpretations often are, especially when isolated passages are taken. The excuse is not new, nor indeed, convincing, because just as many other passages may be cited against the gentleman's argument. The truth is, that most Indian Christians are strongly dominated by the ideas of their white "gurus," who happen to be Britishers, or other foreigners who are careful not to meddle in the politics of the country. According to the Maymo interpretation of the Bible, no Christian can take his place in the march of political progress. Yet striving for justice is one of the keynotes of the Christian Scriptures, so far as we understand them."

Is Nabha an Indian State?—The Swadeshamitran writes: This question has been answered in the negative by the First Class Magistrate of Amritsar in the judgment delivered by him in the case under Section 124 A. of the I. P. C. in which the Printer and the Editor of the Quaumi Dard, Amritsar, have each been sentenced to 2 years R. I. and a fine of Rs. 200. An article was published in the newspaper purporting to describe the tortures to which Akali prisoners in Nabha were alleged to have been subjected in order to extort apologies from them. Nabha Administration has been thus insulted and brought under ridicule or contempt. The contention of the accused was that they were right in publishing the article with the object of obtaining redress for a public grievance and that they could prove the truth of the various statements for which they cited a hundred witnesses. The other ground of defence taken up by the accused was that Nabha was not a part of the British territory and therefore I. P. C. 124 A. does not apply. The Magistrate writes: "This argument is void of all force. Government established by law in British India means British rule and its representatives as such, that is, the existing political system as distinguished from any particular set of administrators. In this sense the Government includes not only the Government of India, but the Local Governments and any Administrator of a Native state appointed as such by the Government of India. The Nabha Administration is being carried on by the Nabha Administrator under orders of the Government of India on the voluntary abdication of the Maharaja. Therefore if one criticises the Nabha administration it is quite the same as if he were criticising the Government of India or the Government established by law." But we remember that at the time of the enactment of the Indian States (Protection against Disaffection) Act 1922, the necessity was expressed for dealing with cases of disaffection against the rulers in Indian States, as I. P. C. 124 A. was held to be inapplicable to Indian States and the Press Act had been repealed. If the accused had been proceeded against as per Indian States Act it would have been appropriate. But the Magistrate thought it otherwise. For purposes of Sedition, Nabha is under British Government and not an Indian state. But very recently when a debate was sought to be raised to discuss the situation created by the firing at Jaito the then Home Member opposed the motion on the specific ground that Nabha being an Indian State her affair could not be discussed in the Legislative Assembly. This amphibious position held by Nabha will have to be settled by the High Court when the appeal comes up before it."

Excise Administration in C. P. The Lokmitra writes: The report on the working of the Excise Department shows that there was an extremely low level of consumption in all four areas of the province. At the same time Government cannot but view with regret the lack of sustained interest in the temperance movement among the aboriginal tribes of the Plateau, who are the heaviest drinkers in the province. The Province is not wanting in men who are ready to devote their time and energies to social service; and in keeping such a movement alive they would find a fruitful field for their energies. Government hopes that all who have the cause of social reform at heart will give the matter their earnest attention".

Successful candidates in the I. C. S.: We take the following from the Leader:—The number of candidates who have come out successful in the I. C. S. examination in India since 1922 is 28. Of these the largest number (10) belong to Madras, followed by Bengal (8), the United Provinces (6), and Bombay, the Punjab, Bihar and Orissa and the Central Provinces, each of which had only one successful candidate to its credit.

Christianity and Physical Force: In the course of a sermon preached before the International Committee of the World Alliance for Promoting International Friendship through the Churches in Stockholm Cathedral on Sunday, the 9th August, the Bishop of Lincoln said: "Our duty as Christians has been defined for us by our Blessed Lord. Love is the supreme Christian duty. It is the one law which includes all other laws. On the night, however, before He suffered, our Lord deliberately said: "Let him that hath a sword take it". As it seems to me, there are only two ways in which this arresting statement can be interpreted. If we regard Jesus of Nazareth as mere man—the best, perhaps, and noblest of men, but still a man and no more—then this saying is clearly the pathetic confession that all that he had stood for had failed. It is the bitter cry "The world has been too much for me; I have failed: do as other men do". If, however, we hold the majestic faith of the Church, if we believe that He spoke not for the present only but for all time, if we believe that while He spoke things necessary for the present, He had His gaze fixed nevertheless on a distant horizon, then we must interpret the perplexing saying of Gethsemane in relation to the serene teaching of the Sermon on the Mount. Both are true for Christian men. The teaching of the Sermon on the Mount is not withdrawn. Our Lord, however, does recognise that in a world evil as this is evil there are occasions when force may legitimately be used to restrain force; when the word may rightly be spoken "Let him that hath a sword take it."

Mahatma Gandhi on the Age of Consent: In reply to the request of the Vice-President of the Women's Indian Association for an expression of his opinion on the question of Child Motherhood, Mahatma Gandhi said that he most strongly supported any effort to raise the age, and added that he would write on the subject in the next issue of his paper. In forwarding us the following extract from Mahatmaji's note in Young India, the Vice-President of the Women's Indian Association, whose appeal we cordially endorse, most earnestly commends his words to the careful consideration of all Gandhiji's admirers and to those who profess to follow him. Writes Gandhiji in Young India:—

"I must confess that I am ignorant of the Bill, but I am strongly in favour of raising the Age of Consent not merely to 14, but even to 16. Whilst, therefore, I can say nothing about the text of the Bill, I should heartily endorse any movement whose object is to save innocent girls of tender age from man's lust. A so-called marriage rite ought no longer to confer legality upon an immoral and inhuman act which consummation, even at the age of 14, in my humble opinion, undoubtedly is. Sanskrit texts of doubtful authority cannot be involved to sanctify a practice which is in itself immoral. I have witnessed the ruin of the health of many a child-mother, and when to the horrors of any early marriage is added enforced early widowhood, human tragedy becomes complete. Any sensible legislation in the direction of raising the Age of Consent will certainly have my approval. But I am painfully conscious of the fact that even the existing legislation has proved abortive for want of public opinion to support it. The task before the reformer in this, as in many other directions, is most difficult. Constant and continuous agitation is necessary if any real impression is to be made on the Hindu public. I wish every success to those who are engaged in the task of rescuing Indian girls from premature old age and early death, and Hinduism from being responsible for bringing into being ricketty weaklings."

Churchianity or Christianity?: The Examiner, the local Roman Catholic weekly, writes:—That Christianity is not merely a doctrine but that it is a new life, that it is not enough to study the Gospel but that one must receive from above the interior principle of that life seems to be the great mistake which Indian students make. It is due of course to the fact that they study Christianity in Protestant writings. Really, there is no such thing as Christianity, there is only the Christian Church, better known as the Catholic Church. Christ entrusted His teaching to its infallible care and—which is no less essential to His plan—He gave it means of conferring and preserving the interior principle of the Christian life, without which no amount of mere study will make a man a Christian, supernatural grace. All this is clearly unknown to those who like a recent writer in the Indian Social Reformer imagine a type of Christian who should "proclaim his belief in the teachings of Christ, while in no way altering his religious or social status in the community where he lives." If conversion involves a change of social status, that is not the fault of the Catholic Church; but it certainly involves a change of religious status—an interior change from the natural to the supernatural order and an outward change from the position of a non-Christian to membership of the Catholic Church.

Social Legislation in Baroda: The United India and Indian States refers to two important bills published in the "Baroda Government Gazette" for the 25th August 1925, bringing social legislation regarding certain offences relating to women, into line with the law in British India. The first of these Bills follows the British Act XX of 1923 and raises the age-limit of girls in connection with the crime of procuring minor women for immoral purposes or for abducting them into the territory of the State from outside. The second Bill follows the British Act XVIII of 1924, and raises from 14 to 16 the age in the case of girls whom the Magistrate can release from improper imprisonment and order to be handed over to her parents or guardians.

"Abolish Drink Evil": The residents of Illorkallamadi and Tasimela Groups, Anantapur Dt., have submitted a memorial to the Board of Revenue, the Government, Fort St. George and the Ceded Districts' members of the Legislative Council, urging the abolition of drink in their villages. In the course of their memorial they say: Our temperate life for these five years has fully given us a glimpse of the advantages of total prohibition and the result thereof is clearly manifested in remarkably low number of crimes and disturbances as with those prior to 1921 and by the fact that those who have emigrated to distant places from these villages seeking for livelihood in these days of famine are also very few when compared with those of other villages where drink evil is prevailing. Being fully convinced of the advantages of sober life we are craving for the permanent abolition of toddy and arrack shops.

New Marriage Law In Russia: The Muslim conception of marriage as a civil contract, writes the Turkey correspondent to the Hindu, has been carried to its extreme length by the promulgation and enforcement of a new marriage law in Russia. The law was enacted only recently and is experimental in character by which it is said, parties to a matrimonial engagement can adopt one another for three years without the observance of any religious ritual and ceremony. If within the prescribed period of three years, relationship of the parties proves harmonious and their character accommodating to each other, it is open to them to enter into permanent wedlock by the observance of all rituals and formalism. If, on the other hand, the relationship turns inimical and unsatisfactory to either or both, the marriage tie can be severed as per desire of either party. If within that period of experimentation and in the event of dissolution there happens to be a pregency, then according to the law one-third of the cost of maintenance and upbringing of the child should be borne by the father. At first this law was set in certain territories and within a short time the law has become universalised in Russia. Since the promulgation of the law there has been a heavy rush of applications addressed to the registering authorities of marriages by the public signifying its willingness to take advantage of the law.

The Assembly's Vote for Prohibition: There cannot be the least doubt that Indian public opinion throughout the country is strongly in favour of Prohibition, and now that the Assembly has given a valuable lead and has added its final voice to the national demand, we trust that Provincial Governments will not hesitate to devise drastic methods to resist the rising tide of the drink menace. In the division list that is published we are filled with surprise and sorrow to find the name of the Rev. Dr. E. M. Macphail among the 39 who voted against the prohibition amendment. Is this the kind of help that the country should expect from a Christian Missionary? There can be no other attitude that a Christian can consistently take in this matter save that of unceasing and uncompromising hostility towards the liquor traffic.—The Christian Patriot.

NOTES

Mrs. Sarojini Naidu: In the Reformer of September 5th, we published in the news columns that on scrutinising the proposals received from the various provincial committees regarding the presidentship of the forthcoming Congress session, it was found that Mrs. Sarojini Naidu had the largest number of votes. The Reception Committee has now declared that Mrs. Naidu has been duly elected president of the Cawnpore Congress. This is the first time in the history of the Indian National Congress that an Indian woman is called upon to preside over its annual deliberations, and it is evident from the complete unanimity of Indian press opinion not excluding those which are opposed to Congress politics, that the choice is hailed with delight throughout the country. Mrs. Naidu is not one whom politics brought to the public view. As a poetess, she had earned international reputation even before her entry into the arena of Indian politics. She is not by instinct a politician, a fact which she has herself declared on several occasions, and it was her oratorical gifts together with her poetic insight into human emotions and her lofty patriotism that drew her into politics. She has been a staunch apostle of Hindu-Moslem unity, and inter-communal unity has been her pet subject. When acute differences arose in the Congress ranks, Mrs. Naidu acted as a connecting link between the two parties and her endeavours to heal differences have been her greatest contribution to Congress politics. On her return from her tour in South Africa last year, Mahatma Gandhi himself suggested her name for the presidentship of the Congress, and her election this year was a foregone conclusion. Interviewed by a press representative after the announcement of her election to the Congress presidentship, she gave a message which sums up her programme of work. She said:

> Mine, as becomes a woman, is a most modest domestic programme, merely to restore to India, her true position as supreme mistress in her own home, the sole guardian of her own vast resources and the sole dispenser of her own rich hospitality. As a loyal daughter of Bharatamata, therefore, it will be my lovely, though difficult task, through the coming year, to try and set my mother's house in order, to reconcile the tragic quarrels that threaten the integrity of her old joint family life of diverse communities and creeds, and to find an adequate place and recognition, alike for the lowliest and the mightiest of her children and foster-children, the guests and strangers within her gates.

In this "modest domestic programme" is embodied the social and political programme of the nation. The need of the country is Unity above everything else and it is clear that Mrs. Naidu has determined to address herself to this task. The All India Congress Committee which met at Patna has failed to pave the way for unity among political parties. Mrs. Naidu who made the bold declaration in Madras in 1923 that she would leave the Congress if necessary to work for unity which she considered even above the Congress, will, we hope, chalk out a new programme to ensure unity not only among the political parties but also between the various communities, and in her efforts to this end we can unhesitatingly bespeak for her the support of all patriotic people.

Mahomedan Opposition to Sind Hindu Marriage Bill: It looks strange that Mr. Advani's Bill to make monogamy obligatory on Sind Hindus should have evoked strong opposition from Mahomedans of the province. In a leading article in the last issue, the Muslim Advocate of Karachi, professing to voice the Moslem opinion of Sind, appeals to Mahomedan M. L. C.'s to attend the next meeting of the Bombay Legislative Council and oppose Mr. Advani's Bill which, it thinks, interferes with Mahomedan religion. It also appeals to the Hindu members not to take advantage of their majority in the Council in trampling on the religious rights of their Mahomedan brethren. How the Hindu Marriage Bill tramples on the religious rights of Mahomedans is stated by our contemporary in the following words:—

> A Hindu husband marries a Hindu wife, and makes a declaration of monogamy under the Bill. He then embraces Islam, and his marriage with his Hindu wife is automatically dissolved. But under the Bill, he is both restricted to his first marriage which ceases to be a marriage after his conversion to Islam, and is prohibited from contracting another marriage which Islam allows him. He is thus either compelled to live in sin, or is condemned to lifelong celibacy, if he is to avoid the penalties prescribed by the Bill. This new-fledged measure will, therefore, deprive him of his inherent rights. A legal ordinance will thus override a religious sanction.

This is the most extraordinary claim on behalf of Islam that we have come across. Evidently the Hindu community cannot make any reforms in their personal law without the approval of Mahomedan Maulvis. If this is allowed, we may next have a demand to have the Indian Christian and Parsi Marriage Acts amended on the same lines.

Hinduism and Christianity: The thoughtful and learned address delivered by Professor Radhakrishnan, King George Professor of Philosophy, Calcutta University, to the Calcutta Missionary Conference held at Calcutta on the 7th September, correctly represents the attitude of the educated Hindus towards Christianity. We have referred again and again in these columns to the splendid and beneficent work the Christian Missions are doing in the field of social service, in the matter of the social uplift of the lower classes, the spread of education and the mission of healing the sick. We have regretted the aggressive proselytising propaganda of the missionaries not seldom mixed with prejudiced attack on other religious propagandas. True, the present attitude of the Christian Missionaries to Hindu ideals is much more sympathetic than it used to be owing to their deeper understanding and appreciation of Hinduism and its ideals. But, the average Christian Missionary, with some honourable exceptions here and there, to use Prof. Radhakrishnan's words, is a dogmatist with an inflexible mind like the Hindu Sastri or the Mahommedan Maulvi The Christian Missionary finds it difficult to adopt, what Prof. Radhakrishnan calls, a strictly scientific attitude, for he has all the time his 'vested interests' to consider. The attitude of Hinduism is set forth by Prof. Radhakrishnan in lucid terms: "It forbids compulsion in religious matters. It recognises that the Supreme is one though He has many names, that He has no special favourites, that all men in a true sense are His children, that His inspiration is not confined to any age or race, that His revelation is larger than any single book or set of books and that He has raised up teachers and saints in all lands". Prof. Radhakrishnan, however, does not blind himself to the evils of present-day Hinduism. "I own", he said, "that there are gross imperfections which justify the most bitter criticisms ever made against it. If this were a Hindu audience, I would deal at length with the curse of untouchablity, the prejudices of caste, the rigours of the social code, the excessive emphasis on ceremonial piety and the exaggerated importance attached to trivialities which are associated with Hinduism and which draw into disgrace the whole institution". But what he wants to point out is that in the Christian criticism of the Hindu faith, what is unfair is the settled conviction that these features of Hinduism are not merely lapses from the Hindu ideals, but are their inevitable results, and that there is no hope for India unless it accepts Christ. The true Hindu attitude to Jesus he explains thus: "Respect for other peoples' faiths which has been a marked feature of Hinduism is responsible for the Hindu attitude to Jesus Christ. While the Hindu is willing to regard Jesus as a striking character revealing some of the divine attributes, he hesitates to accept Jesus as the one unique revelation of God bringing out the divine glory in all its fullness for all time. Such a kind of exclusive mediatorship and final revelation is inconsistent with the whole tradition of Hinduism." We cannot better close this than with the appeal made by Prof. Radhakrishnan to the Christian Missionaries: "If you devote less of your time, energy and fervour to preaching and polemics and direct all your tremendous power to the practice of love, you will help to deepen and elevate the religious life of the Indian people . . . . Your task is not so much to make Christians of Hindus as to purify or Christianise, if that term is more acceptable to you, Hinduism so as to make more real the central principles of love and non-resistance, service and self-surrender which are as much Hindu as Christian".

The Pandharpur Orphanage and Foundling Asylum: We have received a touching appeal for funds issued by the Managing Committee of the Bombay Prarthana Samaj on behalf of the Pandharpur Orphanage and Foundling Asylum. This institution is the only one of its kind in this presidency to give shelter to deserted and stranded women, especially to erring widows, and to bring up their children. It is managed by the Bombay Prarthana Samaj, and has a record of nearly half-a century's social and humanitarian work. That the Bombay Government has passed rules for the remission and suspension of sentences of widow convicts for infanticide and have them transferred to the Pandharpur Orphanage bears eloquent testimony to the confidence inspired by the institution. With increasing popularity the financial burden on the management has become very heavy, and the cost of maintaining the institution has been growing and the monthly expenees now come to between Rs. 2,500 and Rs. 3,000. It has also become absolutely necessary to purchase a new plot and erect new buildings as the present building is in a dilapidated state and the accommodation is utterly inadequate to meet the increasing admissions to the Home. There are other schemes to extend the work of the institution and all these require at least four lakhs of rupees as estimated by the Samaj. The signatories of the appeal, Mr. V. G Bhandarkar, Dr. (Miss) Kashibai Nowrange and Mr. Y. V. Bhandarkar, the president, vice-president and secretary respectively of the Bombay Prarthana Samaj, hope that during the Divali holidays which fall next week, they will be able to collect a handsome amount, and they appeal to the philanthropic public to contribute liberally to make up the amount so badly required. We cordially endorse their appeal and hope that the institution which, to use the words of the appeal, stands to relieve "the cries of innocent infants and the tears of misled and miserable womanhood", will not be made to suffer for want of financial support from the generous public.

Social Service: Though India has always had an honoured place for social service workers and though individual men and women have been noted for their unselfish spirit of social service, the idea of men and women organising and dedicating themselves to work among the masses, is only of comparatively recent growth. We can almost say that the first impetus in this direction came from the activities of Christian Missionaries and Missionary organisations who have established themselves in this country. Apart from their missionary propaganda which has been the subject of much criticism, fair and unfair, the one solid work that stands to their credit is in the field of social service. The scope for social work is unlimited, and any organisation that has its object for the service of fellow-men should command not only the sympathies but also the active support of all. It is in this spirit and with these hopes that we welcome the "Mylapore Star", the newly formed organisation, under the able guidance of the well-known Swami Sharvanandaji, its President, who is also the President of the Ramakrishna Mutt which did no small amount of work during the South Indian Floods. Mr. K. V. Sesha Iyengar who delivered the inaugural address, advocated a system of health visitors to take steps to combat the appalling growth of infantile mortality and also a mass movement in the direction of better sanitary education.

Mendacious Propaganda: The Hindu of Madras recently called attention to the effusions of an Englishwoman in the Yorkshire Post, who claims to have had a good experience of the working of the Montagu-Chelmsford reform in Behar. Oppression of the poor, corruption of Judges and Magistrates, the reversing of the decisions of the I. C. S. officials by higher native officials, these are some of the results which she attributes to the reforms. We need hardly say that such irresponsible statements indulged in by interested parties seriously discredit and prejudice Indians in the eyes of foreigners who know nothing about India and who are credulous enough to believe anything and everything said about India, good, bad and indifferent. Our contemporary rightly insists upon the necessity for an efficiently conducted bureau of political propaganda abroad.

The Burma Expulsion Bill: We are glad to see that the better and more enlightened section of Burmese opinion has had no hand at all in the anti-Indian movement in Burma which finally culminated in the Expulsion of Non-Burman Offenders Bill, and that it is all the work of of a small caucus supported by Government. Presiding over a mass meeting of Rangoon citizens to protest against this obnoxious measure, Mr. U. Tok Kyie, the Burmese representative in the Legislative Assembly, observed that the masses of Burma are against the measure. It is also significant that all the resolutions at the meeting were moved by Burmese members of the Burma Swaraj Party.

BOMBAY, OCTOBER 10, 1925.

THE NIZAM'S DOMINIONS.

The companion volume to the general administration report of His Exalted Highness the Nizam's Dominions for the year 1331 Fasli (6th October 1921 to 5th October 1922) is a very interesting publication containing a wealth of information of historical and antiquarian interest. As distinguished from the general administration report, the volume under review contains revised up-to-date information regarding the physical features, historical summary, form of administration, land tenures, civil divisions and the details of the Census of 1921. It was stated in the preface of the general administration report for the year 1331 Fasli that a separate publication was in the course of preparation by a Special Officer. We have since then received the general administration report for the year 1332 Fasli (6th October 1922 to 5th October 1923) which we reviewed in the Reformer of the 21st February. The present volume is compiled by Moulvi Mohamed Rahmatulla Saheb, the Director of Statistics, under instructions of Nawab Hydar Nawaz Jung Bahadur, the Finance Member to H.E.H. the Nizam's Government. The delay in the publication of the volume is justified in view of the research work and the collection of materials involved in the compilation of the volume.

The chapters dealing with the historical summary and the evolution of the present system of administration are specially interesting. It is stated that the earliest rulers of the Deccan were Andhras, a Dravidian people now represented by the Telugu-speaking population, who ruled the country independently for four centuries and a half up to about A.D. 225. The Report traces the history from the third century B.C. when during the reign of the famous Hindu King, Chandragupta Maurya (323 to 298 B.C.) the Andhras were compelled to submit to the Maurya kings and recognise the suzerainty of Magadha. Reference is made to a rock edict recently discovered at Maski in Raichur district which goes to confirm Asoka's edicts wherein Andhras are mentioned among the tribes resident in the outer circle of the Empire. After the downfall of the Andhras in the early part of the third century, the Deccan passed into the hands of Chalukyas who claimed their descent from the Rajputs of the north. With the death of Vikramaditya VI in the 12th century, the kingdom passed into the hands of Yadavas and Hoysalas from whom it was captured by Ala-ud-Din Khilji in 1294 A. D., the year which witnessed the Mahomedan conquest of the Deccan. The economic condition of the country seven centuries ago can be gauged from the enormous amount of treasure consisting of 600 maunds of pearls, two maunds of diamonds, rubies, emeralds and other precious stones presented by the last independent Hindu Sovereign, Ramchandra, to the Sultan to save his kingdom from being captured. In A. D. 1307 the Hindu ruler, Ramchandra, had to submit to the Mahomedan invader, Malik-Kafur, and the Deccan was completely lost to the Hindu rulers from that date. The Report deals with the various Mahomedan conquests beginning from Muhammad Bin Tughlaq in 1322 A. D. It is stated that the family of the present Nizam is indisputably one of the most illustrious that ever came to India, and it is traced on the father's side to the first Khalifa, Abu Bakr, and to the female line to the Holy Prophet himself.

It is clear that the Nizam came completely under the influence of the English in the middle of the eighteenth century, as it is stated that when in 1751 Salabat Jung, who became the ruler with the help of the French, was dethroned, Nizam Ali Khan, the fourth son of Asaf Jah, was proclaimed ruler by the English. During the reign of Nizam Ali Khan extending over 42 years, several treaties were concluded with the British as a result of which the Nizam had to cede to the British the Northern Circars and the Ceded Districts. The very fact that it was the English who proclaimed Nizam Ali Khan as the ruler is a sufficient commentary on the extent of the influence the former could exercise on the latter. In view of the importance the question of the rendition of Berar assumed recently as a result of H. E. H. the Nizam's letter to the Viceroy, it is interesting to peruse the agreement under which Berar was leased to the British Government in 1902 during Lord Curzon's Viceroyalty. The agreement runs :—

Whereas by the Treaties concluded between the British Government and the Hyderabad State on the 21st May 1853, and the 26th December 1860, the Berar districts were assigned to the British Government for the maintenance of the Hyderabad Contingent, the surplus, if any, from the Assigned Districts being paid to His Highness the Nizam.

And whereas the British Government and His Highness the Nizam desire to improve this agreement,

And whereas it is inexpedient, in the interest of economy, that the Assigned Districts should continue to be managed as a separate administration or the Hyderabad Contingent as a separate force.

And whereas it is also desirable that His Highness the Nizam should receive a fixed instead of a fluctuating and uncertain income from the Assigned Districts,

The following terms are hereby agreed between the Viceroy and the Governor-General of India in Council and the Nawab Sir Mir Mahbub Ali Khan Bahadur, Fateh Jung, Nizam of Hyderabad.

1. His Highness the Nizam whose sovereignty over the Assigned Districts is reaffirmed, leases them to the British Government in perpetuity, in consideration of the payment to him by the British Government of a fixed and perpetual rent of 25 lakhs of rupees per annum ;

2. The British Government, while retaining the full and exclusive jurisdiction and authority in the Assigned Districts, which they enjoy under the Treaties of 1853 and 1860, shall be at liberty, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in those Treaties, to administer the Assigned Districts in such manner as they may deem desirable, and also to redistribute, reduce, reorganise and control the forces now composing the Hyderabad Contingent, as they may think fit, due provision being made as stipulated by Article 3 of the Treaty of 1853 for the protection of His Highness' Dominions,

There is nothing in the Report calculated to support directly or indirectly the contention that undue influence was exercised on the Nizam in 1853 when the original treaty whereby Berar was ceded to the British was concluded. Perhaps information of such nature cannot be expected to find a place in the official publication of the kind under review. The Report says that as the pay of the Contingent troops had fallen into arrears, a fresh treaty was concluded in 1853 whereby Berar and the districts of Osmanabad (Naldrug) and Raichur were ceded to the British, and that the last named two districts were restored to the Nizam by a treaty of 1860 in recognition of his services during the Mutiny.

The administration of Hyderabad was conducted primarily under the direction and on the responsibility of the Minister. When Nawab Sir Salar Jung became the Minister in 1854, he introduced several administrative reforms. In 1893 a Cabinet Council was established to assist and advise the Minister. In 1914 His Exalted Highness, that is the present Nizam, was pleased to take the direct supervision of the Government into his hands and entrusted it to an Executive Council with a President with charge of the legislative portfolio, seven members in charge of Finance, Judicial, Military, Revenue, Public Works, Political, Commerce and Industries portfolios and an extraordinary member without a portfolio. There is a Legislative Council which was established in 1893 for the purpose of enacting laws for the State, and it is composed of a President, Vice-President and 23 members of whom three are ex-officio members and of the remaining 20, nine are Government officials and eleven non-officials. Thus there is a clear official majority. It is high time that the necessity of introducing constitutional reforms on the same lines as those introduced in British India and some of the progressive Indian states, was realised by His Exalted Highness's Government. The premier Indian State, as Hyderabad undoubtedly is, is expected to set an example to other Indian states, but it will be unbecoming of its exalted position if it fails to follow the example of more progressive Indian states in this respect.

The Census figures of the State reveal the educational backwardness more than anything else. The total population of the State according to the last Census is 12,471,770 (6,797,118 males and 6,577,558 females) as against 13,374,676 in 1911 showing a decrease of 902,906 persons during the decennium. Hindus form 85 per cent of the total population and Mahomedans 10 per cent while 3 per cent are classified as Animists and ·5 per cent as Christians. During the decennium there was a noticeable decrease in the Hindu and Mahomedan population while an appreciable increase is recorded under Animists and Christians due, it is said, to correct classification and proselytism respectively. Various causes, notably famines and epidemics, have contributed to the decrease in the total population of the State.

Of the total population only 33 per mille are literate in the sense of being able to write a letter to a friend and read his reply. The proportion for males and females is 57 and 8 per mille respectively. According to communities, there are only 47 male and 4 female literates among the Hindus while among Mahomedans there are 140 male and 35 female literates among 1000 persons. Christians are the most educationally advanced, apparently due to the efforts of missionary bodies, their proportion being 308 males and 188 females for every 1000. There is appalling illiteracy among the Hindus. As regards literacy in English only 3 per mille aged 5 and over are recorded as literate in English. The Report observes that "though these proportions show that Hyderabad State is still backward in educational matters, there has been considerable improvement as compared with the statistics in 1911". We have in our review of the Administration Report of the year 1332 Fasli noticed the important features in the administration of the various departments, and we do not wish to repeat them here.

The Archaeological department of the State affords ample scope for the enterprise of research students and we congratulate the Government on the interest they have taken in preserving the archæological remains and antiquities. The State has a vast array of archæological remains varying from pre-historic antiquities and megalithic tombs of Buddhist, Hindu and Jain pagodas, Moslem shrines and even Christian tombs. There are, it is stated, 116 remains in the State which are deemed worthy for preservation. The State should concentrate its attention on educational reforms as well as constitutional reforms as in both these respects the premier Indian state is far behind several small but progressive Indian states.

IN MEMORY OF RAMMOHAN.

(By Mr. G. Y. Chitnis, Oxford.)

Dr. G. F. Beekh of Bristol was kind enough to invite me to speak to his congregation. As soon as I reached Bristol, I took the earliest opportunity of visiting the tomb of Raja Rammohan Roy, the Founder of the Brahma Samaj. He lies buried in Arno's vale where many distinguished men and women have found their last resting place. When we (Dr. Beekh and myself) entered the cemetery the first thing that attracted our attention was the tomb of Rammohan, which, by virtue of its golden pinnacle, great architectural beauty, temple-like structure and even its ancient look, is the most outstanding monument in Arno's vale. We found the following inscription written on it :—

"Beneath this stone rest the remains of Raja "Rammohan Roy Bahadoor, a conscientious and "steadfast believer in the Unity of the God-head. "He consecrated his life to the worship of the "Divine Spirit alone. To great natural talents he "united thorough mastery of many languages and "early distinguished himself as one of the greatest "scholars of his day. His unwearied labours to "promote the social, moral and physical condition of "the people of India, his earnest endeavours to suppress idolatry and the rite of Suttee and his "constant advocacy of whatever tended to advance "the glory of God and the welfare of men, live in the "grateful remembrance of his countrymen. This "tablet records the sorrows and the pride with which "his memory is cherished by his descendants. Born "1774 and died 1833 September 27."

I wonder if Rammohan still lives in the grateful remembrance of his countrymen. If we except the Brahma and Prarthana Samajes and a few other societies, Rammohan is but a stranger to his own land. The story of the crucifixion of Jesus, Plato's account of the just man, and the lives of so many martyrs of faith suggest the thought that our ancients having the unique gift of misunderstanding those who were above their own level, insulted, persecuted and even killed their prophets and saviours; and we take pride in the thought that we are not as our forefathers were in so far as we are more tolerant and sympathetic than they. It is true that we do not now-a-days kill our prophets. We do something worse. We ignore them and after a hundred years or so, completely forget their very existence. Here is a man who did so much for the religious, social and political welfare of his countrymen, a man who literally spent his life in raising the intellectual and moral level of India and trying to make her aware of her own importance as one of the foremost nations of the world, and hardly a century elapses, before he is almost completely wiped out of memory. Ingratitude and disloyalty can go no farther. We very often run after those who pretend to bring us a message of salvation and forget our true benefactors and saviours. I am not pleading here for a mere mechanical worship of great men who are dead and gone. I am not one of those who take delight in feeding upon the glories of the past; but if Carlyle is right in thinking that history is the biography of great men and if we believe that the divine ideas of which history is an unfoldment, work primarily upon the hill and then make their appeal to the intellect, then it is true that it is only in the great personalities of the world that we can find in a far clearer and more systematic manner, the development of those lines of action and thought which we ourselves should pursue. Our ideals are mere lifeless abstractions in so far as they do not find their expression in a personality which alone can impart life and warmth to them. That is why Plato's idealism does not appeal to us so much as the idealism of Christ and Buddha whom we instinctively revere and worship, not because they are separated from the common humanity by virtue of any supernatural divinity, but because we can in their lives trace the distinctive phases in the development of those moral and spiritual experiences which we can recognise as the highest and the best, and which we ourselves are capable of sharing.

What is true of Christ and Buddha is true, although in a lesser degree, of Rammohan. He was a man of gigantic intellect and tremendous activity and yet when one pleads for a more intimate and grateful recognition of his work and personality, it is not for the purpose of following his activities in all their details, but for the purpose of being loyal and faithful to the light of that great synthetic vision which was the radiating centre of his life and work. In matters of social and political importance we may, nay, we must adopt a more thorough-going and radical programme than he did. In matters religious we have also to move forward; but while bringing about all these changes which the exigenics of time and circumstances demand, we must always be true to that haunting vision of Rammohan, the vision of a nobler and better India, the torch-bearer of a New Era which is springing to life as the result of the coming together of the various forces of conflicting civilisations and cultures and which will represent a civilisation which is neither Eastern nor Western but higher and bigger than both.

COMMUNALISM IN OUR PUBLIC LIFE.

The Khilafat.

After the Pact, came the Khilafat. By the matter and manner of that agitation the masses of the Musalman Indians (for that is their right name, though they are wont to call themselves the reverse way) have indeed been made self-conscious; but only communally, instead of nationally; insomuch that, as Mr. Chagla said, extra-territorial ambitions have possessed the hearts of our awakened Muslims to the exclusion of the necessary territorial patriotism or thought of their national freedom;—so that our last state nationally considered has become worse than the first. Their position may be psychologically explained, but it is not a logical nor a sane one. Hence we are bound to agree with Mr. Chagla that in the light of later events the Gandhi-Ali Khilafat was nothing but a supreme blunder. The Roman Catholics in the United Kingdom are about the same as the Sunni Musalmans in India, relatively to the whole population in each country. The former owe spiritual allegiance to the Pope in Rome. But are they less English or less nationalist for that? It cannot be said that there is a complete absence of religious prejudice in England yet. About a year ago when there was a proposal that His Majesty of England ('Defender of the Faith') should visit His Holiness in Rome during his European trip, there went up a great howl from the Protestant churchmen against the step; and only in 1906 in the very city of London a religious procession organised by the Catholics was banned by the authorities alleging the objection or yielding to the clamour of their Protestant neighbours against the same. But whoever heard of separate electorates for Catholics even in Northern Ireland? But in India all things must needs be topsyturvy: why so, I shall presently indicate.

CRUDE IDEAS.

The 'non-patriotic' development is not all the mischief of the Khilafat agitation; nor is it confined to the Muslims. All sorts of reactionary theocratic ideas are floating to-day in the Indian air, which would have settled down to oblivion, had not the Khilafat given them a vigorous stir. A few months back a leading light of the Khilafatists, who hails from the Nizam's Dominions, I believe, and who has only recently broken with his comrades on account of their alleged pro-Wahhabi sympathies, was explaining to his co-religionists in Bihar his idea of the Indian raj of the future. The well-meaning but ignorant Khoja was telling enthusiastic Sunni audiences that in the coming raj at least the Musalman part of the population shall be governed by the "Shariat Law" and that Law alone,—e.g., that those who are Musalmans (either by birth or conversion) shall be prohibited under pain of death from embracing any other faith or even any new 'heresy' within Islam,—that the property of a converted father shall not be inherited by his unconverted children,—that the hands of a convicted thief shall be cut off,—that no Muslim shall be liable to pay interest on debt,—that the non-retention of the burkha by a Muslim woman in public shall be made a penal offence, and so on! We generally dismiss such well-meaning dreamers as ultra-conservatives, but really they are learned in their own way, which is a narrow, communal way. There are counterparts to such folk amongst the Hindus also. Only they are not so vocal. If they had their way, they would have a Vaikom-bar erected at every Vaikom-like place in Bharatavarsh, bring back Sati, or revert to "Ramarajya" and have the Shudras disabled, as was Shambuka of old, from the exercise of this or that common right in their life. Thus do the orthodox of each sect imagine and preach their own queer forms of "Swaraj"! Need I say what this state of things is really due to? It is due, first to Mahatma Gandhi's participation in the theocratic Khilafat movement without clearly defining the bearing of that step upon the Swaraj he immediately aimed at; secondly to his failure or refusal till only lately, to make the form of Swaraj sufficiently definite to the mind of our people, thus leaving the bigoted Hindu or Muslim, to cherish and propagate his own musty form of it; and thirdly to Gandhiji's insistence upon his politics being part of his 'religion,' which term the ignorant understood in the sense of sectarian religion, instead of in the higher sense in which the Mahatma evidently meant it, and which he ought to have made clear, viz., an ethical-spiritual life, or a life true to the 'spirit.' But our communalists know only the baser sense of the term and have been exploiting it heartily!

UNPARALLELED.

Mr. Chagla, as though to justify a departure from strict democratic practice and to reconcile the so-called majority community to the concession of "excessive (i. e. slightly disproportionate) representation" to the 'minority' of Muslims as a sacrifice due by the former on the altar of communal unity, cited an illustration from the Swiss constitution. He pointed out that in Switzerland—that small European country, yet a polyglot, multi-religious and multi-racial one like India—one seat and one only is allotted to each Canton (or constituent province) in the Central Legislature, regardless of the inequalities of the Cantons' populations. This is true, but the Cantons are not formed on religious lines: many are not exclusively or even predominantly Protestant or Catholic, some being almost half-Protestant, half-Catholic,—so that it is easily seen that Swiss representation does not at all run on credal lines, and that the Swiss constitution in this as in all other matters is quite on all fours with its basic principle of a secular State. So the Swiss parallel is no parallel. The Swiss are too wise not to see that howsoever the votes of their Protestant and Catholic voters may go in actual practice, i. e. even though the Protestants vote for the Protestant and the Catholics for the Catholic candidate as a general rule,—that nevertheless to embody religious differences in the civic law is only to foster them; and that if they had a religious dichotomy of the nation into a Catholic minority and a non-Catholic majority, as in India, it would only be to create a State within a State.

THE PUBLIC SERVICES.

Now let me turn to Mr. Zabair's address. Mr. Zabair has declared himself in favour of the public services being manned by competition alone, and thus is against "the share system," or communal representation being extended to the services. If Mr. Zabair had not given out his views in this respect as applying to all India, but had in mind only Bihar, he would have laid himself open to the imputation of a communal motive; for in Bihar, it is well-known, the Mahomedans happen to be at present in so favourable a position in respect of the public services that if the principle of open competition alone were applied and the "share system" were definitely dropped, they would have nothing to lose, but rather some temporary advantage to gain thereby. But I am glad, judging from the meagre press report of his address, the president of the Bihar Political Conference does not intend the sound principle to apply to Bihar alone. Would that all other communalists followed his lead in this matter!

OUR TRAVANCORE LETTER.

(From our own Correspondent).

A VILLAGE CARNAGE.

The Padmanabhapuram correspondent of the Trivandrum Daily News writes thus:—

"The village of Keringal, which had been the scene of several murders in the past, claims to be the largest centre for the sale of meat in proportion to the population. It is said that as many as 200 sheep, half as many pigs, and one-fourth the number of cattle are killed and the flesh offered for sale on each market day. A band of boys has adopted the killing of these innocents as a profession. In the ordinary course, the boys also take to drinking, which has affected the largest percentage of the villagers; and with such influences, they grow up to be a menace to the peace and well-being of the district. The general complaints very often heard from the helpless ryots and cultivators who are obliged to vend articles in the market, are mainly due to the insolence of these people and the corruption of the Police deputed for that district. Will not the Humanitarian Society, with its avowed object of the rescue of the dumb, strike at the root of the evil and devote their attention to educate the illiterate in the district and save a whole people?"

The picture drawn here is not at all exaggerated. This is only a typical case of animal slaughter recklessly carried in rural areas. The state of affairs is not one whit better in North Travancore where it is the cow that is the favoured subject of the ruffians. At certain seasons of the year like the Makar Sankranthi and Audyaruthi, killing animals of all sorts—cow, sheep, goat, ox, fowl etc.—and spilling of blood has become a ruling passion with some brutes in the form of human beings. There is another direction in which this gruesome sacrifice is resorted to and that is in the name of Hindu religion.* In spite of the spread of education and enlightenment, there are occasions in the months of November, December, etc., supposed to be cho'era season, when goats and fowls are killed in Amman Koils of non-Brahmins. Though the endeavours of the enthusiastic members of the Humanitarian Society have largely reduced this reckless carnage, this reprehensible and immoral practice is allowed to be perpetuated in several villages. It is a loathsome sight and very strongly offends the ordinary sense of human sympathy and deadens the feeling of kindness inherent in man's nature. It is uneconomic and immoral to tolerate this huge carnage of revelry even under the cloak of Hindu religion and is an open insult to real Hinduism. A resolution against cow-killing was once tabled for discussion in the Legislative Council. It is high time that something was done to stop this growing evil from humanitarian and moral points of view.

Mrs. Watts.

Mrs. Watts, wife of the Dewan, Mr. Maurice E. Watts, arrived here from England and made her formal entry into Bhaktivilas, the official residence of the Dewan, on the 30th September. A very hearty reception was extended to her by the Secretariat staff. The Malabar fashion of greeting by Nira Para was adopted. Two paras, wooden measures of grain, were filled to overflow, one with paddy and the other with rice. A tall brass lamp and two other smaller lamps were placed in front with burning wicks. There were the other ordinary paraphernalia, beatle leaves, plantain fruits, cocoanut etc., etc. On entering the bungalow, she was taken to where all this was arranged and the significance of this Hindu form of reception was fully explained to Mrs. Watts who was delighted with the honour shown her. She was highly interested in the Hindu ways and customs and curiously examined the whole show. The Dewan then introduced the members of his office staff. Mrs. Watts was then led to the Reception Hall downstairs where the Secretariat staff had assembled. The Chief Secretary garlanded Mrs. Watts and welcomed her and hoped that, along with her husband, she would also work for the promotion of the happiness and prosperity of the people. Mrs. Watts returned thanks for the splendid reception given her and for the trouble they had taken to come there and greet her. The gathering then dispersed.

[*We understand that H. H. the Maharani Regent has issued orders prohibiting animal sacrifices in Hindu temples We commented on this humanitarian reform introduced by Her Highness. Does our correspondent suggest that the Government prohibition has not had the desired effect?—Ed., I.S.R.]

CALCUTTA LETTER.

(From our Correspondent).

An official communique has been issued by the Government of Bengal regarding the cocaine evil in Calcutta. In the course of the judgment dated July 16th, the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate observed that "the really dangerous traffickers were left alone and he did not believe that the immunity of these people was accidental, nor did he believe that it was an immunity gained from merely Sub-Inspectors of Police". The Government of Bengal state that "the Magistrate is unable to give them any information on which it would be possible to base any inquiry into the allegation of complicity of higher police officials contained in his second judgment". The Government of Bengal however admit that "measures have been concerted which, it is hoped, will improve the position and which have already had some satisfactory results". We wonder why the Government did not deem it their duty to take active steps in rooting out the evil before Mr. Keays, the Magistrate, brought out the glaring facts. The public are thankful to the Magistrate for his observations on the evil.

Mr. G. S. Birla is to be congratulated for having given a sum of Rs. 50,000 to the Benares University towards establishing a Women's residence and as much towards preparing and publishing text-books in Hindi. Indian Universities have always suffered for want of finance in giving effect to any beneficent scheme, and we trust that these donations from noblemen will not be few and far between.

The eulogistic references of H. E. the Viceroy to the services of Sir Narasimha Sarma force one to believe that Sir Narasimha was all accommodating to the interests of the bureaucracy though His Excellency has taken care to observe that he "from first to last manifested a deep devotion to the interests of Indians and to the cause of India and of the Empire." The several stock phrases like 'fearless honesty of purpose' 'fair judgment' 'sobriety and wisdom', which His Excellency had occasion to use when he bade farewell to the Council of Elders, were handy enough on this occasion. As trustees of the three hundred and odd millions of India, they are the only men to know what is good for us and anybody helping them in carrying their burden is doing that to 'the interests of India'. Commenting on this farewell speech, a Nationalist daily remarks: "An accommodating mediocre is of course a model of what the bureaucracy loves and admires in an Indian member of the Executive Council. We do not mean to be uncharitable to Sir Narasimha. If he has not been able to leave a permanent record of useful work, the fault lay certainly more in the system under which he had to work than with himself personally."

The news that Srimati Sarojini Naidu has been elected to preside over the coming National Congress has been received here with satisfaction and pride. We agree with the Forward that she owes her election not to any superabundance of chivalrous feeling but to her unalloyed patriotism and unflinching devotion to the cause of her Motherland. We look forward eagerly to the day at Cawnpore, when with her poetic and silvery voice she will be able to bring all the parties together and make them present a united demand to bureaucracy. Now, with the yarn franchise abandoned, the time is opportune for all parties to sink their differences and work devotedly for the country. Otherwise the Government will certainly exploit their differences to the detriment of national interests.

A representative of the Statesman in an interview with the General Manager of the Calcutta Tramways was made aware of a big scheme for the general reorganisation of the Tramway Service. The new scheme will involve chiefly (1) the lay-out of circular routes to various parts of the city (2) the splitting of the various services into stages and the regulating of the fares according to the distance travelled. It is probable that this new scheme may have been in the company's view for some time past but the recent rapid growth of the Motor-bus Service between different parts of Calcutta and the subsequent loss to the Tramways must have accelerated the same.

THE RISHIS AND THE BRAHMINS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

It is a common belief that the Rishis and the Brahmins belong to the same race. But it is not true. The Rishis belong to the Aryan race and the Brahmins have descended from Magi. The priests of the ancient Persia were called Magi. They originally resided in Media on the western border of Persia. They came from this country and settled in Persia. They not only settled in persia but they also changed the religion of the people.

"The coming of the Atharvans is celebrated in Avesta. They came from afar bringing piety into the countries. Before they immigrated from their distant homes in eastern Iran, piety had not dwelt there, but a creed different from that which is taught by Avesta. The people still followed the old Aryan religion of nature.

"The same fact is implied in the tradition which puts into the mouth of Kerseni these words:—'No more shall an Atharvan come into my country to make proselytes.' Kerseni is apparently a legendary prince who counteracts the the missionary works of Atharvans. It is further on related that Houma vanquished him and deprived him of his power. This evidently means that the priests succeeded through divine aid in breaking the resistance of that prince and gaining over the people to their new doctrine.

"That the priests in the very epochs of Avesta were still in unsettled condition may perhaps be inferred from their appellation, 'wandering through the country' by which it seems the Atharvans are designated in the text.

In Ragha, that is in Media, the Atharvans had their homes. There resided the Zarathustrotrema and hence the priests had evidently migrated to the East. In Ragha they had not only spiritual but even secular power." (Civilization of the Eastern Iran in ancient time by Dr. W. Geiger).

These Atharvans migrated to India from Iran to preach their religion in our country. This migration may be the result of the persecution of the Magi by the Persian monarchs for their attempt to establish the supremacy of the priestly over the regal race. The Aryans were still the followers of the Vedic religion, but a new religion and a new social order were suddenly thrusted into their country. There was a great contest between the Atharvans and the Aryans for the supremacy of the priestly over the warrior caste. Brahminism was the new creed and the caste system was the new social order. Parasurama, the famous leader of the Atharvans, waged a great war against the Aryans and gained complete victory over them after a hard struggle. The Atharvans wrote a new Veda which is called "Atharva Veda". This work for a long time was not acknowledged by the Aryans as a proper Veda because it was written by a foreign people.

In the course of time, however, the Atharva Veda was reckoned as one of the Vedas and the Atharvans gave up their old designation and began to call themselves Brahmins. There was a close connection between the Vedic language and the language of Iran. Consequently the Atharvans easily masterd the Vedic language. But inspite of all these, the Brahmins were no match to the Kshatriyas in respect of divine knowledge, and they were said to have been instructed in divine knowledge by the Kshatriyas. Being defeated by the Kshatriyas in divine knowledge, the Brahmins made it a crime for a Kshatriya to teach them.

In India, the population of the Sudras at that time, was the largest and if they were allowed to mingle with the Aryans, the Aryan element would have been entirely absorbed by them. It was for this reason, the Brahmins separated them and kept them under severe control. But the Sudras in course of time destroyed their power and supremacy.

When the Aryans first came to India, they entertained great enmity towards the non-Aryans; but as soon as the non-Aryans submitted to their authority, the Aryans ceased their hostility towards them. It can be seen from Hindu literature that the Aryans used to marry the daughters of the non-Aryans. Many hymns of the Vedas were composed by them. Thus there was going on a steady process of amalgamation of the Aryans and the non-Aryans through the influence of intermarriage or through friendly and peaceful relation with powerful non-Aryan tribes. It is, therefore, clear that as time went on the old feelings of hatred and animosity were forgotten and the two races were gradually becoming one, living and working side by side in peace and war. But when the Brahmins came to India, they divided and separated them and treated them with great contempt. Had the Brahmins, with the magnanimity of a noble nature, refrained from establishing the wicked and selfish law of separating one class from the other, the life of the Hindu nation would not have been destroyed; nor would the Sudras have sunk into the state of animal contentment and listless indifference like the Negro-slaves of America.

PROHIBITION RESOLUTION IN THE ASSEMBLY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

We ought to be grateful to Dr. S. K. Dutta and Mr. Kelkar for the stand they took against liquor traffic in the Legislative Assembly. Will you kindly allow me to point out a few things that might be of interest to the readers of your esteemed paper?

Colonel Crawford quoted Lord Dawson of Penn in support of drinking in moderation, but can we have the moderate drinking without the liquor traffic and liquor traffic without immoderate drinking? According to the learned Colonel, the cases of alcoholic poisoning admitted into the hospitals had largely increased since Prohibition had been adopted. Along with the gallant Colonel's statement, I would place the statistics taken from the Official U. S. Government Report No. 294. According to this report, the addicts treated by New York State doctors before Prohibition were 12,365 in 1918 and only 775 in 1922. The actual deaths from alcoholism in 1914-17 were 14,270. Deaths that would have occured in years 1919-22 at the average pre-Prohibition

rate are 18,119. Actual deaths in years 1919-22 were only 6, 845. What more does the Colonel desire? Notwithstanding these concrete facts, the Colonel believes that "Prohibition regime was a farce, and results tragic".

It was no doubt a letter from his "friend in the States" that made the Finance Member to predict that in another ten years the experiment in the U. S. A. would prove unsuccessful. After all the noble efforts of the late President Hardinge, and the present President to make Prohibition a success, it was left to the lot of the Finance Member of the Viceroy's Council to prove the opposite! Along with Sir Basil's statement that "Prohibition has led in America to wide-spread disrespect for the law, to corruption among officials, to man-slaughters and to demoralization of the Citizens", I would put the solid statement of general Andrew, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. He says that there is "evidence of constant progress in] the enforcement of the Volstead Law despite sneers and jibes of its opponents". Even if bootlegging is prevalent, it is due to people like Sir Broderick Hartwell who abuse the British flag in order to violate the laws of a country. President Elliot of Haward is right when he says that "sensible people do not expect a complete enforcement of laws that interfere with gratifications which even a small proportion of the population means to secure at whatsoever cost to themselves and other people".

Let us try the experiment even if it means our ruin as in the case of U. S. A.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF RECONCILIATION.

THE PROBLEM OF EAST AND WEST.

Mr. Percy M. Bartlett, the General Secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, having its headquarters at 17, Red Lion Square, London, W. C. I., has sent us the following message adopted at the annual Conference of the Fellowship of Reconciliation held at Kiplin, Yorkshire, England, from July 31st to August 6th, 1925:—

Love overcomes its opposite as water subdues fire.
MENCIUS.

Hatred ceases not by hatred but by love.
THE UPANISHADS.

Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.
PAUL.

The gifts which our Father has given to his children in the East and in the West are different, but all are His gifts and are needed in His family. When we make racial differences the occasion for strife, we miss their meaning and we miss our way in life. When the West tries to dominate the East, both suffer. Any failure in justice and mercy anywhere is a threat to justice and mercy everywhere. If men are to reach the time when love and righteousness are supreme, it is essential that we discover one another, recognising and rejoicing in the good gifts which others have received. It is essential that we show courtesy and respect to one another. It is essential that we learn to co-operate.

The East and West are not co-operating to-day in many spheres is only too evident. We in the Fellowship of Reconciliation are impressed by the fact that some of those great truths which Eastern seers have seen are those most needed to deliver the West from wars and from the perils of prosperity. The sages of China saw that patience and forbearance were more potent than violence and passion. In modern India, Gandhi has set forth the way of non-resistance as a practical political method in a new and startling light, He has dared to try it and to call a whole nation to follow him. To us it seems clear as day that Jesus saw this way and that He died in the perfect following of it. From the Cross there still shines the light which can guide us all. It calls us to forgive and to overcome by sheer love. Is this light essentially different from that which shines from these two Eastern nations?

The way for men is thus marked out if we may but combine these different elements, and, East and West in comradeship, together seek to make a new world. The reconciliation of the races comes about as men find themselves made one inwardly by a new spirit, which we believe to be the spirit of Christ. Reconciliation begins in personalities. It is our great hope that men and women may be multiplied who have experienced within themselves the power of a reconciliation which includes East and West, and who in simple courage and faith will express this way of life.

To grapple with great evils is one path to true peace, for no society that to'erates evil can be stable. The evils incidental to and inherent in our present industrial system have claimed our attention. In them we see a challenge to East and West alike, and in their abolition we see a task which needs all the idealism and perseverance of all the races. Another great international question is raised by the prevalence of the drug habit. If all the best elements of East and West could combine to grapple with opium and to limit its production to the amount needed for medical and scientific purposes, an incalculable service would be rendered to generations still unborn. The fear of war still cripples the free spirit of man. To us it seems certain that East and West must stand side by side in the determined effort to end war. We believe it can be done, but we are equally sure that we need one another, that we of the West cannot accomplish the great task without vision, patience and goodwill of our Eastern brethren.

Could there be a greater call to better understanding and deeper sympathy between the races? It is a call for the expression of all that is noble and God-like in each of us. It is a call to see and join with all that is noble and God-like in others. It is a call to heroism in little things as in greater ones. Through patient study, through the insight of the child-spirit, through the influence which each may have on public opinion, it is open to each one to become in truth an Apostle of Reconciliation. In a fellowship of such persons from East and West, and North and South, we see the promise of a new day for humanity.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Sind Hindu Marriage Bill: The Bombay Government Gazette of October 6th contains the Select Committee's report on Mr. Advani's Sind Hindu Marriage Bill. It will be seen that the Select Committee has practically whittled down the Bill in such a way as to frustrate completely the objects of the Bill. The Committee think it necessary to make it clear that the Bill will not affect converts to the Mahomedan religion and have decided by a majority to amend the Bill accordingly. The Bill will apply to only those Hindus who are permanently domiciled in Sindh. It has further been made clear that a person making a false declaration will be liable to prosecution under the Indian Penal Code. The Committee think it unnecessary to provide for remarriage under certain circumstances and have therefore deleted the clauses making such provision in the original Bill. The provision that a marriage in contravention of a declaration made under this Act is void, is also deleted. Sir Maurice Hayward in a note of dissent points out that the removal of the provisions that a marriage contracted against a declaration made under the Act be void, makes it difficult to understand how it would be possible to make a defaulter subject to the penalties provided under Sections 494 and 495 of the Indian Penal Code. Mr. R. D. Shinde believes that the Bill as amended by the Select Committee frustrates the object of the Bill. Mr. P. G. Joshi and Mr. D. B. Advani both maintain that change of religion by a Hindu does not operate as a dissolution of the marriage tie. Mr. R. G. Pradhan does not approve of the changes made in the Bill.

56th Birthday of Mahatma Gandhi: The 56th birthday of Mahatma Gandhi which fell on the 2nd instant was celebrated throughout the country by various public bodies by holding public meetings whereat speeches were made paying tributes to Mahatmaji's services to the country and humanity, and praying for his long life. The virtual relinquishment of the dictatorship of the Indian National Congress at the All India Congress Committee meeting recently held at Patna, has not in the least lowered the esteem and affection in which Mahatma Gandhi is held by the public in general. The plain fact is that the dictatorship or any other office only honours itself by associating with the name of Mahatma Gandhi who as a moral force commands universal reverence.

Dr. Besant's 79th Birthday: The 79th birthday of Dr. Annie Besant came off on the 4th instant and it was celebrated in several places mostly by the Theosophical societies. Our differences with Dr. Besant do not blind us not to admire her high intellectual attainments, sincerity, strong will, marvellous organising capacity, her extraordinary energy and undaunted optimism. She has done in her own way no small service to this country and in spite of recent differences which estranged her from the Congress, she continued to command the respect and admiration of all including her political opponents. She is now working on behalf of this country to enlist the support of the British public to her Commonwealth of India Bill, and whatever may be the result of her endeavours, the country will be grateful to her for all she has done. As president of the Theosophical Society she commands followers in every part of the world and is one of those few international figures who command respect and admiration from all quarters of the world. We wish her long life with undiminished strength to serve her adopted country.

Madras Provincial Anti-Untouchability Conference: We are glad to learn that it is proposed to hold a Madras Anti-Untouchability Conference in Madras at the end of this month and that Dewan Bahadur Sir Venkatarathnam Naidu Garu, the Vice-Chancellor of the Madras University and an eminent social reformer, has consented to preside. A Reception Committee has been formed with Rao Bahadur Dr. A. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliar and arrangements are in progress to make the Conference a success.

Labour Conference's Resolutions on India: The Labour Conference recently held in London adopted a resolution recognising the right of Indian people to full self-Government and self-determination, welcoming declarations of representative Indian leaders in favour of free and equal partnership with other members of the British Commonwealth of Nations and declaring for co-operation with Indian people.

The Late Rev. Mandolal Sen: We regret to record the death which took place last week at Karachi of Rev. Mandolal Sen, the nephew of the illustrious social and religious reformer, Keshub Chunder Sen. The deceased was engaged in various social, religious and educational activities in Sind for the last 40 years. He was also the Chairman of the Nava Vidhan Brahmo Samaj in Karachi. That he was doing silent work without seeking publicity seems to be the only reason for his not being widely known throughout the country. His was the work which had not the glamour and sensation of political work but it was none the less important for national regeneration as it leaves a more lasting impress in the sphere in which he worked. His death at a time when few are attracted to such kind of unostentatious work is a distinct loss to the country.

Equal Rights for all Classes: The following is the statement of objects and reasons accompanying Mr. Veerian's Bill to be introduced in the Madras Legislative Council at the next session:—On 22nd August 1924, a resolution was passed by the Legislative Council to the effect that there is no objection to any person or persons belonging to any class or community walking through any public road, street or pathway in any town or village; and that there is no objection to any person belonging to the depressed classes having access to the premises of any public office, well, tank or places of public resort and to places and buildings where public business is transacted in the manner and to the same extent as persons belonging to the community of caste Hindus in the country. The resolution has been embodied in a G. O. No. 2660. L. and M., dated 25th September 1924. Though the G. O. has been communicated to all the Presidents of the Local Boards, it does not appear that any good has come out of it. Now by the amendments proposed, it is sought to give effect to the G. O. by placing it on a statutory basis.

Hindu Yuvati Saranalayam: We have received an appeal for funds under the signature of several well-known leaders and public workers of Madras for the above institution conducted by Shrimati Yamini Purna Thilakamma. We have on previous occasions referred to the splendid work done by the well-known social worker, Yamini Purna Thilakamma in rescuing girls and women who have fallen or are likely to fall victims to immoral lives, and we need hardly say that it deserves the encouragement and support of all. We are requested to announce a further contribution of Rs. 150 sent by the Saraswati Mahila Samaj, Bombay, in addition to Rs. 400 already paid to her out of the proceeds of the benefit performances given in aid of the institution last June.

A Wadhwan Incident: "The elevation of the depressed classes and the spread of Hindu Sanghatan", writes the Indian Daily Telegraph, Lucknow, "is not the easy matter that it appears to be. We all know the Satyagraha conditions amidst which work is carried on in Malabar. And even in Gandhi's own centre of activities, conditions of orthodox frigidity are not better. At a celebration held in Wadhwan city last month, a feast was given to untouchable children, who were taken to the hall of festivity in procession carrying flags and singing songs. But, according to the secretary of the local National Education Society, "many Jains, Vaishnavas and others became furious at the spectacle. Foul abuse was uttered, threatening, demonstrations were made, and it is reported that those caste persons who helped in entertaining the children are to be excommunicated."

Widow Remarriages in Karachi: The following widow re-marriages were arranged by the Sind Vidhwa Sahaik Sabha, Karachi during the month of August 1915 :—(1) Shrimati Premvati was married with Thakur Narainsing, Drigh Road, (2) Shrimati Rajabati was married with Mr. Hukumsingh, N. W. Ry., Karachi Cantt, (3) Shrimati Moongabai, Gujrati widow, was married with Mr. Rewagir, Ranchore Lines, and (4) Shrimati Parbati was married with Lala Lekhraj, Munim, Messrs. Dhanpatmal Bhagwandas.

I. C. S. Results: It is announced that the following persons (out of whom it will be noticed 8 are Indians) have obtained the first twenty places in order of merit in the recent Indian Civil Service examination:—D. C. Meehweeney F. M. Inner, F. G. Lee, Hon. E. Baring, J. N. Mehta, G. C. Porteous, T. S. Ramachandran, B. A. Bambawale, G. R. Morley. R. H. King; M. C. Desai, A. Clark, E. B. Bowyer, T. Wikerley, W. Bryart, A. V. Pai, K. C. Basak, R. K. Mitter, D. Symington and T. G. Ayyar.

Gold in Mysore:—In the Mysore Representative Assembly in reply to a question it was elicited that during the last 43 years, that is, since the mining industry was started, roughly fourteen and a half million ounces of fine gold of a total value of ninety-five crores of rupees were obtained. The dividends paid to shareholders of the several companies were thirty-one crores of rupees. The working agreement between John Taylor and Co. and the Government would be over in 1940.

Successful Operation of the Heart: It is stated that in order to save the life of Edith Leavens, aged 14, Cambridge, U. S. A. doctors were forced to cut open her heart. The girl, who is now on the road to recovery is believed to be the only person in the world whose heart has been opened and who has lived after the operation.

Belgaum Cantonment Free General Library. The opening ceremony of the Belgaum Cantonment Free General Library and Reading Room was performed by Colonel J. Clementi, O.B.E., President of the Cantonment Board, on Saturday, the 3rd October 1925 at 4.30 p.m. in the presence of a large and distinguished gathering that assembled at Vinayakrao Gopal's Hall which was artistically decorated for the occasion. The proceedings began with a welcome song by school children. Rao Saheb M. Lingaya Naidu, a leading citizen of Belgaum and an ardent social reformer, welcomed the President and guests and made a short speech in which he traced the beginnings of the Institution which was opened on the 3rd inst. The President congratulated the Managing Committee on the noble work they were doing for the betterment of the masses and offered valuable suggestions for the successful management of the Library and Reading Room. He also assured them of the sympathy and help which the Committee could always count on him and on the Cantonment Board. Messrs. Venkateswami Vemulla, T. K. Ramuni and G. S. Kowadkar also spoke on the occasion. Mr. Kowdadkar, the Secretary, made an appeal for public support as a result of which Rs. 500 was collected on the spot besides several promises.

Mortality from Wild Animals and Venomous Snakes in British India: The Bombay Government Gazette of the 27th August contains the resolution of the Government of India, Home Department (Public) on the annual returns received from various Provincial Governments showing the mortality from wild animals and venomous snakes in British India during the year 1924. According to the Government information, the total number of persons killed by wild animals in British India during 1924 amounted to 2,587, as against 3,605 in the previous year. Tigers were responsible for 1,174 deaths, leopards for 406, wolves for 419, bears for 82, elephants for 41, and hyenas for 19. Deaths were highest from tigers and leopards in Madras, from wolves in the United Provinces, from bears in Bihar and Orissa, and from elephants in Assam. Of the 446 deaths from "other animals," about 53 are assigned to wild pig and 218 to crocodiles and alligators. The highest number of deaths from all wild animals occurred in Madras (641), the United Provinces, Bihar and Orissa and the Central Provinces and Berar coming next in order. The mortality in the majority of the provinces was less than in the previous year, but in Bombay and Burma it was slightly greater. Deaths from snake bite fell from 19,990 to 19,867. Decreases occurred in Madras, Bombay, Burma and the United Provinces, but Bengal, the Punjab, Bihar and Orissa, the Central Provinces and Berar and Assam have reported increases. During the year under review 21,032 wild animals were reported to have been destroyed, of which 1,706 were tigers, 5,202 leopards, 2,799 bears and 1,743 wolves. A sum of Rs. 1,71,170 was paid in rewards, against Rs. 1,65,367 in the previous year. The statistics of the number of snakes destroyed have been discontinued in Burma. In the other provinces the number destroyed increased from 42,911 to 47,106, and the rewards paid for their destruction were Rs. 1,403 as against Rs. 817 in the previous year.

NOTES

Suppression of Brothels in Madras: In a recent issue we referred to the efforts made by some prominent social workers in Madras to seek the aid of legislation to prevent the growth of prostitution in that city. The statement issued to the press by the Venerable Archdeacon of Madras, which we print to-day, shows that the evil has recently shown a tendency to increase and that the existing law has been found inadequate to deal with the situation. The Madras Vigilance Committee of which the Archdeacon is the President, is engaged in drafting a Bill more or less on the same lines as those followed in Bombay, Calcutta and Rangoon, to check the growth of this nefarious trade. That legislation cannot and will not succeed in checking the evil without vigorous non-official efforts to supplement it, has been made quite clear, and the experience of Bombay and Calcutta after the passing of the Act only confirms this view. We have recently referred to the unsatisfactory results obtained so far of the working of the Bombay Act. The Census figures quoted by the Archdeacon show that there are recorded 911 persons as prostitutes and procurers in the City of Madras while Bombay figures revealed 5,000 women living as brothel prostitutes besides clandestine prostitutes estimated at 30 to 40 thousands. The chief defects in the Bombay Act, to which we have more than once called attention, are the omission to include women from being penalised for living on the earnings of a prostitute, to deal with the seducer, who is often the subsequent procurer, and to deal with the houseowner who lets his house knowingly for brothel purposes. So far as our information goes, there is rarely anything like street soliciting by women in Madras as in Bombay although that work is done by procurers among whom the rikshawallas figure prominently.

Wanted Equal Standard of Morality for both Sexes: To strike the blow effectively at the institution of brothels, it is necessary to penalise the houseowner who lets his house for the purpose of prostitution. This was recommended by the Bombay Prostitution Committee, but the Government opposed it and it was not embodied in the Act. We trust that the Archdeacon and his Committee will take full advantage of the experience of the working of the Act in Bombay and avoid the defects of the Bombay Act in their Bill. There is a wealth of information on this most difficult subject in the latest report of the Association for Moral and Social Hygiene of Westminster which deals with the complications in the law and the difficulties of enforcing the law equitably to both the sexes. For instance, if procuration is made a criminal offence, those who pay for the procurers and benefit by their industry ought to be considered as accomplices and should also be penalised. In every case, it is found that the law operates more against the woman partner in the guilt, and it is absolutely necessary to maintain an equal standard of morality for both the sexes. The Bombay Act has tried to follow this sound maxim as far as possible, and it is hoped that the framers of the Madras Bill will bear in mind that the fact that a man, however loose his character may be, is not called a "prostitute" does not absolve him from guilt. Another important thing is the necessity for providing rescue homes for reclaimed women. We are glad that the Archdeacon has fully realised that no useful purpose will be served by legislation unless provision is made for dealing with reclaimed girls and women. The scanty support given by the Madras public to the Hindu Yuvathi Saranalayam conducted by Sreemati Yamini Purna Tilakamma in Madras is not an encouraging sign, especially when it is considered that the majority of prostitutes belong to the Hindu community. It is hoped that the efforts of the Archdeacon and his Committee will rouse the public to the absolute necessity of such homes which, it is hoped, will continue to have increasing support in future. We wish all success to the efforts of the Madras Vigilance Committee in their efforts to check this grave social evil.

The Pandharpur Orphanage and Foundling Asylum: We have repeatedly referred to the humane practice of the Bombay Government of allowing widows convicted of infanticide to serve their term of imprisonment in the Pandharpur Orphanage and Foundling Asylum conducted by the Bombay Prarthana Samaj. We have since come across the Resolution of the Government of the Central Provinces dated the 21st September 1925, providing for the remission and suspension of sentences of widow convicts sentenced for the murder of their illegitimate children and their transfer to the Widows' Home at Pandharpur. The rules regulating this are as follows. The Superintendent of the Jail in which the convict serves her term of imprisonment will have to bring such cases of conviction for infanticide to the notice of the District Magistrate through the Inspector General of Prisons and, if the District Magistrate considers the case a suitable one for transfer to the Home, he should recommend to Government the remission of the convict's sentence on the condition that she shall spend the unexpired portion of the sentence at the Home. The Superintendent, before recommending her for conditional release, shall ascertain whether the care of the prisoner can be undertaken by the Home. At present admission to the Home is only confined to prisoners speaking Marathi, Gujrati, Hindustani or Kanarese. Some of the conditions that ordinarily attach to such conditional release are that the convict shall reside in the Home until her sentence expires; that she shall not leave the Home under any pretext whatever, without first obtaining a pass from the Superintendent of the Home, that she shall comply with all the conditions of the pass, and that she shall obey all rules and orders that may be from time to time in force in the Home for the maintenance of discipline and order, or for the welfare of the inmates. If, however, it appears that the convict's presence at the Home is or is likely to be harmful to the good management of the Home, or if the convict commits any offence at the Home, she shall be liable to be sent back to the Jail to complete her sentence. There are also rules for the guidance of the Superintendent in charge of the Home. He shall inform each conditionally released prisoner inmate without delay of the expiry of her sentence and that she need no longer stay in the Home if she desires to leave. He shall also report to the District Magistrate Sholapur, without delay, the absence without leave of any conditionally released prisoner inmate of the Home, and may also inform the Police in the locality as well the Superintendent of the Jail from which the prisoner was received. As the Home has thus to maintain convict widows from other provinces like the Central Provinces, we need hardly say that it requires a larger amount of money than it is at present able to command for the up-keep of the Home. A liberal grant-in-aid from the C P. Government will be a legitimate charge in view of the service the Home is expected to render to the community in those provinces. We once more cordially endorse the appeal of the Prarthana Samaj for funds to the generous public.

Education of the Depressed Classes Children: The report of the Director of Public Instruction of the Bombay Presidency shows that the policy of the Bombay Government announced two years ago that schools maintained or aided out of public funds, refusing to admit children of the depressed classes, should be deprived of assistance out of such public funds, has had on the whole beneficent results. It is stated that no complaints regarding admission to children of the depressed classes to schools have been reported in the Thana and Kolaba Districts. There was only one instance of a school at Mohadi in Nasik district (which is held in a temple) where a depressed class boy was not allowed by the villagers to sit along with other pupils, but who was admitted to a neighbouring District Local Board school. In the Ratnagiri District there were 74 schools, held in temples or private houses, to which admission was refused to these children by the villagers or owners, owing to caste prejudices. As regards the Central Division, admission to schools does not appear to have been refused to depressed class children in any district except East Khandesh. In the District Local Board schools at Pimpri and Talvada serious difficulties were experienced. In the case of the Northern Division no difficulty is reported to have been experienced in the Kaira and Panch Mahals Districts in admitting the depressed class children to schools. In the Broach and Surat Districts the opposition is reported to be dying out. The same cannot be said of Ahmedabad where the opposition on the part of the caste people prevails as before. In some cases parents of depressed class children prefer their children to be seated at a distance from other pupils through fear of trouble from the higher castes. In the Southern Division and Sind no case is reported in which admission was refused to the children of depressed classes. It is clear that opposition to the admission of the children of the depressed classes exists only in the remote villages and there too mostly in schools which are held in temples and sacred buildings and also in schools located in buildings hired subject to the condition of the exclusion of the depressed classes. We are glad that instructions have been issued to have such schools removed to suitable localities without delay in order to facilitate the admission of the pupils belonging to the depressed classes. The report makes out that, while there still exists some opposition to the Government's policy due to caste prejudice, the experiment has proved a success. With the co-operation and assistance of the educated classes in the localities where opposition is faced, we are sure that it will not be long before the unjust discrimination against the members of the depressed classes in the matter of education becomes a thing of the past. The credit of issuing this order belongs to Dr. R. P. Paranjpye when he was Minister of Education, and we are sure the results will give him much satisfaction.

The Bombay Textile Industry: The most important event of the week was the Workers' Deputation led by Mr. N. M. Joshi, M. L. A., that waited upon His Excellency the Governor on the 12th instant at Poona. The institution of a Committee of Enquiry into the textile industry in Bombay, the withdrawal of notices of wage-cut till the publication of the Committee's report, the grant of facilities to strikers to go out of Bombay by giving them free passages, the consideration of measures for the early solution of the question of unemployment, these were some of the points touched upon by the Deputation. In reply, His Excellency repudiated the charge of 'callous indifference' brought against his Government and repeated what he had said on another occasion that his Government is utterly helpless and powerless to interfere in the matter, unless armed by legislation giving it statutory powers. The Government of India is responsible for delaying the necessary legislation in the matter. In spite of the efforts made by his Government to get the Excise Duty repealed, His Excellency could not hope for an immediate suspension or repeal of the Excise Duty. As regards the Enquiry Committee, His Excellency could not see any useful purpose served by a committee which did not meet with the co-operation of the millowners His Excellency, however, did well to point out that the abolition of the Excise Duty and the reduction of provincial contributions are quite distinct issues and not interdependent as the Government of India tries to make out. In fine, His Excellency told the workers to get into touch again with the Millowners' Association and freely discuss their points of view with a view to arriving at an early understanding, a course which, we are afraid, is not likely to commend itself to them in the present circumstances. The communication of Mr. Chadwick, Secretary, Commerce Department of the Government of India, in reply to the Millowners' Association, just published, is an attempt to confuse the issues. Mr. Chadwick makes out that the millowners did not desire to have the claims of the Indian textile industry for protection examined by the Tariff Board and draws the comfortable inference that the industry does not need protection. In a later communication, the Millowners' Association has exposed the Commerce Secretary's attempt to evade the main issue which is the suspension of the excise duty before any enquiry as recommended by the Fiscal Commission. The Millowners' Association has taken its stand on the recommendations of the Fiscal Commission, and in this the Association is supported by Indian public opinion.

The Osmania University: The first Convocation of the Osmania University of Hyderabad, held recently, was an important event in the history of that University. It may be remembered that the University was established in 1918 with a view to impart higher learning through the medium of Urdu. Although many Universities have adopted vernacular as the medium of instruction in secondary and high school education, this is in fact the only instance where higher education is sought to be imparted in a vernacular. The ideal which the Chancellor of the University placed before it is a noble one. "What wonder," he said, "if the desired confluence between the East and the West should take place on the banks of the Musi within the walls of our own University, which has so earnestly endeavoured to bring together in one spot the different sciences, arts and civilizations of the East and West."

MUSLIMS AND MONOGAMY.

We have often urged in these columns that the reformed Legislative Councils, whatever their drawbacks as political institutions, offered large opportunities of putting through much-needed social legislation and that these opportunities should be fully availed of. Some doubt about this position was roused in our mind by the opposition to the proposals to raise the age of consent in the Assembly but, on the whole, that body has shown itself capable of rising above petty prejudices. A more serious doubt has been raised by the amendments introduced in the Bill for providing a method of attaching to marriages among Hindus in Sind the legal incidents of monogamy. Mr. D. B. Advani, who represents a Hindu constituency of Sind in the Bombay Legislative Council, introduced a Bill during the last session permitting the parties in a Hindu marriage to make a declaration before a Magistrate that they intended their marriage to be monogamous and voluntarily submitting themselves to the pains and penalties attaching to the offence of bigamy in the Penal Code. When such a declaration was made, the marriage shall be a monogamous marriage and the husband will not be free to take a second wife as he is under the Hindu law. When the Bill was introduced, we remarked that it might be made applicable to Hindus throughout India and introduced in the Legislative Assembly. In view of what has happened in the Select Committee, the author of the Bill may not care to proceed with it in the Bombay Legislative Council. We hope some member of the Legislative Assembly will bring in an All-India Monogamous Marriage Bill at an early date. The Hindu community will not oppose it, nor, we are convinced, the enlightened section of the Mussalman community. On the other hand, a large section of both will welcome such a permissive measure.

We have often complained of the apathy of the Mahomedan community to social reform. Though the Indian National Social Conference from the first has been open to all communities alike, and though its founder, Mahadev Govind Ranade, never tired of insisting that both Hindus and Mahomedans have a common field of social work, very few Mahomedans have taken part in it, though Christians have done so in larger numbers. Now, however, some Mahomedans have begun actually to obstruct social reforms among Hindus on the plea, which we can only characterise as intolerable, that converts to Islam from the Hindu fold will be prejudiced thereby in exercising their rights in their new religion. On this extraordinary plea, they have succeeded in mutilating Mr. Advani's Bill in the Select Committee against the protests of Mr. Advani himself and other non-official Hindu members. The Mahomedan members of the Select Committee with the help of the official members have succeeded in adding in the very first clause a proviso which is at once absurd and offensive to Hindus and, as Mr. Pradhan points out in his minute of dissent, ultra vires of the Legislative Council. The original clause stated that the Bill applies to the Hindus of the Province of Sind. The qualifying clause "so long as they remain Hindus" has been added by a majority of the Select Committee. What right have these gentlemen to presume that Hindus of Sind will cease to be Hindus at any proximate date? If this precedent were followed, we should have a similar clause added to every treatise on Hindu law, namely, that it applies to Hindus only so long as they are Hindus. As a matter of fact, conversion to Islam has not in many cases affected the personal law of the convert, and even now there are Moslem sects or castes which follow the Hindu law of succession. The Moplas follow the custom of matriarchy in some parts of Malabar. The right to marry more than one wife is not one which any educated man in these days will care to claim for himself, and we cannot help thinking that there is a certain perversity in insisting that the right of a Mahomedan to have a plurality of wives should be safe-guarded even in an Act to permit Hindus to contract monogamous marriages.

Mr. Advani, in his minute of dissent, rightly observes:

> It would appear that in no civilised society does change of religion constitute a ground for marriage during the life time of a wife. No Englishman can so remarry. Nor can a Parsi. Nor does change of religion constitute a ground for divorce. Is the Hindu woman therefore only to be penalised if she chooses not to change the religion of her forefathers? For it should be noted that she will be unable to remarry in case the husband discards her on account of conversion, and she thus becomes a widow for all practical purposes. But the husband who changes his religion, simply because he wishes to discard his first wife and to have another, for whatever reason, will have the license to remarry. This is the effect of the section as now drafted. Mere change of religion, at the sweet will and pleasure of the husband, will enable him to remarry and throw overboard his first wife.

Mr. R. D. Shinde's remarks are also very much to the point. He writes:

> I am afraid the bill as amended by the Select Committee will to some extent frustrate the object of the bill. The bill is obviously an attempt to give the sanction of law to a social reform which is much needed in Hindu society and as a beginning it is desirable to make the bill an enabling one. The bill is intended for those Hindus who have realised the importance of the reform in the adoption of monogamy and who voluntarily consent to make a declaration. This fact makes it, in my view, absolutely unnecessary to make any provision absolving any converts from Hinduism from further liabilities attaching to a declaration. I am therefore opposed to the amendment in clause 1 (2) as also the deletion of the last three lines of clause 4 of the original bill. I submit that these amendments are irrelevant and unfair. A Hindu who makes a declaration does it with the knowledge that he gives up polygamy which is allowed by the Hindu religion and therefore it is extremely unfair to the wife if he be allowed liberty to get behind the solemn declaration by conversion into Mahomedanism or any other religion. It may also be pointed out that no such provision exists in other analogous Acts such as the Christian Marriage Act, the Parsee Marriage Act. When in this bill we are legislating

for Hindus only, I cannot understand the absolute nervousness shown by my Mahomedan colleagues on the committee on this question. It is too much for the Mahomedans to expect the Hindus to view with complaisance any possible conversions made solely for the purpose of circumventing the declarations.

Many educated Mahomedans would like to have a similar permissive law passed for their community also. The Sind Mahomedans are a very ignorant and backward community, and the majority of the Select Committee have, we are afraid, been actuated by political reasons in mis-shaping the Bill, as they have done. As Mr. R. G. Pradhan observes in his Minute, the Bill has been so much mutilated that unless the Council restores it more or less to its original form, it is not worth while proceeding with it further. Mr. Advani himself rightly observes that the Bill in the form now proposed, far from being a step towards social reform, will be a highly retrograde measure. We trust enlightened Mahomedans will come forward and declare that they disapprove of the attempt of the Sind Mahomedans to impede the course of social reform.

THE BEARING OF ASTROLOGY ON MEDICAL TREATMENT.

(By Mr. M. S. Kelkar).

Whether it is possible to predict particular illness from the horoscope or not, a study of the patient's horoscope is of great use in guiding the line of treatment in serious cases, acute or chronic. The Ayurvedic method of diagnosing a disease as a disturbance of the three chief elements in the body, viz, पित्त, कफ, वात, appears to be based on the three kinds of planetary influences; Sun and Mars influencing पित्त, Moon and Jupiter कफ, Venus and Saturn वात, and Mercury all three. Even if this terminology were set aside in the light of modern physiology and even if the treatment were simplified as done by the many systems going under the name of naturapathy, a study of the horoscope is of importance in showing the seriousness of a case and the probable duration of the illness, and no definite prognosis can be given till the current bad period ends. In a few cases I was able to predict the exact critical week of illness, while in a few others I was able to predict the duration. The oft-repeated term 'vitality' is of no use unless we are able to measure it. Before studying astrology I used to form an idea of the vitality of a patient from his total functional capacity. But now astrology gives me a much better idea of the original vitality, the current bad influences lowering it, and the period of those bad influences. If the lord of the ascendant be either the Sun, Mars, Jupiter or Saturn, and if it be not badly aspected or badly placed in relation to the ascendant, the general vitality is good; when either the Moon, Mercury or Venus rules the ascendant, the person is weak and sensitive, being affected by minor disturbances of diet and weather. Of course, all the other planets affect the vitality to some extent. From the body point of view, the Sun represents the skeleton or stable element; the Moon, the blood or the moving, changing element; Mars, the brain and nerves or the guiding element; Mercury, the skin or the external sensory organs; Jupiter, the fat or bulky element; Venus, the reproductive or creative element; and Saturn the muscles or the working element. The Sun and Moon being the chief luminaries, the health is affected when, in addition to the lord of the ascendant, they are affected by the enemical planets.

The seriousness of an illness is best shown by the number of bad influences affecting the ascendant, its lord, the Sun and the Moon, as well as by the nature of the विंशोत्तरी and yearly दशा. When the Dasha is good, one or two bad aspects to the chief luminaries may not produce an illness, though they may undermine the vitality and prepare the ground for some future bad period. When the Dasha is bad, and the luminaries and the ascendant are affected, the illness is a serious one and no one can say whether the person will live through till the period changes for good and the bad transits are over. The ill effects of these bad combinations are increased when there are similar bad combinations in the horoscopes of the near relatives; so it is always useful to see the horoscopes of the husband and wife and the first and last child together to decide the seriousness of a case.

During the first few years of childhood, the body, being very sensitive and unstable, is affected even by the minor bad aspects. The only remedy to save a child from such times is to see that it grows properly. Want of growth is the first sign of the child's vitality being lowered whether by planetary or weather influences or by improper feeding or want of airing. If the child's growth is ensured by proper adjustment of the feeding etc., it will not get ill often and will get well even from serious illnesses. When a child has not grown properly for some time, any minor illness takes a serious turn with a planetary bad aspect and no amount of treatment has any effect till the bad time is over. I am sorry, space forbids my mentioning the instances in support of what I am saying from my experience.

Saturn, which is well known for its bad influences over all except those born under it, makes a complete circuit in about 30 years and so makes all sorts of bad aspects with all the other planets. Those who die within 32 are considered to be short-lived as they are too weak to bear the first series of bad influences. Charak, the famous Ayurvedic author, says that a person should be considered a full-grown adult after 30 years. And for the sake of longivity as well as to avoid all the bad effects of early marriage, it is desirable to raise the age of marriage to 30. Then artificial birth-control will be unnecessary as there will be more mental control and lesser chances of over-population. Then, those who die during the second series of bad influences between 32 and 64 are considered to be of mean longivity, while those surviving this series are said to have lived their proper life time. To outlive this second series, a person has to lead a regular, temperate and chaste life. The third cycle of Saturn combined with other bad aspects is usually fatal because the body is exhausted physically and depressed mentally. Manu has said that even a Sudra of 90 is fit to be revered by all castes, because it is no joke to keep the body and soul together so long.

Now the important point in every illness is that of proper treatment, and here astrology is of great use. The treatment based on astrology takes the form of choosing such plants as are influenced by the planet which is weak in a particular case, or such plants as grow under the influence of a planet antagonistic to the one affecting the person badly. I have not gone into this branch as, before studying astrology, I have adopted a simple line of treatment of controlling the diet and proper nursing, eliminating all the poisonous drugs, unless their depressing effect is desired. And I find that astrology supports this line of treatment. I divide the symptoms of any illness into those of irritation and those of depression. When the accumulation of the waste products of the body is less, the symptoms are those of irritation, viz., inflammation, pain, and an extra effort by the body to throw the irritating substances out by the secretory organs. These symptoms are not serious and the excretory work of the body can be best helped by reducing the food partly or wholly for some days, and giving water freely in order to help the circulation of blood all over the body. But when the accumulation of the waste products is more and all the organs from the heart and respiration to those of excretion are depressed, the case is serious and requires the most careful treatment. Even water has to be given carefully, let alone the purgatives and the other poisonous drugs used by the allopathic practitioner in every case. In such cases even the allopathic practitioner uses the term crisis or critical period, but he does not know that this period is astrological and can be known from the horoscope only. An approaching full moon or new moon is a rough guide of the critical period. More important than these are the times when the Sun or Moon is approaching the conjunction or opposition with Saturn, Uranus, or Rahu, the moon's node, in every year. These times are bad when the original Sun, Moon or ascendant is affected by the same bad influence. For instance, a boy with an ascendant of Aries 20° was affected this year by Saturn exactly opposite it, and the Sun passing opposite Saturn on 3rd May. He got ill after the new Moon of 23rd April, became acute suddenly on 28th and 29th April, and though the acuteness was less from 30th, the symptoms suddenly cleared up completely from 4th May after the opposition of Sun with Saturn on the 3rd. In such cases any attempt to check the symptoms with poisonous drugs, or even to increase the excretions by ordinary purgatives may increase the depression and do harm. Any practitioner who will study a few of his serious cases astrologically will learn to use most of his medicines with caution. I have seen doctors use Digitalis (which is a bad poison even in small doses) even for children when there was no reason at all for giving it.

In these days of rationality, our English-educated people consider the Western allopathy and surgery to be rational simply on the show of those systems being based on the modern scientific discoveries of chemistry and physiology. But the use of a purgative is no more 'rational' simply because we understand to-day its chemical nature or its mode of operation. To be rational, it must also be the simplest and the best suited remedy to get a desired effect in a particular case. In the Ayurvedic system, different purgatives are used in different diseases, which seems more rational. Then, the Western system goes straight on to prescribe a purge, a diaphoretic and a diuretic and also half a dozen other medicines for other effects in the same mixture. The Ayurvedic system lays down as a rule that all the five ways of excretion should be opened in succession, before giving any medicines for the particular disease. Then it also refers to the astrological significance of diseases and of beginning a remedy on a proper day. But now with our knowledge of the different sciences, astrology included, a rational treatment is a matter of some difficulty, as referred to above. Perhaps the reason of one remedy producing different results on different persons having apparently the same symptoms, is to be found in the difference of their horoscopes. Till one studies this branch to some extent, it is safer to depend on the general laws of hygiene common to all, and to adopt a treatment based on them. And 'the more serious a case, the less disturbing the treatment' will be found a very useful rule.

Lastly, the question of prescribing a change of place is also important astrologically. But those who do not know this significance of a place, should always prescribe a change from a hotter or a very cold place to one of an even temperature like Bombay. Bombay has in addition the advantage of sea-weather and a soft water supply, which also is desirable as a change from the hard waters of up-country wells.

COMMUNALISM IN OUR PUBLIC LIFE.

"Hard Facts."

It may be said that to expect to realise here the modern democratic ideal in the near future is to run away from "hard facts". But a deeper consideration of the problem will show us how only to the extent to which we honestly try to divorce ourselves from those 'hard facts' to which we have allowed ourselves to be wedded, can we hope to realise real Swaraj. And what, after all, are those 'facts' to whose 'hardness' we are always asked to surrender at discretion, —as witness the Hon. Mr. Hidayatallah's cry in the Bombay Council that, given the choice between Swaraj and separate representation, the Mahomedans would certainly prefer the latter? Are not such 'facts' the creations of the political-minded classes of this or that community,—aided, inspired and provoked by the bureaucracy? Who thought of separate electorates and 'excessive' representation before the age of "command performances" by Moslem Leagues

realpatidar.com

at the bidding of imperial Mintos? Was not the open secret given out finally and authoritatively by Mr. Mahomed Ali, the old Leaguer, at Coconada? Who but the Curzons could have injected ideas of "political importance" or "economic backwardness" (or is it the "greater economic stake"?) of one 'community' compared with the other or others—just to divide and rule the national forces? Who but a Deputy Commissioner of Delhi would have vetoed a resolution in favour of joint municipal electorates passed by a great majority of the Muslim and non-Muslim elected members of the municipality of the Imperial Capital, as happened during last winter? Shall we for ever bow down to such clay-footed 'facts' created by the alien out of the dust of sectional and personal ambitions in our midst, and give the ideal of democracy the go-by?

The Mahomedan President of the Bihar Political Conference may think that it is for the Muslim to answer that question. There he is wrong—emphatically wrong. These are not the days of the Lucknow Pact. The Muslims are not the only 'minority', nor are they any longer the only clamant one. Already we have with us the Non-Brahmin Congress, the Adi-Hindu (or Depressed class) Organisation,—the two separatist bodies formed in 'the unity week' of the Belgaum Congress!—the Sikh League, the Christian Conference, the Jain Conference, the Shia Conference etc.,—and more are likely to crop up! It is for all or none of these to answer the question put. If we are communally bent, if we are ridden by 'hard facts,' if our hearts are set upon new Lucknow Pacts—luckless Pacts—it is for all or none of those bodies to answer, and no longer for the Muslim League or the Hanafi Association alone to do so! Let the "hard facts" be there, to be exploited by the bureaucracy and by its voluntary or involuntary agents for its and their personal or communal ends. Let those idols of 'facts' be there for the short-sighted Indians to worship. But if we are real lovers of our country or even of the community to which we may happen to belong, we must all steadily keep in view and observe the ideal of a secular, non-caste Democracy; and not merely do lip-service to it and surrender every time to 'hard facts' as a 'practical' step. It is to that star that we must hitch our waggon of any temporary make-shift 'constitution,' if there is bound to be one in the immediate future. It is due to the non-recognition of that principle and failure to embody some adequate expression of it in the Lucknow Pact, that the appetite for communal representation has been growing by what it is feeding on,—despite the fact that some vague lip-service was done at the time to the mantram that communal representation was a necessary evil. (I believe, even that is not in the Pact in black and white.) If it was an evil and yet a necessity, some safe-guard ought to have been provided in the Pact itself automatically to check any further infection,—in the form (say) of some time-limit for its operation and a clear definition of its scope, i. e., the institutions to which alone communal representation was to apply. But as Infatuation would have it, nothing of the sort was done then,—not to speak of the irrational dichotomy of the nation into Mahomedan and Non-Mahomedan, and the further anomaly of a presumably 'national' body like the Congress reducing itself to a Hindu or rather 'non-Mahomedan' body by entering into negotiation with an avowedly sectional body like the Moslem League to the end of formulating a 'national' Pact!

'A Declaration on Swaraj.'

But be that as it may, I am sincerely glad that though Mr. Jinnah 'the Hind-Muslim ambassador' has failed us, his younger lieutenant, not yet sophisticated like his chief by responsibilities incurred towards sectarian electorates for a seat in one of our 'legislatures,' has boldly come forward and made a genuine effort to look at the communal question from a rational and national stand-point, instead of from the mere Moslem-League stand-point, its Secretary though he is. From that stand-point he has only to view the question a little closer, bearing in mind the considerations I have ventured to place before your readers,—before he will subscribe to some such 'Declaration on Swaraj' as that to which the present writer recently succeeded in pledging Mahatma Gandhi unreservedly. I appeal to him as to a 'younger brother'—not in age, perhaps, but as being a Muslim, one of those whom he loves to call "the younger brethren' of the Hindus—to study the declaration which says: (Vide Young India, 20th August, 1925, p. 292).

"That the Swaraj you are immediately aiming at for "your country is a modern democratic raj or "government; that the State shall not take note "of men's religious beliefs; that there shall be 'no "compulsion in religion'; that no one shall be "debarred from doing anything or going "anywhere merely because of his or her birth (as "an 'untouchable', 'unapproachable', 'unseeable', "or 'unhearable'); and that EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY "TO ALL shall be the motto of the State, including as "a necessary corollary the policy of special encouragement to the poor and the backward of all "creeds and communities in accordance with their "needs and in proportion to their poverty and "backwardness—the manner and the degree of the "encouragement to be judged on the merits of each "individual case and not by the accident of birth "or the fact of creed alone or at all, or in short "that a 'free field' to every citizen in his or her "life—and no favour nor handicap by reason of "birth or creed—shall be the immutable rule for "the State in every department to follow."

That seems to me to be the only way in which communal unity can be achieved and maintained. The very idea of a Pact based on 'sacrifices' by a 'majority' to a 'minority' involves the spirit of bargain; whereas national unity must be cultivated for its own sake, if it is to be permanent. Pacts may produce ententes, but not unity. The unity that is bought or is sought to be bought by bribes will end in disunity and disaster. It is the suicidal spirit in any community that makes it think that its political support is a thing to be sold to the highest bidder—

whether to an alien despotism or to a supposed national majority. Political unity of all the several communities to be permanent must be effected by each community with all the others only on the understanding that the unity is in its own interest (in its real long-sighted sense)—and not that it is a favour or concession on its part to the others. It is the spirit of bargain that evidently caused 'a distinguished Musalman countryman' to put the question to Mahatmaji the other day: "You insist continuously upon Hindu-Muslim unity, will you please point out anything concrete you have done for Islam or Musalmans?" (Young India, 9-7'25. p. 237.)

There is the spirit of the Lucknow Pact incarnate!

A Remedy in "P. R."

As for representation on legislative and other bodies, there is a scientific system of voting known as "P. R.", which in one form is prescribed for our Council of State elections and in another form is adopted by some of the foremost democratic assemblies in the world, e. g., the Irish Dail. It is a method of voting calculated to secure as accurate a reflection of all shades of opinion in a constituency as any yet devised. Its adoption in India for all elections wherein communal sentiment is likely to play any part may be depended upon to give all the security that avowedly separatist methods like communal electorates and even reservation of seats are thought to give, and that without the jar and "the stewing in one's own juice" which purely communal methods result in. Briefly,—this system requires the constituencies to be all plural-member constituencies, but each voter has a single vote which he can so record as to indicate an order of preferences amongst the several candidates, and the method of 'counting' or computation of votes by the returning-officer is based on a proportional "transfer" of the votes in excess of his quota from one candidate to another, so that no votes are wasted by excessive accumulation on one or more of the candidates and thereby no minority party, whether communal or political, can fail to secure a representation adequate to its strength in the constituency,—whether the strength be its own or what comes to it through the secondary sympathies of voters of other parties which it can command and mobilise in its favour. Dr. Paranjpye, the Bombay ex-Minister, has been for many years past a great advocate of this method, which he offered as one solution to the communal problem in his presidential address to the last year's Liberal Conference at Lucknow.

If there is to be a national Pact, let it be on the lines of the above Declaration, plus the prescription of "P. R." for elections.

The Horrible Alternatives.

Well, what are the alternatives to the Swaraj as conceived in the above scheme? Communal representation like caste is a relic of medieval and ancient Theocracy. If we of the 20th century are not prepared once for all to bid good-bye to all theocratic notions in our public life, let us not talk of Swaraj; but let us be content with our King Log of a wooden Bureaucracy, lest in our attempt to replace it we be overwhelmed by the King Stork of a live Theocracy with Jezya and Sangsari in its train, or a Ramarajya wherein all the untouchable Shudras shall be "Shambukized"!

CALCUTTA LETTER.

(From our Correspondent).

On Monday last a deputation of nine Mu[illegible] requested the Mayor of Calcutta to rescind the resolution of the Corporation that the body of the alleged saint buried in the New Market should be exhumed. The period of grace given by the Corporation for the Moslems to take steps to exhume the body expires by October 15th. Councillor Abdur Razak has already given notice of a motion recommending the rescission of the clause of the resolution authorising the Chief Executive Officer to remove the body. The Mayor said that he had power to give facilities for its discussion at the meeting of the Corporation on October 21st, but that he had no authority to revoke or rescind any resolution of the Corporation. It is nearly a year since the burial took place and we trust party-interests will not interfere in this matter concerning the sanitation of the premier market of the city.

Rev. W Paton, Secretary, National Christian Council of India, Burma and Ceylon, addressed the Calcutta Rotary club on Tuesday last on "India and the opium problem." He said that India is the greatest exporter of opium in the world and that nowhere except in India has an official defence of a non-medical use of opium been offered. The League of Nations has suggested as a suitable figure for opium consumption, in a country which has a medical service, 6 seers per 10,000 of the population per annum. There are certain regions in India notable for the great excess they present, viz., Burma, where the average is nearly 29 seers per 10,000 per annum and where individual districts rise as high as 65, 109 and 147; the Assam Valley where the figure rises as high as 237 in one district; Balasore and Puri districts of Orissa, where the figures are 55 and 30; the Godavari and Ganjam districts of Madras, where the figures are 67 and 22; the Panch Mahal, Broach and other Gujerat Districts of Bombay where the figures are 62, 51, and thereabouts; Sind where the figures rise to 44, 50, and above; the Central Punjab and the industrial sections of India 60, Calcutta, 144, Bombay 43, Cawnpore 29 and the Berars 30. The lecturer continued that since opium leads to a certain moral degeneration and to moral unreliability, the opium habit is a definite source of weakness to India, and efforts must be made (1) to reduce export to a point where nothing is exported except for medical and scientific purposes and (2) to reduce the excessive consumption in areas noted above by drastic measures and to bring it to the normal figure. In this connection, attention may be drawn to the article 'Opium consumption in Assam' by Mr. C. F. Andrews published in these columns on the 3rd October, 1925.

BRAHMINS AND NON-BRAHMINS IN BENGAL.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Bengal is now divided among three different communities, who are enemies to each other. The first two of these are commonly known by the name of Hindus.

Two thousand years have not sufficed to blend the blood of the Brahmins and the non-Brahmins or to unite, by common language and mutual interest, two hostile races, one of which still feels the elevation of triumph and the other groans under all the consequences of defeat. Power had been completely placed in the hands of the Brahmins by the great event of the defeat of the Kshatriyas by Parasurama.

Although no great historical events, such as war or insurrection, mark the existence of the non-Brahmins as a separate people, subsequent to the period of the establishment of caste-institution in India, yet the great national distinction between them and their Brahmin conquerors continues down to our times to keep open the wound which the Brahmins had inflicted to maintain a line of separation between the descendants of the victorious Brahmins and the vanquished Sudras.

Even the distinction between these two communities was by no means effaced when the Musalman conquest prostrated them both in common slavery and degradation.

THE SOCIAL SERVICE LEAGUE, BOMBAY.

Thirteenth Annual Report.

The work of the Social Service League, Bombay, is carried on at four centres, viz., the Head Office at Girgaum, the Parel Settlement at Chinchpokli, the Working Men's Institute at Poibavdi and the Madanpura Settlement at Madanpura, the last being meant for the benefit of Mahomedan working classes in the neighbourhood of Byculla. The following is a brief summary of the work done at these centres during the year 1924 :

Night Schools.

At the end of the year, the League had under its management 9 night schools, out of which six (4 Anglo-Urdu-Gujerati, Anglo-Gujerati and Anglo-Marathi) are primary schools and 3 English schools of which one is a high school. The total number of students that received the benefit of instruction at these schools during the year under report was 404 with an average daily attendance of 324 students. In some of these night schools, Boys' Clubs have been organised, the object being to infuse in them, by means of lectures, debates, gatherings and other functions, a spirit of mutual good-will and comradeship, as well as to enable them to develop their elocutionary powers.

Textile Technical School.

With the object of training workmen employed in textile mills and increasing their efficiency, the League started a textile technical school in connection with its Workmen's Institute at Parel, in July 1924. At present only night-classes are held and instruction is imparted according to a syllabus approved by a Committee of experts in spinning and weaving. The instruction is both theoretical and practical. Recently the first year's students were examined and the results were quite satisfactory. At present the number of students on the roll is 33.

Class for Women.

Through the Mahila Mandal or the Women's Branch of the League, various classes are held for women. The sewing and cutting classes started in 1922 showed a steady progress and 56 women took advantage of it during the year under report. Also First Aid and Home Nursing Classes are held from time to time for women at Parel. A Maternity and Hygiene Class was held for women at Angre's Wadi, Girgaum, during the year under report.

Libraries and Free Reading Rooms.

The League maintains 5 libraries and reading rooms at different centres in addition to the travelling libraries. The library at the League's head office consists exclusively of books on social and labour problems. The travelling library is one of the earliest activities of the League and constitutes a special feature of the League's educational work. This library consists of boxes containing 75 to 100 books each, placed in a certain locality in charge of some responsible man residing there who volunteers his services as an honorary librarian and distributes the books among his neighbours or, if he is a Secretary of a co-operative society, or a teacher in a night school, among the members of the society or the people in the locality as the case may be, and after a period of two or three months, returns the box and gets it replaced by another containing another set of books. In this way the library is taken to the very doors of the people, many of whom are not otherwise likely to take interest in books. The League's travelling library is divided into Marathi, Gujerati and Urdu sections. During the year under report 17 centres in different localities were served with books and about 900 people took advantage of this arrangement.

Magic Lantern Lectures.

During the year under report 44 lantern lectures were delivered for the benefit of different classes of people in various localities, the subject being "Co-operative Societies", "Sanitation", "Infant Welfare and Maternity Care", "Human Physiology", "Tuberculosis", "Malaria", "Dental Hygiene", "Temperance", etc.

Boy Scouts.

There were at the end of the year under report 48 Scouts and 20 cubs in the Social Service League Boy Scouts Troops, otherwise known as 31st Bombay Boy Scout Troop. Parades, drill and games are held weekly and the patrol classes twice a week. The Scouts took part in several scout functions and worked as volunteers at some public meetings and conferences.

Charitable Dispensary for Women and Children.

The League maintains a dispensary called Bai Bachubai Charitable Dispensary for women and children at the Working Men's Institute at Parel. It is in the charge of a lady doctor. During the year under report 16,739 patients (8,481 women and 8,258 children) were treated at this dispensary and on behalf of the Arya Mahila Samaj, 73 maunds and 8 seers of milk were supplied to needy women and children as recommended by the lady doctor. Also 1962 patients were given free prescriptions by a doctor at the Madanpura Settlement. At the Homoeopathic Charitable Dispensary at Byculla 3,401 patients were treated. Since the end of the year, however, this dispensary is no longer connected with the League.

Sanitation Rounds.

With a view to improving the condition of the slums and exposing and checking insanitary conditions obtaining in the different localities of the city, the League arranges sanitation rounds in the different wards. During the year under report 17 such rounds were arranged. In addition to these rounds, the several centres of the League devote particular attention to the work of improving sanitation in chawls and localities. Several magic lantern lectures were delivered in chawls and about 375 complaints and representations were addressed to the proper authorities. The Miss Florence Nightingale Village Sanitation Fund is also administered by the League. During the year under report four villages were paid Rs. 50 each on their under-

SUPPLEMENT

The Indian Social Reformer.

No. 8. BOMBAY—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1925. Price One Anna.

INDIA'S PROTEST AGAINST THE ANTI-INDIAN BILL IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The public demonstrations held in all parts of the country on the 11th instant—the day set apart for the purpose by the All-India Congress Committee—against the inhuman anti-Indian Bill introduced by Dr. Malan, the Minister of the Interior, in the South African Parliament, cannot but arrest the attention of the civilized world against the racial arrogance of the South African Whites whose relentless persecution of our countrymen in that colony has reached the climax. The differences that exist between the various parties and communities in the country were all forgotten on Sunday last when all public bodies and individuals, irrespective of colour, creed or political conviction, participated in the demonstrations, and it was a united India's emphatic protest against the Malan legislation that was recorded on that day from a hundred platforms. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, the President of the South African Indian Congress and the President-elect of the Indian National Congress to be held at Cawnpore, in the course of an appeal to all public bodies and individuals throughout the country to participate in the demonstrations, made a special appeal to Europeans and Indian Christians. "My appeal", she concluded, "is especially addressed to European and Indian Christian population whose peculiar duty and responsibility it is to protect from the menace of such destructive legislation the integrity of their traditional Christian ideals of equity and justice and the sanctity of the Asiatic Christ." We are grateful for the response made by the Most Rev. the Metropolitan of India, the Chairman of the National Christian Council of India, Burma and Ceylon, who in a public manifesto which we print elsewhere, called upon all Christians to participate in the demonstrations. It was the true Christian spirit that prompted his lordship to make such a generous response, and it has a special significance when it is remembered that the sponsor of the un-Christian measure against which the Metropolitan and other Christian leaders have called upon Christians throughout the country to join in the nation's protest, is himself one who, in his private life, is a Minister of the Christian Church. That the Rev. Dr. Malan happened to be the sponsor of such a notorious un-Christian piece of legislation is indeed a tragedy, and is calculated to deal a death-blow to Christianity in South Africa.

At a huge mass meeting held in Bombay on the Chowpathy sands under the joint auspices of the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee, Swaraj Sabha, Central Khilafat Committee, Bombay Muslim League, Parsi Rajkiya Sabha, Rashtriya Stri Sabha, Bombay Nationalist Municipal Party, Bombay National Union, Bombay Shroff Association, Bombay Share and Stock Brokers' Association, and several other public bodies representing all communities, interests and political opinions, with Mrs. Sarojini Naidu in the chair, the following resolution moved by Mr. Bhulabhai J. Desai was unanimously passed :

That this meeting of the citizens of Bombay representing all communities, interests and political opinions emphatically condemns the monstrous and inhuman anti-Indian legislation based on race arrogance and economic rivalry enacted by the Union Government of South Africa which is a flagrant breach of their own solemn pledges and seeks deliberately to coerce the Indian settlers to leave the country by imposing upon them conditions of intolerable material and moral hardship and humiliations. This meeting offers to the Indian community in South Africa its deepest sympathy in their valiant struggle to vindicate their fundamental rights as colonials and calls upon all political organisations and all lovers of freedom and justice everywhere to devise effective measures to prevent the perpetuation of so gross a wrong against humanity.

Similar demonstrations were held in Calcutta, Madras, Lahore, Delhi, Allahabad, Nagpur, Patna, Poona, Hyderabad (Sind), Yeotmal, Karachi, Rangoon and all other important towns where resolutions on the same lines were passed. The speakers representing every community and interest dwelt at length on the injustice involved in the Anti-Indian Bill and demanded that His Majesty's Government should veto it. It is gratifying that even Anglo-Indian journals were as emphatic in their condemnation of the anti-Indian activities of the Union Government as their Indian contemporaries. Speaking at the public meeting in Bombay, Mr. John Turner, an Englishman, emphatically declared that "if there was any truth in the British Commonwealth, if Indians left India to go to any other part of the Dominions, they must be treated on terms of equality."

We do not wish to deal with the Bill as we have already dealt with it in the last two issues of the Supplement. Mr. S. A. Waiz, the Secretary of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association of Bombay, has again dealt with the subject in his article which we print today. India has demonstrated in unmistakable terms her deep sense of indignation at the systematic oppression and cruelties to which our countrymen are subjected at the hands of the Union Government. It will be a source of comfort to our struggling countrymen in South Africa to know that the people of this country as one man sympathise with them in their present plight and that they are determined to leave no stone unturned

to make the Union Government retrace their steps. But our countrymen abroad must also know our limitations. As speaker after speaker pointed out at the public meeting last Sunday, we must be free in our land in order to be in a position to help our countrymen abroad. Stateless persons as we are at present, we are to face the sufferings with calm and courage and with hopes of a better future. The nervousness of the Government of India in taking a bolder attitude in their dealings with the Union Government is not, however, incomprehensible. The consciousness of their being but a subordinate branch of the British Government, is what really weighs with the Government of India, and it has been made abundantly clear in spite of all scrupulous regard to maintain their high prestige.

Mr. Theo H. Thorne, an English correspondent, writing to the Forward of Calcutta, has suggested several ways of retaliation. These are: "All South African coal should have a heavy penalizing duty placed on it. All ships coming into Indian harbours with African goods should have placed on them penal port charges. All ships that enter Indian ports having called at a South African port in the course of their journey, should have heavy extra port dues charged. In other words, India must retaliate by worrying the trade of South Africa and those who are engaged in trading with her." Speakers at public meetings held on Sunday last also suggested retaliation as a fitting reply to the Union Government. The Government of India do not, apparently, like this idea. They have not given effect to the non-official resolution to this effect. Curiously enough, Mahatma Gandhi also thinks that retaliation will be no remedy. Mahatmaji's statement on the subject is couched in a tone entirely different from that of a non-co-operator, for he requests the Government of India to apply diplomatic pressure successfully as did Lord Hardinge. Writes Mahatma Gandhi:

> Happily the question of British Indians in South Africa is not a party question. India must be able to avert the calamity that threatens to overtake our countrymen in that Sub-Continent. The proposed legislation is a manifest breach of the Settlement of 1914. My experience of the Indian question in South Africa is one of a series of breaches of promises and declarations which have been proved from official records. The proposed legislation is in effect a confiscation of almost every right that the British Indians possess. Their sole crime consists in being good traders and not being Europeans. There can be no compromise in this matter—no repatriation even when euphemistically described as voluntary. Let me, however, say that retaliation will be no remedy if only because there can be no effective retaliation. The only remedy is diplomatic pressure. Lord Hardinge applied it successfully. Will the present Government repeat the performance?

As Mr. Waiz suggests in his article, much can be done by bringing pressure of the Dominion Governments and the British public opinion to bear on the Union Government. There is no better field than South Africa for those who are anxious to solve the race problem. Lord Willingdon made the bold declaration the other day at the Church Congress at Eastbourne that it was imperative that the problem should be solved by peaceful methods and not by the clash of races, which would be the ghastliest tragedy the world has ever known. "The only practical solution", said the ex-Governor of two Indian provinces, "was to treat the coloured people in a spirit of absolute equality with the whites, if we wished to continue our associations with, and influence over, countries which whites developed. It must be by not arrogating to ourselves any race superiority."

It is for the Government of India and the Union Government to ponder over these wise words of one who had considerable administrative experience in a country where the race problem still dominates everything else. If the British Government care to listen to advice emanating from sources such as these, we are sure they will not allow a measure such as the one introduced by Dr. Malan in the Union Parliament, a measure which is an embodiment of racial iniquity, to find a place in any civilised Government's statute book. We trust that His Majesty's Government will be prevailed upon to prevent the Bill from finding a place in the statute book, and we trust that Lord Willingdon and others will endeavour, by putting their professions into practice, to bring about this end.

INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

(By Mr. S. A. Waiz.)

The most influential deputation which was composed of leading Indians and Englishmen representing various interests in the country which waited upon the Viceroy in the beginning of this year, coincided with the assent of the Governor-General-in-Council to the Ordinance depriving Indians in Natal of the Municipal franchise. The Viceroy counselled patience and calm-headedness. The country responded to it to a remarkable degree by not indulging in any kind of excesses. The exponents of public opinion afforded a free hand to the Government of India to come to honourable terms with the Union Government. While great hopes were being entertained, we were presented with another anti-Asiatic legislation in the form of the Colour Bar Bill, which restricts the employment of skilled Indians in certain occupations. The mighty Government of India was believed to be strong enough to handle the situation in a way which was calculated to be to our advantage. Official negotiations were ceaselessly going on. Sir B. N. Sarma, it was said, was passing sleepless nights. But the Class Areas Bill segregating Indians throughout the Union was announced to have been introduced in the Union Assembly as a Government measure. Why Lord Reading and his "patriotic" lieutenant were unable to prevent the passage of this anti-Asiatic legislation, the country is not told. Sir Fazal Hussein, the temporary member in charge of the Education Department of the Government of India, is new and quite unfamiliar with the ways of the wily Dutch of

South Africa. He is on the horns of an inexplicable dilemma. He told the Council of State that the Class Areas Bill came as a "bombshell" on the Government of India. Why cannot he with the backing of the Viceroy "bombard" Hertzog's Government by way of reprisal by openly declaring that India, as an equal partner in the British Commonwealth of Nations, cannot contemplate with equanimity these anti-Indian measures? The gallant knight of Shahpur said that South African Indians should return to India, if they were treated inhumanly. The Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, however, in a recent communication to the Government of India, have made it quite clear that the country will not accept any settlement based on repatriation.

The Congress fixed the 11th of October 1925 as a day to express the nation's indignation at the inequitable policy of the Government of South Africa. To this the National Missionary Council with the Metropolitan of India at its head, and which represents almost all the Protestant Churches in India, lent its moral support and invited Christians all over the country to observe the day fixed by the Congress as a day of prayer on behalf of Indians in South Africa. Meetings of protest in this connection were held all over the country.

An Indian deputation from South Africa will shortly come out to India to wait on His Excellency the Viceroy. It is feared that unless the deputation represents all sections of Indian opinion in South Africa, it will have no support from the Motherland and will therefore be a failure. The promoters of this deputation in South Africa have already been warned to this effect. But what is the use of these deputations? They cannot tell the Viceroy more than what he already knows, and I daresay he knows more than the members of the deputation. It will be a mere waste of time, money and energy.

It is said that the South African Dutch is very religious and respects his Bible very much. May be; but their deeds are not indicative of their religious tendencies. Perhaps they are ante-diluvian enough to believe both in God and big guns. Can India change its creed? It is a matter of opinion; but personally I am inclined to think that unless General Birdwood exhibits a few tricks of the sharp edge of his sword, the South Africans will only stick to their guns and will conveniently forget their God. Whatever is possible under the circumstances is being done by India to help Indians in South Africa, but the end of their trouble is not yet in sight. I wish that the Archbishop of Canterbury would emulate the example of the National Missionary Council of India and, along with his desire to protect the Christians of Bhagdad, he would champion the cause of Indian Christians and Indians in general in South Africa. It will be a much easier task for him and perhaps more within his jurisdiction. The people of one part of the Empire are being subjected to inhuman treatment and the Archbishop as the head of the Established Church of England will not only earn the gratitude of "ancient and dignified people of India," but will be rendering an invaluable service towards the stability of the Empire which is nearest to his heart. Instead of appealing to the League of Nations, His grace can invite the co-operation of all the self-governing dominions so that pressure might be brought to bear upon South Africa to stop the inhuman legislation, and, not only that, but make them realise that they are Christians. It would be interesting to know the verdict of Indians on the situation. They say that Christ as an Asiatic will not be allowed to land in South Africa as a free man, but might be taken there under indenture, and, after he has healed the sick, cured the lepers, restored eyesight to the blind, "and converted a howling wilderness into a land of milk and honey". He would be either asked to go back to His own country or they would take Him to the Calvary (Class Areas) and would crucify Him there!! Will the Christians all over the Empire give their earnest consideration to these thoughts? The attitude of the South African Government is not only insulting to God but a deliberate attempt to hinder the efforts of Christian Missionaries in the East, and is certainly a foolish policy, which might break the solidarity of the British Commonwealth of Nations.

THE SOUTH AFRICA DAY.

METROPOLITAN'S APPEAL TO CHRISTIANS.

The following statement has been issued over the signatures of the Most Rev. the Metropolitan of India, Chairman; Dr. S. K. Datta, Vice-Chairman; the Rev. W. Paton and Mr. P. O. Phillip, Secretaries of the National Christian Council of India, Burma and Ceylon:

Sunday, October 11th, is to be widely observed as a day for the expression of national sympathy with the Indians of South Africa.

We believe that if the present (so-called) Asiatic Bill is passed, large number of Indians, born in South Africa, will be compulsorily repatriated, and that the conditions of life and work for most of those who remain will be nearly intolerable. Violent feeling has been aroused on both sides by the legislation now under discussion, and while some European Christians have supported the Indian claims, it is apparently certain that a determination exists on the part of the majority of Europeans, particularly in Natal, to press through to its consummation a policy for which they do not claim any moral defence. The resources of statesmanship are not yet exhausted, but those who are striving for a just settlement are faced by a condition of passion and enmity in which no progress can be made without a change of will and heart.

We, therefore, on behalf of the National Christian Council of India, Burma, and Ceylon, invite Christian people to prayer on Sunday next, October 11th, for the Indian community, the European community, and the Government and Legislative Chambers of South Africa, that a way may be opened up to a settlement on the basis of justice and right.

NATAL'S PROTEST AGAINST THE ASIATIC BILL.

Natal had never witnessed in the annals of its history anything like the monster mass meeting of Natal Indians that was held in Durban on the 31st August, under the auspices of the Natal Indian Congress, to protest against the Asiatic Bill. There was a very large attendance and the meeting was representative of all sections of the community. Mr. Amod Bayat, President of the Natal Indian Congress, was in the chair. The President in the course of his speech vigorously denouncing the segregation policy of the Government characterised the attitude of the Minister of the Interior as illogical. In the end, he implored his fellowmen not to indulge in any wild or extravagant language and to adopt a calm and dignified attitude and show the Government that their objections are based on equity and justice. The European community was represented by Mr. A. Laughton and the Rev. A. Lamont who also denounced the Bill in strong terms. The Rev. J. L. Dube as representing the natives also spoke on the occasion. The following were the resolutions passed: (1) That this Mass Meeting of Natal

Indians assembled in the Durban Town Hall, under the auspices of the Natal Indian Congress, hereby places on record its emphatic protest against the Areas Reservation and Immigration and Registration (Further Provision) Bill now before Parliament which has for its object our compulsory segregation, the deprivation of our proprietory and trading rights, further restriction of our domiciliary rights and the ultimate extinction of the Indian community as openly declared by the Minister of the Interior, inasmuch as it is contrary to all known laws of equity and justice. (2) That this Meeting of Natal Indians affirms the suggestion submitted by the South African Indian Congress for a Round Table Conference as the only solution for a settlement of the Indian question, and requests the said South African Indian Congress to again make representations to the Union Government with a view to bring about the Conference of representatives of India, England and South Africa.

INDIAN LABOUR IN CEYLON.

The Hindu of Madras writes:—Commenting on the report of the Controller of Indian Emigrant Labour in Ceylon the other day, we questioned the validity of the claim made therein that the labour conditions in the estates were attractive and that the Colony had won a good name as an employer of labour. We then pointed out in support of our contention to the low average of the wages paid to the labourer. The propagandist nature of the report and the several inaccuracies therein are clearly exposed in a string of interpellations asked in the recent session of the Ceylon Legislative Council by the Hon. Mr. S. R. Mahomed Sultan. The member agrees with us in holding that the average wage is very low on all computations and the chances of saving very few and contests the truth of the statement in the report about "attractive conditions." He also asks how the Controller made his surmise that economic conditions in S. India provide a desirable alternative in Ceylon for the labourer and what justification there is for the statement that the Colony has established a good name as an employer of labour in view of the increasing number of destitute Indian immigrants as professional beggers in big towns as Colombo, the large number of slum inhabitants of Kochikade and Wolvendal, mostly ex-indentured Indian estate labourers, and the ever-increasing number of Indian labourers drifting form the estate zone to Colombo every year, swelling up the ranks of rick-shaw pullers in Colombo." This part of the question the Colonial Secretary, we find, answers in the following terms:

The statements relating to economic conditions in India are supported by reports of officials of the Government of Madras. The remainder of this part of the question asks for an expression of opinion based on statements of which Government does not admit the accuracy.

The latter part of the answer is quite characteristic of the way in which the bureaucracy usually disposes of such inconvenient questions in order to shield their blundering officials in the false positions they take up even in the face of evident facts. As regards the reports of officials of the Government of Madras, to which the answer refers, we wonder if the reports themselves declared Ceylon as a desirable alternative to S. India, as the Colonial Secretary would desire to make out. The Hon. Member asked also other questions on the exact state of affairs in the estates in regard to education, housing, drink, health or the labourers, and infant mortality. It is something to note that the Government did not dispose of these questions in a summary fashion but promised to consider some of them at least in drafting the future reports.

INDIANS ABROAD: SOME CENSUS FIGURES.

The following is that portion of the article contributed by Mr. J. B. Sen in a recent issue of the Servant of India which relates to Indians in Fiji. In our Overseas Supplement for September we published that portion of the article relating to British Guiana.

FIJI.

The area of Fiji, including Retuma, is 7,083 sq. miles. The total population increased from 139,541 in 1911 to 157,266 in 1921, an increase of 12·70 per cent. The Indian population during the same period increased from 40,286 to 60,634, an increase of 50·51 per cent. Of the total Indian population 26,810 (44·22 per cent). were born in Fiji. The birth and death rates in 1920 were 35·96 and 6·51 per mille respectively. The Indians born in Fiji have more than doubled their number during the last decade as shown by the following table:

| Intercensal Period | Total Ind. Population. | Fiji-born Ind. | Per cent |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1901-1911 | 40,284 | 11,069 | 27·48 |
| 1911-1921 | 60,634 | 26,810 | 44·22 |

| | 1911 | | 1921 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Males | Females | Males | Females |
| Indian Immigrants | 64·70 | 35·30 | 68·95 | 31·05 |
| Indian Fiji-born | | | 51·06 | 48·94 |

The following table shows the conjugal condition of the Indian population among persons of over 15 years of age:

| | Married | | Unmarried | | Total | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | M. | F. | M. | F. | M. | F. |
| Immigrant | 11,402 | 8,519 | 9,583 | 1,026 | 22,606 | 9,886 |
| Fiji-born | 1,095 | 2,011 | 1,229 | 378 | 2,334 | 2,474 |

Of the total Indian population 52, 912 are Hindus, 6,442 are Mahomedans, 710 are Christians and 570 are Parsis, Buddhists, etc. The following table gives the literacy position, children under 15 being excluded:—

Proportion per cent. of the total returned as literate.

| | Males | Females |
|---|---|---|
| 1921 ... ... | 38·50 | 2·50 |
| 1911 ... ... | 13·64 | 1·74 |

The improvement in literacy among Indians during the decade is noticeable and satisfactory. The following is the occupation census of Indians in Fiji:—

|---|---|
| Agriculturists and cultivators ... | 14,283 |
| Agricultural labourers ... ... | 4,130 |
| Engaged in commerce ... ... | 854 |
| Engaged in industry ... ... | 3,179 |
| Industrial labourers ... ... ... | 1,115 |
| Clerks and interpreters ... ... | 54 |
| Mission students, school and mission teachers ... ... ... | 91 |
| Constables and warders ... ... | 88 |

The higher professions and civil service are completely monopolized by Europeans. The Fiji Legislative Council consists of the Governor, 12 nominated members (one Indian) and seven members elected by persons of European descent whose number is only 3,848 in the colony, and two nominated Fijian members. The Council has recently agreed to have two elected Indian representatives to that body.

Mr. C. R. Naidu. Mr. C. R. Naidu, to whom financial help was rendered by the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association to go and investigate on the spot questions relating to repatriation of South African Indians and the reservation of Kenya lowlands, etc., was the recipient of an address and a purse of 1000 shillings from the Indian community of Daressalaam. Mr. Naidu thanked the Indians in Zanzibar for their kind hospitality showed to him during his stay there.

"Zanzibar Voice" on Anti-Asiatic Bill: Thus the Zanzibar Voice: "We have received a copy of the now notoriously known anti-Asiatic Bill passed by the Union Government along with its explanatory section from the Natal Indian Congress. We have no words to condemn the Bill sufficiently. From a place like this, we only remain content to hope that His Majesty's Government see that it is vetoed and that no action is allowed to be taken by any section of the Empire—howsoever proud or strong—which jeopardized the inter-empire harmony, or may we say in the end, is bound to upset the very solidarity of the Empire.

taking to improve their sanitation and to collect locally an equal amount.

Police Court Agent.

The League co-operates with the Bombay Presidency Released Prisoners' Aid Society, whose police court agent works under the guidance and supervision of the League. This Police Court Agent secures the benefit of Section 562 of the Criminal Procedure Code to first offenders, keeps in touch with them and endeavours to persuade them to lead an honest useful life. During the year under report he secured the release of 426 persons (225 Hindus, 153 Mohamedans, 44 Christians, 3 Parsis and 1 Chinaman) all of whom were first offenders. Twenty of them were women. Some of these persons were provided with food and clothing.

Prison Preaching.

Mr. L. E. Nayak, a member of the League's Managing Committee, visits the Umerkhadi Jail every Sunday morning and addresses the prisoners on pure and honest living. Every time about 250 criminals attend his lecture.

Co-operative Societies.

The League has till now organised over a hundred co-operative societies. Many of them are now working independently. At the end of the year under report the League had 44 societies under its supervision. Of these, 40 are credit societies, a Banking Union, a Thrift Society, Medical Relief Society and one Recreation Club. Thirteen new societies were organised during the year under report, four of which are meant for Municipal sweepers, in addition to four societies already working for the benefit of menial municipal employees. Over 40 societies are affiliated with the Banking Union. The membership of the 40 credit societies is 2,685 and Rs. 73,214 was advanced to members as loans.

Legal Advice.

Arrangements are made at the Working Men's Institute and the Parel Settlement to give free legal advice to the poor involved in legal difficulties. Also petitions, applications, complaints, representations etc., are written for them at a nominal fee. Since the Workman's Compensation Act came into force, the League has been helping workmen to obtain compensation due to them. Till the end of the year such help was given in 9 cases. This work is rapidly growing and the number of cases helped uptodate is 60 and the amount of compensation nearly Rs. 25,000.

Recreation for the working classes.

The League's programme of providing healthy recreation for the working classes consists in conducting Indian gymnasia called Akhadas, arranging theatrical performances at cheap rates and organising from time to time open air sports and fresh excursions. During the year under report there were two Akhadas, and upwards of 60 workmen on a daily average took advantage of them. More than half a dozen programmes of wrestling matches and gymnastic feats were arranged through these Akhadas. Three fresh air excursions were arranged during the year under report.

Propaganda work.

The League arranged during the year twelve public lectures on social subjects. An English quarterly called the "Social Service Quarterly" and a Marathi monthly called the "Samaj Sevak" are published by the League. Also, the League has published up till now 35 pamphlets and leaflets on different social questions. An information Bureau and a Register of Charities are maintained by the League. A "Directory of Social Institutions in India, outside Bombay" has been published and a separate Directory of social Institutions in Bombay City and suburbs will be shortly published.

Miscellaneous.

In response to the Government's request the League expressed its views sending memoranda with regard to seven items of proposed social and labour legislation. The workers of the League co-operated with other institutions in several activities like the Baby Week, relief to strikers' children, co-operative conference etc.

Financial Position and Immediate Needs.

The total receipts during the year amounted to Rs. 80,545-5-6 and the total payments to Rs. 81,603-15-3. Out of the balance of Rs. 27,456-3-10 only Rs. 5,156-8-10 is available for current expenditure the rest being locked up in Government Securities and the Reserve Fund. The League needs Rs. 50,000 for the Textile Technical School and for a shed for gymnasium etc., out of which at least Rs. 25,000 must be immediately found.

SUPPRESSION OF BROTHELS IN MADRAS.

Proposal For A New Bill

In a statement to the Associated Press, the Venerable Loasby, Arch-Deacon of Madras and President of the Madras Vigilance Association, who, during the past few weeks, assisted by a committee, has been engaged in the drafting of a bill for the suppression of immoral traffic in Madras, says:—

Recent happenings in the city of Madras have brought prominently before the public attention a new menace to our social life in the shape of brothels. Their danger to the public and the indescribable misery that is undergone by their inmates are not generally realised till our attention is drawn to them by some tragedy or crime. There is reason to believe that these resorts are more numerous than one would ordinarily guess and that they are extending their corrupting influence in more ways than one cares to contemplate. It is sinister to think that nearly 9,000 treatments for venereal diseases were given last year in the Civil hospital in Madras; this figure represents probably not more than one third of the volume of the disease among civilians and it takes no account of military statistics. Also the last census return [illegible] classifies as procurers and prostitutes in Madras city 911 p[illegible] and this is presumably in accord with their own statement. Further, brothels are becoming paying business concerns, systematising the [illegible] vice and maintaining a batch of depraved characters in the shape [illegible] procurers, importers and managers.

Duty of the Society

In these circumstances the duty of the public to safeguard social life and purity from this new encroachment has become clear. Now that we are coming to regard with increasing sanctity and appreciation human life in all grades and positions of society we see how sharp a contradiction is involved in permitting to grow unchecked a system under which the lives of hundreds of our sisters are wrecked and blighted in ministering to the passions of men and the cupidity of scheming adventurers. Not unnaturally, women themselves have awakened to the horrors involved in the condemnation of a section of their sex to a life of sin and shame.

Vigilance Association

Largely perhaps owing to their enterprise and initiative we have had of late several public meetings in the city in which this problem has been seriously discussed. The meeting in the Gokhale Hall under the chairmanship of Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Iyer, in which a number of ladies took part led by Miss Grey of the Women's Protection League, Chicago, is still fresh in our minds. Following upon that, meetings were held, in the Y.M.C.A. and the Servants of India Society Home, of some of the leading citizens of Madras of all classes and communities, at which measures that should be adopted to check this social evil were considered. As a result of these deliberations there has been organised the Madras Vigilance Association with an active, responsible and influential Executive Committee which is determined not to let the grass grow under its feet in its endeavours to put down this vice. Among the members of the Executive and other committees are Mrs. Jinarajadasa and Deaconess Creighton, Sir Sadasiva Iyer and Mr. B Venkatasubbaya (an Honorary Secretary of the Servants of India Society), Mr. V. Chakkarai, Mr. K. V. Sesha Iyengar, Mrs. Venkatasubba Rao, Mr. O. Kandasami Chetty, Mr. Hameed Khan, Dr. Raghavendra Rao, Mrs. Stafford (Honorary Secretary), Rev. A. F. Fox (an Hon. Secretary), Lt. Col. Woodcock, Commanding the Lancashire Fusiliers, Mrs. Cousins, Mr. N. Shivaraj and Prof. S. K. Yagnanarayana Iyer and several others.

Inadequacy of Law

The members of the various sub-committees have been meeting regularly and frequently and have carefully discussed the position in many of its aspects. It is not surprising that at the very outset they were confronted with the inadequacy of the existing law, contained in the Madras City Police Act of 1888, to deal with the new situation that has arisen as a result of the rapid increase of our urban population. Bombay, Calcutta and Rangoon have gone ahead in this matter. Each has a well-framed act for the punishment of men and women who traffic in vice and for the suppression of brothels. Some of them have attempted to reach private and individual prostitution also. Many of them possess rescue homes or places of suitable custody for receiving and maintaining innocent girls reclaimed from the clutches of brothel-keepers and their minions. Indeed it is difficult to conceive how any effective work can be done without adequate legislative aids for suppressing brothels and penalising the traffic in vice. Nor will any measure of legislation in this direction be really useful unless provision is made for dealing with reclaimed girls and women.

No Time to Lose

"Effort has therefore to be concentrated on these lines of activity. The need is urgent. Reform in this direction is overdue. How long are we in Madras going to lag behind Calcutta, Rangoon and Bombay? How long are we going to allow our unfortunate sisters to be enticed to and confined in dens of misery and shame? It is up to the enlightened and self-respecting public of Madras Presidency to hasten the passing of the necessary legislative enactments to save these unfortunate girls and give them an opportunity of becoming educated and useful members of the society and establish rescue homes for protection of society against the ravages of a social evil which is as insidious as it is powerful.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Mr. Jayakar's Advice to Sind Hindus: Presiding over the First Sind Hindu Provincial Conference at Hyderabad (Sind) on the 10th instant, Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Bar-at-Law, M. L. C., the leader of the Swaraj Party in the Bombay Legislative Council, delivered an extempore address in the course of which he asked Sindhi Hindus to correlate themselves with Hindu culture outside Sind by studying Sanskrit and becoming custodians of the Hindu culture and tradition. Without study of Sanskrit, continued Mr. Jayakar, the Hindu movement would not yield the best fruit. Being responsible for sixty per cent. of taxes in Sind the Hindus must be treated as the most important community filling the offices of Government. Being nine lakhs they were a most important minority. He advised the Hindu Sabha to start a Bureau of Information at Karachi or Hyderabad, to appoint at least one full-timed worker to keep the Bombay Council members fully informed about Sind affairs and to go to Bombay and Poona when the Council was in session to enlighten the members on all Sind topics. He promised all help to such a worker. He referred to the danger threatening the Monogamous Marriages Bill of Mr. Dargadas Advani by amendment in the Select Committee and asked the Hindus to agitate against it and support Mr. Dargadas. He pointed out the danger lurking in Mr. Noor Mahomed's Registration of Marriages Bill which might legalise the kidnapping of Hindu women by forced registrations. He exhorted the Hindus to lay deep the foundations of Hindu culture in Sind and to be careful not to develop sectarian narrow-mindedness which might destroy one of the best movements for Hindu regeneration and culture reconstruction.

New President of the Madras Legislative Council: His Excellency the Governor has approved of the election of Mr. M. Rathnaswamy as President of the Madras Legislative Council which was left vacant by the lamented death of Dewán Bahadur Swamikannu Pillai. It is significant that Mr. Rathnaswamy is also, like his predecessor, an Indian Christian Catholic. He was the first Indian Principal of the Pachaiyappa's College—a College to which non-caste Hindus are not admitted—and by his scholarship culture and ability he won great popularity. He was educated at Cambridge where he took his History Tripos and was also called to the bar (Greys Inn). On his return from England, he was appointed as Professor of History in the Baroda College from where in 1918 he went to Madras as Professor of History in the Pachaiyappa's College and was elevated to the Principalship in 1921. In view of the absence of any member of the Indian Christian community in the Madras Cabinet," Mr. Rathnaswamy's candidature had an overwhelming support from the party which dominates the Council at present. In spite of the disintegration which estranged some of the progressive elements from the "Justice" party, Mr. Rathnaswamy loyally stuck to the party and tried his best to bring about the much-needed reform working from within. The choice has evidently met with general approval.

Compulsory Education in U. P: The Government of the United Provinces have sanctioned the introduction during the current financial year of compulsory primary education for boys in Agra, Aligarh, Jhansi and Mattra Municipalities. The total number in the United Provinces of Municipalities to which compulsory primary education for boys will be enforced will thus be raised to 23.

Age of Consent Act: The Indian Penal Code (Amendment) Act, XXIX of 1925, popularly known as the Age of Consent Act, which received the assent of the Governor-General on 23rd September last, is promulgated for information in the Gazette of India of October 3, and has now come into force. The Act, it may be recalled, raises the age of consent from 12 to 14 in the case of girls not lawfully wedded and from 12 to 13 in the case of married girls. In the case of husband's contravening the provisions of the Act, the new amending Act fixes the punishment at two years' imprisonment, rigorous or simple, or fine or both

Communal Electorates: Time and again we have urged in these columns the abolition of communal electorates which only tend to perpetuate distrust and differences between the various communities. The Hon. Khan Bahadur Osman Saheb, Home Member, Madras, has given a brave and courageous lead in this respect to his fellow-religionists all over the country. Replying to the address presented by the Tanjore District Board, the Hon. Member said: "Ever since he began his non-official life he had come to every position he occupied by the door of election and he was convinced that mixed electorates were the best thing for us in this country. Thirteen years ago he contested a seat on the Madras Corporation against a prominent citizen of Madras; and though the constituency had a predominant number of Hindu electors, he was able to come at the top of the poll. He was convinced that if India is to progress towards her goal, as she certainly will, she must give the go-by to the communal electorate and trust the mixed electorates. What was wrong was that members of his community were shy and did not like to face a mixed electorate. But there was nothing that so helped in bringing about a spirit of co-operation, harmony and helpfulness among all the communities in this land as the general or the mixed electorate." We hope the Mahomedans will profit by these words of wisdom.

A Widow Re-marriage Conference: An Associated Press message says: A widow remarriage conference was held at Khankhava in the Jullundur District under the presidency of Swami Shradhanand. It was attended by about 2,000 delegates, including ladies from the principal villages and towns near Jullundur. In his presidential address the Swami detailed the ideal of marriage according to the Vedas and Shastras and dwelt upon the consequences of child marriage, which, he said, was responsible for the present degenerate condition of the Hindu community. The conference passed resolutions deprecating the marriage of males before 25 and girls before 16. Another resolution declared that no widower should marry a virgin nor should a widow marry a bachelor and that the marriage of a virgin widow should be celebrated in the same way as that of unmarried girls. The conference condemned the sale of young girls to aged widowers and others as being sinful and immoral. All the resolutions were supported by prominent leaders from various parts and they pledged themselves to see that they were put into practice. The proceedings of the conference concluded after a speech by Swami Shradhanand on the principles of Hindu Sangathan. He also spoke at [illegible] public meeting on the importance of Brahmacharya.

Patri Mahajan: The Patri Mahajan, at its meeting held on the 7th instant under the presidentship of Seth Nagindas Keshavji, passed resolutions putting on record its sense of deep grief at the kidnapping and subsequent murder of the only son of one poor Koli, Bhudar Popat, by name, recommending the Kolis and other inhabitants of Patri to patiently wait and have full faith in the investigation that is being carried on by the authorities, imploring all the inhabitants of Patri not to yield to rumours on this incident, and putting on record its sense of regret at the false and unworthy allegations contained in speeches and writings with reference to this incident.

Animal Sacrifice in Travancore: Last week we drew attention in a footnote to a statement made by our Travancore correspondent regarding slaughter of animals in Hindu temples. The following which we take from a certain West Coast paper, shows that the practice still exists in spite of the orders issued by the Maharanee Regent: "Reports having been received of some shepherds sacrificing animals near a small temple of Nagdungara hills in spite of the standing orders in the State prohibiting all slaughter of animals under the pretext of religion, an order has been issued by the Dewan of Travancore re-affirming the existing orders and directing immediate stoppage of slaughter. A warning has been added that an offence of the nature will in future be legally dealt with and punished."

A Moslem View of Broad-mindedness: "Mrs. Naidu's election to the Presidentship of the Congress," writes the Muslim Outlook, "is about the only sane thing the Congress has achieved this year. As we have already said Mrs. Naidu is almost the only Hindu politician of eminence who is consistently fair to Muslims and Islam. She has proved her broad-mindedness by permitting her son to embrace Islam and if only she would suppress the "society" tendencies of some of her Indian sisters, we would hail her as a model of wisdom. Writing in this vein reminds us that there may be other Hindus who are unprejudiced communally. We fancy Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru is one such—but he seems quite unable to exert any influence upon the Hindus." The italics are ours. We fancy our contemporary's ideas of "broad-mindedness" and "wisdom" will hardly find support from any other quarter. But, if this is the same paper which recently indulged in ridiculous effusions about establishing Muslim raj after British raj is over, then we have no reason to be shocked at its standard of "wisdom," "broad-mindedness," "fairness" etc.

"Communalism in our Public Life": A Correction: "A Rational Nationalist" the concluding part of whose article on "Communalism in Our Public Life" is published to-day, draws our attention to certain mistakes in the second part of his article which appeared last week. He writes: "In this week's portion of my article there is one really important misprint, where on p. 86, line 13, col. 1, 'Khoja' is printed for 'Khaja'. This is misleading, for a Khoja is not a Sunni. (You will also admit that in the sentence of the same para, 'we generally dismiss,' etc., by replacing my 'ignorant fossils' by the 'ultra-conservatives' of your own, you have only destroyed the point of the antithesis intended between 'ignorant fossils' and 'learned in their own way.')

NOTES

Political Castes: The supreme mistake of those who thought that they could rear a modern State on medieval foundations, is becoming manifest every day. The communalism in politics which we lament, is the natural consequence of communalism in social life. Men brought up in the closed compartments of communities, cannot think of a better use of political rights than to consolidate the influence and strength of their community against all others. The man is what his shraddha is, says the Gita. Where your treasure is, says the Bible, there will be your heart also. A person brought up in the thought that his first duty is to his community or caste, can be inured to the idea that there is a higher duty which he owes to the nation, and to humanity, only by a strict course of discipline calculated to wean him away from the lesser idea. Foreign rule has often provided that discipline, but when foreign rule seeks to strengthen itself by utilising the caste or communal sentiment, it ceases to function in the only beneficial manner which is possible to it and becomes an unmitigated evil. A new evil worse than communal politics is making itself manifest among us. Political parties are being organised on the lines of a religious sect or caste panchayat, where autocratic power is vested in one man or a small group of men whose decisions are sought to be enforced by pains and penalties associated with the process of excommunication. Intimidation, abuse, misrepresentation, are the methods which are applied to enforce what is called party discipline. It behoves every one who has fought against the intimidatory methods of the caste system, to wage uncompromising war against the new kind of terrorism that is sought to be imposed upon the community. What India lacks, which has brought her under foreign subjection, is respect for personality. It is absent most among Hindus, and hence Hindus at an early date passed under the domination of Islam which had it in a greater measure than Hinduism. But Islam too lost it, and Mahomedans and Hindus became subject to a race which had it in a greater measure than either of them. Even now when the spirit of nationalism is abroad, many Indians as individuals feel that Englishmen have greater respect for their personality than their own countrymen. So long as this feeling remains and is justified to any extent by facts, the position of the British in this country must continue to be that of arbiters.

The Crisis in the Swaraj Party: A serious crisis has arisen in the Swaraj Party owing to the acceptance by Mr. B. S. Tambe, a member of the Party, of a membership in the Executive Council of the Central Provinces and the Berars. Mr. Tambe sometime back was elected by the Swaraj Party members who are in a majority in the Legislative Council of that province, to the Presidentship of that body. The Party, however, has been refusing to accept Ministerships. In Bengal, where it was found impossible owing to the opposition of the Swarajists to have Ministers, the Transferred Departments were resumed by the Executive half of the Government which is administering them as before the reforms. In the Central Provinces, the new Governor, Sir Montagu Butler, in the hope probably of conciliating the Swarajists, has been holding out against a similar resumption of the Transferred subjects. Meanwhile the Indian member of his Executive Council is due to retire shortly, and His Excellency offered the succession to it to Mr Tambe who accepted the offer. Mr. Tambe, it should be remembered, was elected President of the Legislative Council by the vote of his fellow-Swarajists, and in accordance with the well-established parliamentary convention, had ceased to be a party politician. This convention was accepted and emphasised by Mr V. J. Patel recently on his election to the Presidentship of the Legislative Assembly. We agree with the objection that it is constitutionally improper that a President of the Legislative Assembly or Council, or a Minister, should regard the membership of the Executive Council as an office of greater influence, security or attraction. The constitutional methods by which such a contingency has been provided against in other countries, cannot all be adopted here. But a serious difference in respect of the emoluments could and should be avoided, and for this reason, we have never favoured the reduction of Ministers' salaries to a much lower level than those of members of the Executive Council. In the Central Provinces, the Swarajists, after electing Mr. Tambe to the Presidentship of the Legislative Council, deliberately reduced his salary to that of a senior Deputy Collector, which naturally he could not have regarded as an act prompted by the kindliest feelings towards himself, Swarajists are, no doubt, expected to be above considerations of salary, but if Mr. Tambe did not rise to the sublime level of his fellow-Swarajists, it is uncharitable to describe his conduct by opprobrious epithets. In our view, Mr Tambe's acceptance of the Executive Council membership is only a further step in the evolution, which has been so marked during the last few months, of the Swaraj Party from a non-co-operating into a co-operating political party. It is impossible not to be struck by the personal rancour in many of the attacks that are being made upon him for his supposed act of recusancy.

A Scheme of Mass Education: We have received a copy of Bulletin No. 1 of the Educational Committee of the Young Men's Indian Association, Nagpur, being the scheme of mass education as evolved by Mr. A. B. Mande, M.A., a young and enthusiastic graduate of an American University and a prominent member of the

Association. Unquestionably the greatest problem that awaits solution at present is that of mass illiteracy, and it is bound to grow in importance with every fresh transference of power from Government to the people. Unless every voter is made to recognise the value of his vote, the experiment of democracy will not prove a success The tragedy is that, in spite of 150 years of British rule in India, only a small percentage of people are able to read and write. Nor has the transference of the subject of Education to the control of Ministers in any way helped matters. It is, therefore, with pleasure that we welcome Mr. Mande's scheme as an earnest attempt in the right direction. The village communities of ancient India, panchayats as they were called, admirably fulfilled this purpose by ministering to all the needs of the people, social, economic and educational. But, the process of centralisation that followed the advent of British rule, destroyed all that remained of this precious institution. Mr. Gokhale's Elementary Education Bill introduced in the Imperial Legislative Council in 1911 was the first attempt at grappling with the problem of illiteracy. Later on, night schools came to be established to supplement Government's efforts in this direction. But all these have not had the desired effects, for the fact is, as Mr. Mande points out, that the present system of education is too much given to verbal memorization, and too much divorced from the realities of life to be of any use to the learner or to society at large. These defects, however, Mr. Mande's scheme tries to remedy. The principal features of his scheme are the spread of literacy as an essential equipment for a citizen in modern days, imparting to the people such information in hygiene and sanitation, in notions of civics, industrial appreciation and institutional life, as can help them in making suitable adjustments in life, giving to the people a kind of cultural education with a view to enable them to enjoy the beauty of life around them and participate in its various activities, and creating in them aptitudes and habits for social solidarity and a pride and a love of their profession The curriculum includes, in the main, three things, viz., literacy (reading and writing), computation and general information. The course is short, extending to six months, two hours daily in the evening. It is also very cheap since the average cost of complete education has been computed to be not more than Rs 6 per head. The scheme involves an initial cost of Rs 15,000. An experimental class conducted on these lines in the Central Jail at Nagpur, has proved thoroughly successful. We have no doubt that Mr. Mande's scheme will go a long way towards bringing education to the very doors of the illiterate, and we hope other parts of the country will also emulate the example.

Prof. Wadia on Secondary Education: The Presidential address which Prof. Wadia delivered to the Headmasters' and Teachers' Educational Conference held recently at Surat, contains important suggestions which our educational authorities will do well to adopt. Though Mr. Wadia confined himself to this Presidency, his remarks are equally applicable to the rest of the country also The fundamental defect of present-day secondary education is that students who pass the Matriculation are ill-equipped for their college career. Another thing that is often lost sight of is the distinction between those whose school-education is to be a stepping-stone to University education, and those for whom the school marks the close of their educational career. Professor Wadia, therefore, in the first place stresses the importance of differentiating between these two classes of students. The bifurcation of studies for these two different classes, which he next advocates, is only the logical corollary to the above. The course of studies for those who are preparing for entrance into life should be prolonged beyond the final or Matriculation standard by a year or two with a view to giving them a broader education of a cultural type, equipping them for the duties of citizenship. Prof. Wadia's remarks on th vernaculars are also worth noting. Though an undu emphasis on English to the neglect of the vernacular should be discouraged, there is no gainsaying the fact tha English must for long remain the medium of languag in our Universities, owing to its obvious advantages. Th Professor rightly insists that, while students preparing fo a college career should be examined in English, thos preparing for life should be taught and examined only i the vernacular. Even for the former class of pupils, th Professor advises that such subjects as History Geography, and the Sciences may be taught in th vernaculars, as the student often fails to obtain livin contact with the subject-matter of the study and get lost in the use of words and phrases of an abstrac character.

Tax on Gambling: We cannot congratulate th Bombay Legislative Council on its passing the Totalisato Betting Bill which came up before it last Wednesday We have on previous occasions recorded our emphatic protest against this immoral source of revenue which the Bombay Government propose to collect At a time when strenuous attempts should be made to abolish races which have been the means of bringing ruin upon many a poor family, it is nothing short of callous indifference to the well-being of the people on the par of the Government to bring in a Bill which will have the effect of legalising and stabilising a growing evil. Mr. A. N. Surve's remarks in his Minute of Dissent to the Select Committee's report are extremely relevant and forceful. Gambling in horse races in England is looked upon by public opinion neither as a sin nor as a crime nor even as a vice. Yet the Government there has sternly set its face against any revenue from this source, in spite of the vast sums of money that it will bring in. Contrast this with the attitude of the Bombay Government. In India, gambling is looked down upon not merely as a vice but also as a crime and as a sin and yet, the Government of Bombay does not scruple to bring in a Bill to tap this immoral and tainted source of revenue.

Prof. Cornelius in America: The Indian Daily Telegraph of Lucknow has, in a leading article under the apt heading "Lucknow Stirs America," which we reprint to-day, drawn public attention to the splendid service Professor Cornelius of the Lucknow University is doing in America. For the past eighteen months Prof. Cornelius has been treating his audiences to the ideals for which India stands in all branches of life, political, religious and social. Lucknow has indeed stirred America. Prof. Cornelius' activities have been for the most part connected with discussions in the Institute of Political Science in which eminent men from different parts of the world take part. We recently came across a New York paper containing Prof Cornelius' speech in one of such round table conferences. The redoubtable Mr. Lionel Curtis, whose views on India are not unfamiliar to us, was there to harp upon his pet theme of diarchy, but the Professor declared publicly that India should be made completely independent, if at all she is to make any lasting contribution to world culture. A prodigy from the West complained of the prevalence of corruption and jobbery in the East. But up rose the Professor and curtly replied: "When it comes to that, we are all heathen for the matter of that". The Professor also exposed the mission of the West to the East as nothing but a refined system of robbery, a statement to which the Christian Century, widely recognised as the most alert religious journal in America, has acknowledged its inability to reply. In view of the deliberate misrepresentations indulged in by interested parties in America about India and its aspirations, Prof. Cornelius is doing a great service to his country in availing himself of every opportunity to disabuse the minds of Americans who have been led to believe that India is a land of savages whom the white man is trying to civilize.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

CHURCH AND STATE IN INDIA.

In discussing the occasional communal quarrels in British India, reference has sometimes been made to the contrast presented by Indian States where such occurrences are or, to be more correct, were until recently, extremely uncommon. One plausible reason for the contrast alleged by British Indian apologists, is that in the States one of the two communities, most usually involved, occupies a position of such overwhelming political predominance that the other is cowed down into unquestioning submission. Neither the history of the past nor recent incidents in some Indian States, supports this theory which is evidently conceived as a compliment to the British Indian system. Hindus have risen against Mahomedan domination and Mahomedans against Hindu domination, whenever such domination became a menace to their religious freedom. The real reason of the almost total absence of communal conflicts in Indian States until recently, is quite different. It is the special doctrine of the relation between the State and religion, which, first evolved by the genius of the Hindu people, was accepted by subsequent rulers, whatever their race or creed, as a fundamental principle of administration in India. In Europe religious toleration, which is of less than a hundred years' growth, merely means the freedom from civil disabilities of those professing any particular religion. The State, except in England, has no connection with any religion. It may, as in France and Portugal and Soviet Russia, be even antagonistic to religion. But everywhere it takes no note of the religious opinions of its subjects, contenting itself with insisting on their keeping the peace with each other. This was also the policy followed by British rule in India until about the beginning of this century, and it worked fairly well on the whole. Certainly, conflicts between Hindus and Mahomedans were far fewer in the twenty years previous to the Minto-Morley Reforms than in the years subsequent to them. In these reforms a deliberate departure was made from the policy of religious neutrality for political reasons, and both Government and the country have not yet seen the full effects of the departure. Matters will become much worse before both communities will realise that communalism in politics does not pay.

The Indian doctrine was quite the reverse. The State in Indian polity took all religions under its protection. The ruler may personally follow any particular denomination, but in his sovereign capacity he was the defender, so to speak, of every religion in the State. The Emperor Asoka became a convert to Buddhism, but all his inscriptions speak of Brahmanas and Sramanas as equally entitled to the reverence and charity of his subjects. This was the established policy throughout the Hindu period. The Jews, the Syrian Christians, the Parsis, and the early Christian Missions, were accorded the protection of the rulers and were the recipients of suitable grants of lands and marks of honour from them. Mahomedan rulers, with few disastrous exceptions, followed the same policy and were, therefore, regarded by their Hindu subjects with the same affection and loyalty as by Mahomedans. This policy is still the policy of Indian States except where an individual ruler has been bitten by the current craze of communalism. A story is told of a very important Indian Mahomedan ruler, which well brings out this principle. A very high office in his State was held hereditarily by the head of a great Hindu family. One of the holders of this office felt drawn towards Islam and mentioned the matter to his sovereign. His Highness quietly replied that he was very pleased to hear of his inclination, and in case he intended to act upon it, he should let him know, as His Highness would have to find another Hindu house in which to vest the right to the hereditary office, for, said he, that particular position in his Court had always been and should always be held by a Hindu. The matter was never referred to again by either the courtier or the ruler. The story may not be true in every detail but it accurately represents the conception of his position which that particular Prince held in relation to the religion of his subjects, and, no wonder, he was held in affectionate reverence by his Hindu no less than by his Mahomedan subjects. This policy was not peculiar to him but is the traditional policy of all great Indian States from time immemorial. His Highness the Maharaja of Mysore not long ago built and opened a mosque for the Mahomedan members of his bodyguard. The Maharajas of Baroda, Gwalior and several other States take a leading part in the celebration of the Moharrum and other Mahomedan festivals. This Indian doctrine of equal protection for all religions, whenever it has been strictly observed, has ensured harmonious inter-communal relations. An Indian national Government, whenever it comes, will instinctively revert to it as its surest security against the curse of communal rivalries.

THE INDIAN ECONOMIC ENQUIRY COMMITTEE.

It may be remembered that the Taxation Enquiry Committee which Government instituted last year met with a storm of opposition throughout the country owing to its unsatisfactory personnel and terms of reference. Whereas the Assembly and the Council of State had been asking for a Committee to enquire into the economic condition of the people with a view to finding out the average income of the people and the taxable capacity of India, Government thrust upon the country a Committee to enquire into further modes of taxation with restricted terms of reference and with no thought whatsoever about the capacity of the people to bear any further additional taxation. The Assembly manifested its indignation against the Taxation Committee by passing Mr. K. Rama Iyengar's motion in September

realpatidar.com

1924 urging the suspension of the Taxation Enquiry Committee and the substitution in its place of a Committee to inquire into the general conditions of economic life and labour in reference to the resources of the country and make an estimate of the national income. Sir Basil Blackett, the shrewd financier that he is, came to a compromise with the Assembly and, in deference to its wishes, instituted the Economic Enquiry Committee consisting of Sir M. Viswesvarayya, as President, Pandit Kaul and Prof. Burnett-Hurst. The Report of the Committee which was published recently is not unanimous, as Prof. Burnett-Hurst has appended a Minute of Dissent. It is one of the fundamental axioms of public finance that the incidence of taxation should be regulated according to the taxable capacity of the people. Any inquiry, therefore, to find additional means of taxation, should follow and not precede an enquiry into the fitness of the people to bear such additional taxation, and the Government of India were putting the cart before the horse by instituting first the Taxation Enquiry Committee. The average annual income per head in India is variously estimated from Rs. 30 to Rs. 60; and while some maintain that the limit of taxable capacity has been already exceeded, others maintain the contrary. Whatever may be the truth of these statements, it is high time that India, in common with the rest of the world, instead of trusting to crude guesses, makes an approximate estimate of national and individual income, and it is gratifying to see that the Committee regards such a survey as an indispensable preliminary to the formulation of economic policies and the treatment of many of the larger economic problems. The terms of reference to the Committee practically fall under two heads: the examination of the material available and the preparation of a scheme of economic survey together with an estimate of the cost involved.

As regards the first part of its terms of reference, the Committee holds that, while general statistics are more or less complete, statistics of production, while being complete in some respects, are incomplete or totally wanting in others. In regard to estimates of income, wealth etc., including cost of living, indebtedness, wages and prices, the Committee finds the available official information meagre, as no satisfactory attempt has been made so far to collect the necessary material on a comprehensive scale. One of the complaints not unjustly made against the Indian system of taxation is that the major part of the taxation falls upon shoulders ill able to bear it, in other words, ability to pay, which Adam Smith, the father of Economics, declared as one of the soundest canons of any scientific and equitable system of taxation, has not been the deciding factor in the incidence of Indian taxation. The Committee's recommendations in this respect will go a great way in assessing this ability to pay which will in turn lead to an equitable distribution of taxation. It suggests that intensive inquiries should be made every year in limited areas in every district for ascertaining income, wealth, cost of living, indebtedness etc., of the people, and that income-tax returns should continue to be published in an improved form. Approximate estimates of the wealth of individuals should be made, wherever possible, by the investigators in the course of their intensive inquiries, and cost of living index numbers should also be prepared for the principal industrial centres. The Committee also makes detailed proposals for the collection of rates of wages of various classes of operatives in industrial establishments, mines etc., a quinquennial wage census and the collection of wholesale and retail prices.

As regards the methods of survey, the Committee points out the Dominions as an example for India and emphasises that India should try to obtain approximate figures and estimates by generalisation wherever absolute accuracy is not possible of attainment. The guidance which approximate figures may give, it says, should not be refused because the country cannot afford the expense of collecting strictly accurate figures for a long time. Care, however, should be taken to modify considerably the practice followed by the Dominions to suit Indian conditions. The Committee stresses the need for an effective organisation and recommends the creation of a Central Bureau of Statistics presided over by a Director of Statistics and a Provincial Statistics Bureau with a provincial statistician at its head and a number of assistants. The appointment of small committees in villages to assist the Inspectors employed in collecting production statistics and the investigators engaged in economic research, is also recommended. Production statistics should also be collected with the help of the Revenue and other Government departments by providing the additional staff of Inspectors and clerks needed, the intensive inquiries to be conducted by a technical staff with the co-operation of the Revenue Department and the people of the areas concerned. The village studies, according to the Committee, should comprise inquiries concerning every household in the area investigated, and should enable standards of living and the cost of living of the various classes to be determined. Professor Burnett-Hurst, however, does not agree with this. He echoes the opinion of some of the witnesses that an enquiry into individual wealth would be inadvisable, as it would be viewed with distrust and suspicion. In our opinion, this difficulty would be overcome if, as the Committee suggests, the revenue officers and officers of the Statistical Department draw the attention of the villagers to the figures whenever they happen to visit a village and explain to them their real significance. The encouraging of village agencies and city and town municipalities to collect data and compile statistics, each for its particular area, and the associating of local committees, panchayats etc., with the work of collecting statistical data, so that the responsibility for maintaining an economic survey may be transferred to the shoulders of the people, is also one of the noteworthy recommendations of the Committee, and is bound to have an educative effect upon the people.

The recurring cost of the Committee's proposals is estimated at Rs. 56·79 lakhs to be borne by the provinces and Rs. ·75 lakhs to be borne by the Central Government making a total of Rs. 57·54 lakhs. Besides this, there will be an initial expenditure for equipment, training, etc., in the first quinquennium, of Rs. 1·25 lakhs by the Central Government and of Rs. 30·61 lakhs by the provincial governments, making a total of Rs. 31·86 lakhs. We are afraid the recommendations of the Committee will prove rather too costly in the present state of Central and provincial finance. Nevertheless we hope Government will be able to accept most of its recommendations.

INDUSTRY AND THE IDEAL OF SERVICE.

(By Mr. Wendell M. Thomas, Jr.)

"Whoever would become great among you must be your servant," are the words of one who burnt out his life in service. "For the Son of Man came not to be ministered to, but to minister." Most people will tell you that this message is good "as an ideal," but impractical in the hard world of industry. Now since an ideal is really a practical guide to action, what these people are trying to say is that the message of service is beautiful as a dream, but not good as an ideal because it won't work. We must admit that at present in vast areas of life it is all too true that the ideal of service doesn't work: but no one is justified thereby in saying that it won't work. Back of the moral command of service, we should note the metaphysical insight that "One is your Father, and all you are brothers." Wherever the oneness of man in the family of God is realized, the duty of service is not only practical, but even natural.

Perhaps no industrialist ever realized the oneness of humanity more keenly than did Robinson Crusoe on the desert isle. As far as he was concerned, and for the time being, he summed up civilized humanity in his own person. When he began work, he was consumer, producer, organizer, owner, and manager, all rolled into one. Far more aptly than Louis XIV could he say, "I am the State." And precisely because he was so intimate with himself, did the ideal of service reign among his various industrial functions one hundred per cent practical, and perfectly natural! Now Humanity is a Robinson Crusoe, confined, for a time, to its celestial island, the earth. If it could only realize its oneness, how practical would seem the ideal of service! Consider the farmer who used to raise and make on his own farm nearly everything he consumed. He worked not for himself alone, but for his family as a whole; nor did he or his wife or children, brothers or sisters, regard the ideal of service as at all unnatural. Again, the primitive social group is a spiritual unit. Its members do not even think themselves as individuals in work, fight or play, but act as functions of the whole. The old are fathers and mothers, the young are brothers and sisters, and service is done as a matter of course. Now the economic interdependence of civilization is fully as close as that of the farm family and the primitive group; and its races of men, whatever their variety, comprise but one species. Then how natural is service!

The history of industrial development shows that the ideal of service, far from being impractical, is the only practical solution of the industrial problem. But service is practical only when brotherhood is realized. Primitive culture, to be sure, embodied some service, but only within the local group where the spirit of brotherhood reigned. Outsiders were enemies to be fought, not served. This savage life, "poor, nasty, brutish and short," offered on the whole so little solution of the industrial problem, because it offered so little opportunity for service. With the coming of the great military empires of magnificence, slavery, and atrocity, came definitely the worship of privilege. The contribution of imperialism was a stupendous attempt at universality, but its devotion to the cause of service was conspicuous by its absence. The feudalism which followed was pagan imperialism opposed by primitive independence and softened by the religious doctrine of service. Neither the bloody injustice of military imperialism nor the pyramidal fixity of feudalism, were industrial solutions. Why? Service was one-sided, the business, not of the great, but only of the mean. Not humanity, but privileged classes were served.

Then came the era of mechanical invention, producing the radical change in society known as the Industrial Revolution. Dominating the resultant specialization of labour, the industrial employer rose to prominence, and the theory of private property sprang to his aid. This theory is a clear compromise between service and privilege. Goods will be produced most cheaply and distributed most effectively if each private employer, competing with his fellows, seeks his own profit according to basic individual right. What a pretty harmony of social and selfish interest! The system of private property is no doubt an advance on feudalism, for the amount of service indeed is greater, and the plums of privilege more widely distributed. But what price victory? The fleeced consumer on the one hand, and the wage slave on the other,—both supported by the untiring efforts of the employer who combines in his own person the functions of organizer, owner, and manager, losing his soul in the worship of private profit, serving Mammon rather than God. An industrial solution? Service enthroned?

With development comes specialization. The profiteering employer breaks up into three: the organizer, the owner, and the manager. With expansion comes specialization within each interacting group: the organizer becomes an interlocking directorate controlling vertical and horizontal "trusts"; the owner, companies of stock and bond holders dependent upon the banks; and the manager, a hierarchy of superintendents, directors, bosses, and foremen. The fleeced consumer invests in wholesale purchasing associations, and the wage slave takes refuge in labour unions. Within each group, the ideal of service is assuming more and more control: co-operation is defeating competition, profits are more widely though unequally distributed, efficiency is replacing fear, the quality of the output is improving, and sanitation, security and education are making rapid strides. But between the groups, the ideal of privilege is still intrenched. The privilege of the organizer is power; of the owner, profits; of the manager, exploitation; of the consumer, bargains; and of the producer, strikes. A half solution, because half service.

State invasion of the realm of individual right has done much to limit private profits and dull the edge of special privilege. By the socialistic methods of gradnated taxation, overhead regulation, industrial legislation, and public enterprises of its own, the state, local, national, and sometimes international, has increased the area and enhanced the prestige of the ideal of service. The result? In so far as the service is incorrupt and efficient, the industrial problem is solved. But far more significant for the task of replacing privilege by service are two recent and complementary movements, one springing from the consumer, the other from the producer.

The surprising and wholesome development of the Consumer's Co-operative Movement is a momentous and practical declaration that privilege is doomed. The brilliant though extremely simple idea that distinguishes it from former wholesale purchasing associations, and gives it its value, is that the investments of each member return money not as interest, but as rebate according to the amount of his purchases for actual consumption. As far as the consumer is concerned, the slogan of "production for use, and not for profit" is realized; for instead of fattening the purse of the investor, the proceeds flow directly to the consumer in the form of lower prices on home commodities. For democracy's sake, each member exercises one vote only, regardless of the size of his investment, and even the size of the investment is limited. From retailing, the Movement has branched out into wholesaling, manufacturing, transportation, and even banking enterprises, local, national, and international. Thus the consumer becomes not only the owner, but also the source of responsibility for the organizer; and the whole industrial system, which formerly was based on the greed and recklessness of idle privilege expressed in the clamour of stock holders for higher dividends, is now beginning to take firm root in the elemental human need of a society of consumers.

Complementary to this movement of the consumer, is the movement of the producer for industrial unions or guilds. Unlike trade unions, or craft guilds, they stand for positive service, rather than mere security, or the privilege of fighting "privilege." They are organized not essentially to oppose combinations of employers, but to turn out a sound and beautiful product whose proceeds will keep the producer in comfort and progressive usefulness. Wages, hours, discipline, hygiene, sanitation, recreation, and education are controlled by the workers themselves, who also supply the capital for the enterprise, and elect their managers. Whole-hearted interest and delight in workmanship and work is encouraged. The proceeds are distributed not as interest, but as re-investment in the extension and perfecting of the enterprise, and as wages, to each according to his need as expressed in size of family, state of health and prevailing prices, as well as according to his need as expressed in size of family, state of health, and prevailing prices, as well as according to his ability as expressed in the amount, skill, difficulty, and length of service rendered. A bonus for unpleasant tasks may be given not in extra money, but in extra leisure. As the movement develops, progress in co-operation among the various unions and nations may be effected.

MAHOMEDAN OPPOSITION TO HINDU MARRIAGE BILL.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In your editorial note of this week headed "Mahomedan Opposition to Sind Hindu Marriage Bill" you have quoted the Muslim Advocate of Karachi as appealing to the Hindu members of the Bombay Legislative Council "not to take advantage of their majority in the Council in trampling on the religious rights of their Mahomedan brethren." Sir, I am not a communalist, a stickler for the "share system" in any sphere of our national life. But facts are facts and must not be distorted. In spite of the Muslim Advocate's facile assumption of a Hindu majority in the Bombay Council, you may be surprised to know that, in this Council, the Hindu members all told are in a minority, a distinct minority, sir; whereas in the Province the Hindus are in an over-whelming majority. Here are the exact figures:

Out of a total of 111 members constituting the Bombay Council only 52 are Hindus, 29 being Mahomedans, 24 Christians and 6 Zoroastrians;—whereas in the Province of Bombay the Hindus constitute nearly 79.47 p. c. of the population. Thus a majority of nearly 80 p. c. has been reduced to a minority of 47 p. c. (This state of things is of course due to the wonderful "non-Mahomedan" kingdom discovered at Lucknow in 1916). A veteran publicist, after giving the above facts and figures in the Bombay Chronicle recently, concluded:—"I suspect that the position of the Hindu community in the Councils of some other Provinces also where they constitute a majority of the population is not far different."

Now let those of our countrymen whose opinion the Muslim Advocate professes to voice note these facts, and know their Advocate also betimes.

Karwar, Yours etc.,

PRESS COMMENTS.

Commenting on our note in a recent issue regarding Mahomedan opposition to Mr. Advani's Sind Hindu Marriage Bill, the Indian Witness of Lucknow, the organ of the American Methodist Mission, writes after reproducing the remarks of the Muslim Advocate of Karachi which we noticed week before last:—We agree with the Indian Social Reformer in saying that this is the most extraordinary claim on behalf of Islam that we have yet come across. It would be quite as logical to demand the repeal of the Christian Marriage Act on the ground that it interferes with Mahomedan rights because it forbids any one who has been married under its provisions to contract a polygamous marriage. One wonders what the next move of aggressive Islam will be. Hindus are told that they must give up age-old practices of playing music in religious processions as they pass mosques and now they are told that they must not adopt an important social reform because perchance it will work hardship on some of their number who may later be converted to Islam.

New India, Madras, writes :—The way in which the Sind Hindu Marriage Bill has been treated by the Select Committee in the Bombay Legislative Council seems to show how unstable is the hold that principles, as opposed to considerations of policy and expediency, have upon the minds of many of those who represent the people in the Legislatures to-day. This is specially so with regard to matters of Social Reform. In open debate in the Council, everybody seemed to approve heartily of the principle of the Bill, but the majority of the Select Commitee has "practically whittled it down in such a way as to frustrate completely the objects of the Bill," as the Indian Social Reformer points out. The most unfortunate of the changes proposed is that the Bill should not affect converts to the Mahommadan religion, and was no doubt a weak concession to the attitude of Mohammadans towards the Bill. It is intolerable to Hindus that a measure for Hindu Social Reform should be weighted down with consideration for contingencies that may involve a departure from Mahommadan customs. It is unjust of Muslims to demand that an Act enforcing monogamy on Hindus should show a greater deference to their views than the Indian Christian or Parsi Marriage Acts show. And as Mr. Jayakar pointed out the other day, the amendment "was likely to be more baneful than wholesome to the Hindu community. Any Hindu contracting a marriage under this Bill could, under the amendment, re-marry in the life-time of his first wife by changing his religion. The amendment, therefore, not only made the Bill nugatory, but may prove an inducement."

We hope that the Bombay Council will not allow such a crying anomaly or any other to be introduced in an eminently progressive piece of legislation.

DEPRESSED CLASSES MEETING AT NIPANI.

(From a Correspondent.)

Under the presidentship of Rao Saheb M. Lingayya Naidu, a public meeting of the Depressed Classes of Nipani, a town 45 miles from Belgaum, was held on Sunday the 11th October 1925 at 8 P.M. to consider the best means of furthering the interests and welfare of untouchables. There was a good attendance.

Rao Saheb Papanna Jallis, Hon. Magistrate, Belgaum, and others addressed the meeting.

Rao Saheb Naidu in his concluding speech laid emphasis on education, personal cleanliness, unity, settlement of communal disputes by Panchayats, and social intercourse between the different sections among the Depressed Classes, Temperance, the abolition of early marriages, physical culture etc., and congratulated Mr. M. J. Ravan, Municipal Councillor, and others for the efforts they were making for the betterment of untouchables. It was resolved to establish a Depressed Classes Society at Nipani and also to open for their benefit a Free Reading Room, a Library and a Night School at Nipani.

A representative Committee of 15 members was then formed with Rao Saheb Papanna Jallis as President, Mr. M. J. Ravan as Chairman, Mr. A. B. Kamble as Secretary and Mr. B. B. Bhosale as Treasurer. The main object of the Committee is the elevation of the Depressed classes of Nipani and other parts round Nipani. The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to the President, Rao Saheb Papanna and Mr. Ravan.

PLIGHT OF HINDU WIDOWS.

In his presidential address at the Widow Remarriage Conference held at Khankhana on the 11th instant Swami Shraddhanand dwelt at length on the question of widow remarriage in the Hindu Society. The Associated Press summary of the proceedings of the Conference was published in our news columns last week. "In no society or community in the world," writes the Patriot (Lucknow), an Arya Samaj Weekly, "this question has ever assumed such gigantic and serious proportions as among the Hindus. A mere glance at the number of girl and baby widows will show the appalling nature of the question. According to the Census Report for 1921 the number of Hindu child widows was as follows :—

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Under 1 year of age | ... | ... | ... | 612 |
| Under 5 years of age | ... | ... | ... | 2,024 |
| Under 10 years of age | ... | ... | ... | 97,857 |
| Under 15 years of age | ... | ... | ... | 3,32,517 |
| Total | ... | | | 4,33,010 |

Besides these there are about five lakhs Hindu girl-widows of ages ranging between 15 and 20. If the marriageable age of girls had been fixed to a reasonable standard the question would not have assumed such serious proportions. Swami Shraddhanand therefore emphasises that the first step towards stamping out the evil is that all classes and castes of Hindus should decide upon raising the marriageable age of girls. That is the most important means to cut at the root of the evil for the future. But to save the society from the evils of so many girl-widows the headmen of the Hindu society should sanction widow re-marriage according to the Shastras. Swami Shraddhanand puts widow remarriage under the category of Apad-dharma.

Rules of religion cannot be the same in abnormal situations as in normal situations. The ancient sages have therefore wisely made provision for following religion in critical situations with modification in rules. Widow remarriage under the present critical situation of the Hindu society, is not unshastric. Human nature being what it is, it is unreasonable to think that all the girl widows would prefer to remain within the fold of Hindu society, if the society does not sanction their remarriage. Swami Shraddhanand gives some typical instances how girl widows are compelled to leave their hearth and home."

After quoting several instances of the miseries of young Hindu widows, the Patriot concludes :—"Both from the humanitarian and from the social point of view it is the duty of the leading members of the Hindu society to devise means to check the evil. At present the number of Hindus is diminishing at the rate of 1 per cent every year. The chief cause of this diminution, Swami Shraddhanand points out, is this large number of child widows. Up to the age of 20 the number of girl widows is ascertained. But what becomes of them after they pass their 23rd year? Some are absorbed in the Moslem society, some become women of ill fame. Swami Shraddhanand points out that the harm done to the Hindu society through conversion or Tabligh is not even tithe of the harm done by the social bar against widow remarriage. The question deserves serious consideration at the hands of all well-wishers of the Hindu community."

SUPPRESSION OF BROTHELS IN LUCKNOW.

The evil of prostitution is evidently on the increase throughout the country. Last week we referred to the efforts of the

Madras Vigilance Committee in drafting a Bill for dealing with this evil. That other centres also are not free from this evil is quite evident from the following extracted by the Indian Witness, Lucknow, from the Wealth and Welfare:

The existence of brothels in the city of Lucknow has brought prominently before the public attention a new menace to our social life. Their danger to the public and the indescribable misery that is undergone by their inmates are not generally realised till our attention is drawn to them by some tragedy or crime. Nearly two thirds of the treatments for diseases by Doctors in Lucknow are for venereal diseases. Further, brothels are becoming paying business concerns, systematising traffic in vice and maintaining a batch of depraved characters in the shape of procurers, importers and managers. Several of this kind are seen hanging about the hotels in Lucknow. In these circumstances the duty of the public to safeguard social life and purity from this new encroachment has become clear. Permitting to grow unchecked a system under which the lives of hundreds of our sisters are wrecked and blighted in ministering to the passions of men and the cupidity of scheming adventurers is a crime. The horrors involved in the condemnation of a section of this sex to a life of sin and shame will only put back the civilization of India as a whole. Some immediate measures should be adopted to check this social evil. If the existing law is inadequate to deal with the situation that has arisen as a result of the rapid increase of our urban population, a well framed Act for the punishment of men and women who traffic in vice and for the suppression of brothels should be passed. In addition to the legislative aids for suppressing brothels and penalising the traffic in vice, provision should be made for dealing with reclaimed girls and women. Reform in this direction is overdue. It is up to the enlightened and self-respecting public of U. P. to hasten the passing of the necessary legislative enactments to save the unfortunate girls and women and give them an opportunity of becoming educated and useful members of the society and establish rescue homes for protection of society against the ravages of a social evil, which is as insidious as it is powerful. The Missionaries—Christian Missionaries—who are doing so much for the moral welfare of India should give their immediate attention to this. The Editor of the Indian Witness who is ever ready to sacrifice in the cause of prohibition would, we believe, be pleased to take the lead in this matter.

[To the above the Editor of the Indian Witness has appended the following note: With no desire to take the leadership in this cause because we feel that it should be taken by an Indian and one less loaded than we are, we should call the attention of the Editor of our esteemed contemporary to recent utterances of the Indian Witness on this subject].

THE ESSENTIALS IN MODERN CHILD WELFARE.

1. A Juvenile Court with suitable equipment of its own and with personnel capable of successful use of the other children's agencies, so that juvenile delinquency is reduced.

2. Financial resources and an efficient public agency to help suitable and capable mothers to keep their children at home when the bread winner is dead or disabled.

3. An agency, public or private, whose principal function it shall be, without court intervention if possible, or with court action if necessary, to protect such children as are neglected, mistreated or exploited by parents or custodians, and always with the hope of saving the child's own home.

4. A system of public and private service for safeguarded adaptive placement, in suitable foster homes or institutions, of children who through death or other misfortune have lost the opportunity to grow up in their own homes.

5. An infant welfare programme, public and private, safeguarding the child in the prenatal and postnatal pre-school period by effective legislation and professional advice and supervision.

6. A programme for the promotion of health, for children of all ages, adequately emphasising preventive and corrective measures, and designed to develop health-education in all phases of hygiene.

7. A school system that recognizes its social responsibilities and has an equipment of visiting teachers for the prevention of truancy and deliquency and for the better adjustment of the child in home and in school.

8. Special classes in schools with necessary social facilities to provide all possible physical and intellectual stimulus and development for the physical and mental deviates.

9. Psychiatric and psychological facilities with social work adjuncts to study normal children as well as those deviating in some important particulars from normal, so that each may have a chance to achieve his largest capabilities.

10. A system of group activities for supervised play and for character training under religious or secular auspices, guided by a high-grade personnel, so that the children's homes may be supplemented in their weak spots.

11. The enactment and enforcement of laws that will prohibit child-marriages and raise the standards of home life by requiring parental responsibility for flagrant neglect in the homes.

LUCKNOW STIRS AMERICA.

During the past eighteen months Professor J. J. Cornelius of the Department of Philosophy in Lucknow University (on extended leave), has been taking special courses in Philosophy and Education. His major studies have been in Columbia University, New York, though his plans include certain special studies at Oxford before his return to India.

Although the distinguished work that Mr. Cornelius is doing at Western Universities is cause for congratulation, and although he is qualifying for very high educational service when he shall return to his loved Motherland, yet Mr. Cornelius's university work is by no means the largest contribution which he is making to India during his long leave. His largest contribution is, rather, the strong and illuminating representation of Indian ideals which he has been privileged to make to the more thoughtful American public. And yet, as one reads his incisive words, and tries to measure their effect upon the public mind in America, one is impressed that Mr. Cornelius is not seeking to "play up" the Indian point of view in politics, social reform or philosophy; one is impressed, rather, that here is another voice lifted for human brotherhood and fair-dealing, whether East or West.

The Christian Century, widely recognised as the most alert religious journal in America, makes this note in its issue of September 3rd: "Prof. J. J. Cornelius of Lucknow, India, greatly stirred one of the 'round tables' in this year's Williams town Institute of Politics when he denounced the course pursued by western nations in the Orient. "What does western prestige mean?" Professor Cornelius asked. "When I point a revolver at your head and take your goods I am a criminal; on the other hand when you plant yourself solidly on other people with the aid of guns, we speak of it as carrying civilization to the backward state." One newspaper correspondent writing from the seat of the Institute commends "At the time of going to press no representative of a Christian nation had made a convincing reply to that indictment'."

Of course, it is an easy matter for a Junior at College to make a "smart speech" especially if he happens to be a long way from home!—and then cock his ear for the applause. Nor is it difficult to assume the air and attitude of an expatriated lover of one's country "pleading the cause of my downtrodden people"; the great western republic is a favourite resort of patriots in absentia. But to do what Professor Cornelius has done demands keen intellectual equipment fused with a passion of consecration. He has not sought to "split the ears of the groundlings," his appeal has been to that small group of educational experts, who lead the thinking, and, in the end, control the policies of a nation. It is worthy of notice that the thought-pricking words quoted in The Christian Century were not spoken before a public audience but were part of his contribution to a 'round table' discussion in an Institute of the Politics conducted by picked leaders. We are indebted to some wideawake newspaper correspondent who happened to be present for our glimpse behind the scenes.

A partial list of Professor Cornelius's engagements during recent weeks, together with the names of men who have participated with him on the same programmes, will give to discerning people the clearest possible recognition of the contribution which this highly endowed Indian is making during his sojourn in America. On July 22nd, at International House, New York City, Professor Cornelius and Dr. Herbert Adams Gibbons, Professors of History and International Politics, Princeton University, spoke at the New York Memorial Service in honour of the late C. R. Das, the subject of both addresses being, "The Significance to Asia of the Present Situation in India." On July 25th, at the famous Chautauqua Institute, New York, Professor Cornelius was one of five speakers on International Relations, his particular theme being "Is Asia a Menace to World Peace?" The other speakers in this great series at Chautauqua were Dean Shailer Mathews, Bishop McConnell, James G. McDonald and Court Soyeshima of Japan. On August 4th, at the Williamstown Institute of Politics, to which reference has already been made, the 'round table' discussion was under the direction of Lionel Curtis Esq., the distinguished British politician so well-known in India.

In a recent letter received from Professor Cornelius there is one revealing sentence which suggests what lies in the back part of his mind. It is betraying no confidence to pass it on to a larger reading public than the circle to which it was addressed.

Speaking of the sufferings of Indians in South Africa and of his own expectation to visit Kenya on his way "home," he adds: "We, as Indian Christians, have neglected doing such work and have greatly isolated ourselves from many high-minded and patriotic fellow Indians. How much in such matters I shall be able to help, when I reach India, and how much of all I wish to do I shall be able to put through, it is impossible for me to know. God only can guide me and help me; it is for Him to shape my life-work in behalf of my country. When my preparation is complete, there will be an open door somewhere, where I hope to be of some use in building up the Kingdom of God and in the extension of His Democracy."—The Indian Daily Telegraph, Lucknow.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association: The Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association has forwarded to the Secretary, Bombay Legislative Council, the following suggestions with regard to the Bills, viz., (1) A Bill to amend the Bombay Children Act, 1924, and (2) A Bill to enable the Hindus in Sind to restrict to Monogamous Marriages, which will come up for final consideration at the sessions of the Bombay Legislative Council commencing on the 21st October 1925:—(1) In the Sind Hindu Marriages Bill, provision should be made to the effect that a Hindu permanent resident of Sind shall not be released from the obligations under this Bill by change of religion subsequent to the marriage. (2) In the Children's Act Amendment Bill, Clause 10 D (2) should be so modified as to provide that the forfeiture of any bidis etc., in the possession of a child found smoking in any street should not follow as a matter of course, but it should be left to the discretion of the Magistrate to pass such order for the disposal of the property seized as the circumstances of each case may require.

Evidence Before the Currency Commission: A Bombay Government Press Note Says:—The Royal Commission on Indian Currency will be glad to receive written statements of their views from any persons or bodies desirous of giving evidence before the Commission. They should state at the same time whether they wish to supplement the written statements by oral evidence, or in the case of bodies, name the representative or representatives who will tender oral evidence on their behalf. It will be for the Commission to decide whether or not they will hear the oral evidence of witnesses offering to tender such evidence, and no statement can be made at present as to the date on which witnesses whose oral evidence the Commission decide to take will be called. The terms of reference of the Commission are: "To examine and report on the Indian exchange and currency system and practice; to consider whether any modifications are desirable in the interests of India, and to make recommendations." All communications should be addressed to the Joint Secretaries of the Commission, Secretariat, Delhi.

Culture and Public Life: It was a thoughtful and learned address which Sir C. P. Ramaswamy Iyer, the distinguished Law Member, Madras, delivered on "Culture and Public Life" with Mr. Bhulabai Desai in the chair in Bombay recently whither he had been on an official visit. By culture, the lecturer meant "preferences in exclusion", and in this connection, he emphasised the necessity for going back to our ancient religious literature and culture which were truly laid in a wide spirit of catholicity. Eschew dogmatism that is apt to be generated by the present-day journalism,—was his advice to the youngmen. The lecturer also laid stress on the fact that the main function of culture is to eradicate all racialism, communalism and nationalism. In conclusion, the Hon. Member pleaded for that fine parliamentary habit of agreeing to differ and seeing eye to eye with opponents in whatever field it might be.

Lady Reading's Munificence: An Associated Press Message dated Simla, October 16th says:—The Countess of Reading has written to the Simla Municipality offering two shelters for rickshaw Jhumpanies near Cecil Hotel and Chalet to protect them from rain and cold. She is prepared to pay the maximum of Rs. 10,000 for building these shelters, provided the local Municipality would properly maintain them. The Municipality accepted Her Excellency's offer.

Colonel Crawford and the Anglo-Indians: Colonel Crawford who was recently on a lecturing tour in South India for the purpose of rousing the ordinary European in India from his lethargy, made some important statements in his Bangalore speech. He advised the Anglo-Indians no longer to hang on the skirts of either the Indians or the Europeans, and curtly refused to admit them into the European Association. He also said that he would be no party to preferential treatment for Anglo-Indians, since superior Indians were available on considerably lower salaries. We hope these blunt remarks of Colonel Crawford would serve as an eye-opener to our Anglo-Indian friends who have been representing themselves to be Indians for certain purposes and as Europeans for other purposes. The wiser policy for them, no doubt, would be to throw in their lot with Indians in their fight for political rights without scrambling for discriminate treatment.

Eugen Sandow: Eugen Sandow, the world-famous strong man, whose death is announced, was one of the foremost exponents of physical culture of modern times. He was a German by birth and adopted England as his home. Mr. Sandow's name will for ever be associated with his dumb-bells, chest-expanders and other aids to health, strength and physical culture, without which no gymnasium is considered to be complete in its equipment. His School of physical Culture in London has been the means of training people and making them excellent specimens of manhood and womanhood. Everybody is only too familiar with the visit the famous Sandow paid to India some 25 years ago and entertained the audiences with his extraordinary feats and demonstrations.

Sir Jagadish Bose's New Discoveries: The Forward writes: "Sir Jagadish Bose has announced three startling new discoveries in plant life. It is useless to conjecture what they are, because if they are anything like his great discovery, it will be something nobody has ever thought about or imagined. Real scientific study and research in India is comparatively of recent date, if we leave out the scientists of old. Yet we have produced men like Sir Jagadish and Professor Raman, who have both pushed to the front rank of the scientists of the world by their wonderful discoveries, which have given a new trend to modern scientific thought. We await with interest his announcement, which Sir Jagadish has promised on the 17th instant. Perhaps, it will not be very long before the West will once more look to the East for truth and wisdom." Since the above was in type, we read an Associated Press message wherein it was stated that in the course of an interesting lecture delivered by him at Government House at Darjeeling, Dr. Bose stated that plants have like animals complete muscular tissues, sensory and motor nerves, and that he had invented a delicate instrument with which he could prove this statement.

Madras Labour Department: In reviewing the Administration report of the Labour Department for the last year, the Government note that except for the strike among the foremen, drivers and workshop employees on certain sections of the South Indian Railway, the Labour situation was quiet during the year. Activities of the department for improving the conditions of the depressed classes progressed satisfactorily, and 208 acres of "patta" lands were acquired for use as building sites and distributed among 3,674 applicants during the year. The policy of assigning lands for cultivation to members of the depressed classes out of extents reserved for them was continued, and the co-operative movement received a large accession of strength, 334 societies having been formed during the year for the aquisition of house sites,

Sex Problems as Politics:—Quite a flutter was caused in political circles when J. M. Keynes, the well-known economist, in a lecture at the Liberal Summer School, declared that sex questions would become of increasing importance in politics, and suggested that birth control should become one of the planks of the Liberal platform. "The questions which I group together as sex questions", he said, "have not been party questions in the past. But that was because they were never or seldom the subject of public discussions. All this is changed now. There are now no subjects in which the big general public is more interested. They are of the utmost social importance. Some of them are deeply involved in the solution of certain economic questions. I can't doubt that sex questions are bound to enter the political arena." But the Professor did not stop there for, he insisted that such questions should be discussed not only at political meetings, but that Government itself should take up birth control. He continued: "Birth control touches on one side the liberties of women, and on the other side the duty of the State to concern itself with the size of the population just as much as with the size of the Army or the amount of the budget."

Education of Business Girls in Calcutta: The Calcutta Y. W. C. A., as a result of recent investigations into the educational opportunities of business girls in Calcutta, points out that whereas the London girl has free compulsory elementary education with a system of scholarships, which may take her on, not only to the secondary schools, but even to the University, the education open to the Calcutta business girl has none of these advantages, and being neither compulsory nor free, it may begin and finish at any age. Similarly the system of evening education in London affording the ambitious business girl with endless opportunities through evening schools, the Adult School Union, University Extension lectures, Workers' Educational Association, Free Public libraries and so on has no equivalent in Calcutta where the only facilities are a few evening classes just started at the Y. W. C. A. The same holds good of the vocational training open to business girls. In London there are first-class technical schools, L. C. C. Day Training Schools, Commercial Schools and training schemes in Clubs, whilst in Calcutta there are only very limited facilities for girls to learn shorthand and typing.

The First Indian Communist Conference: Satya Bhakta, Secretary, the Indian Communist Party, writes in the course of a lengthy manifesto:—It is now generally known that the first session of the Indian Communist Conference will be held during the coming December side by side with the session of the Congress at Cawnpore. Maulana Hasrat Mohani has been elected Chairman of the Reception Committee at a meeting of the party on 20th September last, and Mr. Saklatvala M. P. has been elected President of the Conference. To members of the party and its helpers we appeal for funds so as to meet the expenses of the Conference. At the lowest estimate Rs. 3000 has to be collected, though on a more lavish scale a sum of 10 to 12 thousands could be spent. This sum of Rs. 3000, however, does not include the travelling expenses of Mr. Saklatvala, if we have to meet them, as most probably we will have to, so that we will require another two thousand in that case. Every member of the Party can become a member of the Reception Committee by subscribing Re. 50. The general public can help by sending donations. From that richest class of people helping the 'big' political bodies we expect but very little, in fact nothing, and our hopes are centred mainly on that small and yet ardent section of our people who have faith in the future of communism and the freedom of the country. Our appeal for funds is free from all compulsion or undue influence, and we hope our members and sympathisers will extend their help willingly.

Electoral Sex Disqualification in Bengal Removed: The "Calcutta Gazette" publishes the following notification: Whereas a resolution was passed by the Bengal Legislative Council on the 19th August 1925 recommending that the sex-disqualification for registration on the electoral rolls be removed: Now, therefore, in exercise of the power conferred by the second proviso to sub-rule (1) of rule 7 of the Bengal Electoral Rules, the Governor in Council is pleased to make the following regulation: 1. (1) This regulation may be called "The Bengal Electoral Sex-disqualification Removal Regulation. (2) It shall come into force at once. 2. Notwithstanding anything contained in rule 7 of the Bengal Electoral rules no women shall be disqualified for registration on the electoral roll of any constituency specified in Schedule I to the said rules by reason only of her sex.

Protection to Textile Industry: An Australian Parallel: The Forward writes:—To protect their own textile industry Australia has placed a duty of one shilling per square yard, plus 30 per cent. ad valorem on British cotton piecegoods. Hitherto they have entered Australia free of duty. It means the selling price of British cotton goods will be raised 100 per cent. There is also a heavy tariff on woolens. Therefore, both Lancashire and Yorkshire are gravely concerned. The power of Lancashire interests is well-known and we wonder how it will affect India. Cut off from a big market will they turn their eyes to India and try to cripple our mills? The repercussion is likely to be felt in India. Another question rises to the mind: will Australians now become one of the inferior races whose best interests are in the trusteeship of imperialists? After Wembley, that great gathering of the industries of the British Empire, this must be somewhat disappointing, because that Exhibition was meant to increase reciprocity in the Empire. It seems to have taught quite a different lesson.

Communication with Moon: "An American scientist is preparing to send a rocket to the moon," writes the Forward, "and engineers are of opinion that the ingenious construction has a chance of reaching its destination. If nothing else the American is ingenious, and it may not be very long before we have a regular rocket service to the moon. It will prove a safety valve for America's over-population. She is already afraid that the population will grow by natural increase and immigration to such an extent that the great continent will soon be overcrowded. With such a fine outlet there will be no need of Maria Stopes nor anti-Asiatic immigration laws. The beauty of the whole scheme is, that once they get there, they will remain there, probably because they will be so moonstruck. The only thing to fear is the lunar anti-earth immigration laws."

Madras Government's Grant for Village Libraries: We are glad to see that the Madras Government have sanctioned a non-recurring grant of rupees eight thousand for distribution among Village Panchayats for the organisation of village libraries.

Indian Civil Service: Of the 36 candidates selected for appointment in the Indian Civil Service at the open competitive examination held in London last August, 21 come from the United Kingdom and 15 are Indians.

NOTES

The Late Mr. A. Madhaviah : We received the news of the sudden death of the late Mr. A. Madhaviah with deep regret. He was attending a meeting of the Madras University, of which he was a distinguished graduate, when he suddenly collapsed. Only a few weeks ago Mr. Madhaviah had come to Bombay to receive his daughter on her return from England where she had taken a Teacher's Diploma. On that occasion he was good enough to call upon this writer and spoke in very disappointed tones of the response of the public to his efforts to spread sound views on social and general matters through the vernacular magazine, Panchamritam, which he was conducting. Besides, Mr. Madhaviah wrote several stories under the pen-name of Kusika, in English as well as Tamil, castigating the social evils of the Hindu community of South India. During his life he was a very vigorous force on the progressive side and his death leaves a distinct gap in the small band of men who are engaged in the struggle against evil. He was a man of strong convictions which brought him in conflict with his surroundings, but he always bore himself with unflinching courage. We would like to convey our sincere sympathy to the members of his family.

French Bombardment of Damascus: The details of the French bombardment of the ancient historic city of Damascus, the capital of Syria, on the 18th and 20th October, conveyed in the message dated 27th October from the Reuter's London office, are calculated to produce a revulsion of feeling among the civilized world against the wanton display of terrorism of which the French General Sarrail is apparently guilty. The reason of this display of French militarism appears to be the riots which followed the action of the French in parading the corpses of bandits in the streets—an action which no civilized Government can condone. It is also stated that attempts were made by organised bands to kidnap the French General. Whatever may be the crimes of the insurgents, there can be no justification for violating the elementary law whereby it was incumbent on the French General to inform the consular body and to give warning for the evacuation of women and children. It is stated that "hundreds of victims are lying in the streets and probably at least 2,000 persons were buried beneath the demolished buildings." In a cable message to the Central Khilafat Committee, the President of the Supreme Muslim Council, Jerusalem, says that 25,000 souls are buried in ruins and that the French are suppressing news. The destruction of the lives of innocent women and children simply for the sake of terrorising the insurgents in Syria is calculated to bring France into contempt in the eyes of civilized nations. The atrocities reported to have been perpetrated by the French have hardly any parallel except in the display of Prussian militarism in Belgium reported during the Great War. The Arab Executive Committee at Jerusalem has appealed to the whole Moslem world for the relief of the distress in Syria. As conflicting reports are appearing in the press about the whole situation, we think it is premature to comment further on the subject.

The Andhra Provincial Conference: We confess we are unable to congratulate the President, Mr. Bulusu Sambamurthy, and other Andhra leaders on the achievements of the Andhra Provincial Conference which was held at Masulipatam from 22nd to the 25th October. After a heated debate, it was decided that, in accordance with the Patna decision, the Andhra Provincial Congress Committee should be under the control of the Swaraj Party. It will be remembered that the Andhra districts have been the stronghold of the No-changers, though their numbers were decreasing every day, and the handing over of the Provincial Congress Committee to the Swarajists has, therefore, marked the complete elimination of the No-changers as a party in Congress politics. But the fact that there is a very strong feeling against the Swarajists behind the professions of the Andhra politicians is clear from some of the resolutions passed by the Conference. The two notable resolutions passed by overwhelming majorities are those relating to Civil Disobedience and Independence. The Independence resolution which was first brought forward by Maulana Hasrat Mohini in 1921 was strongly opposed by no less a person than Mahatma Gandhi, and has never had any chance of being accepted by the Congress at any time. The passing of the Independence resolution by the Andhra Provincial Conference in a light-hearted manner does not redound to the credit of Andhra politicians. So also is their resolution on Civil Disobedience. Civil Disobedience has been ruled out of practical politics, at least for the time being, and the passing of that resolution by 69 votes against 19 in spite of the opposition of veteran Andhra leaders like Andhraratnam Gopalakrishnayya and Unnava Lakshminarayana, clearly shows that the rank and file among the Andhra politicians are not in a mood to co-operate with the dominating party in Congress politics. These two resolutions betray a lack of conviction behind the professions of complete adherence to the Patna decision. The declaration of the President, Mr. Sambamurthy, in the course of his concluding speech, that he was in favour of the resolutions on Independence and Civil Disobedience, is really astonishing. We do not think that there will be many Congressmen who will share in the gratification of the President of the Andhra Provincial Conference that the Andhras have given a clear lead to the Cawnpore Congress.

Travancore Court Decision on Temple Entry: If the report of the correspondent of the Indian Daily Mail about the decision of Mr. C. Raman Thampi, the District and Sessions Judge of Kottayam, that by trespassing into the sanctum sanctorum of the temple the Ezhuvas have committed no offence, is true, then there is no exaggeration in saying that the demon of unapproachability has made its final exit from Travancore. We reprint the report of the correspondent of the Indian Daily Mail in the news columns It will be seen that this report makes a notable distinction from an earlier message which appeared in the press giving the news that the Travancore Government have withdrawn the prosecution, which had been long pending, of two gentlemen belonging to the unapproachable community for trespassing into a temple. Withdrawal of prosecution does not preclude the Durbar from prosecuting again for a similar offence, while a court decision to the effect that the temple-entry by the Ezhuvas is no offence decides once for all the question of legality in the matter of Ezhuvas entering the temple. It is stated by the Daily Mail correspondent that the Travancore Durbar had launched this prosecution as a test suit. In that case, there is no reason why the Durbar could not have gone up to the High Court and got a decision which would have had the force of law. It is clear, however, that there has recently been a conspicuous change in the attitude of the Travancore Durbar towards the so-called unapproachables. Instead of ranging themselves on the side of orthodoxy as the Government used to do before the "Vaikom Settlement", the police have been instructed to keep peace and see that the 'unapproachables" were not molested by the caste-Hindus There have been various instances, as will be seen from a report published in the news columns, in which the police have ranged themselves on the side of "unapproachables" against the attack of orthodox caste-Hindus when the former pass through any public road. The question of temple-entry was never thought of by the Satyagrahis in their struggle at Vaikom, and we have still some hesitation in believing that the case disposed off by the District Judge at Kottayam is correctly reported by the correspondent of the Indian Daily Mail. It is, however, perfectly clear that the day is not distant when the temple-entry and along with it the exit of unapproachability from Travancore will become a matter of fact. We offer our congratulations to Her Highness's Government on the courageous example they have set for all Kerala.

The Tragedy of Orissa: Under this heading, Mr. C. F. Andrews, that indefatigable and tireless worker in the cause of the poor and the suffering, contributes an article to the Bombay Chronicle. The account which Mr. Andrews gives of the havoc wrought by the floods in Orissa, is indeed tragic and heart-rending. It is all the same old story of men, women and children, helpless and hopeless, and almost on the verge of starvation. The first floods began in the month of June and even now the rains are still pouring on. Last year Orissa suffered from a drought, and this year it is flooded all over. Human suffering could go no further. It seems as though Nature had been unkind to poor Orissa. In the circumstances, one would like to know what the Government has been doing to relieve the flood-stricken and the needy and helpless. Though it is four months since the floods began, neither the Commissioner of the Division nor the Governor nor the Minister in Charge has ever thought it worth his while to pay a visit to the flood area and, yet, Government has not hesitated to issue a communication denying the 'exaggerated' reports of devoted public workers who are working far in the interior. Mr. Andrews very rightly asks what right the Government has to issue any communication at all when it does not know the real facts, and one cannot but agree with him that this is only the way of the Government to stifle public work itself and to dry up the tiny strickling stream of subscriptions for relief which was just beginning to flow. Indeed, but for Mr. Andrews' revelations, the public may not know anything of the distressed condition of Orissa at all. The Government relief works seem to be few and far between and do not seem to have touched even the fringe of the problem of relief. Nor do we hear of any non-official agency meting out relief. We hope the Servants of India Society, the Y. M C A., and the Ramakrishna Mission which did no small amount of work in connection with the South Indian Floods will come to the rescue, and that the public would contribute liberally towards Orissa famine relief.

Disqualification of Political Prisoners: It may be remembered that the Assembly in September last passed a resolution recommending the removal of all disqualifications which are at present imposed upon any person against whom a conviction for political offences for a period of more than one year is subsisting. Government, in reply, considers that, in the existing conditions of India, it would not be in the public interests to provide for any further relaxation than was made in July last. Government also takes refuge under the technical plea that it is open to a local Government with the approval of the Governor-General-in-Council to remove the disqualification on consideration of the circumstances in each case. This is indeed a fine response to the modest demands of the Assembly by Lords Reading and Birkenhead who are not tired of asking for signs of co-operation from the country! If the saner elements in the country are slowly beginning to lose faith in British justice, Government itself is largely to blame for it. The right of everyone to vote for the man he likes is one of the soundest canons of representative government, and to deny any one this primary right is only to make him lose faith in democracy as a political expedient.

Lady Reading: The news of the sudden illness of Her Excellency, Lady Reading, necessitating an operation, naturally caused much anxiety about Her Excellency's health and it is, therefore, with great relief that we learn she has been successfully operated upon and that she is rapidly improving. Her Excellency was the heart and soul of the Baby Weeks that were observed in various parts of the country and, besides, she was connected with many other social movements. Her Excellency has also been noted for her charities. Besides Rs. 10,000 which she has given to the Simla Municipality for providing shelter to the ricksha coolies who are in sore need of it, she has donated Rs. 1,000 to the Bombay Prarthana Samaj to be utilised for the Pandharpur Orphanage and Foundling Asylum.

Lord Reading's Successor: A Reuter's cable dated London, October 29th, says that it is officially announced that the Rt. Hon. E. F. L. Wood has been appointed Viceroy of India in succession to Lord Reading. The Rt. Hon. Edward Frederick Lindley Wood, who is the Minister of Agriculture in the present Cabinet, is the only surviving son of Viscount Halifax, and has been a member of Parliament since 1910. He was Parliamentary Under-Secretary for the Colonies in 1921-22, and President of the Board of Education from October 1922 to January 1924. He is 44 years of age, and is an M. A. of the Oxford University. He is the author of "Life of John Keble" in the Leaders of the Church series and joint author with Sir George (now Lord) Lloyd of "The Great Opportunity." So long as the Government of India remains a subordinate branch of Whitehall, a change in the Viceroyalty is only a matter of secondary importance so far as India is concerned.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, OCTOBER 31, 1925.

WANTED A CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAMME.

The decision of the All-India Congress Committee at its meeting held recently at Patna has, to use the words of Mahatma Gandhi in the course of his speech at Sitapur the other day, "converted the Congress into an essentially political organisation which would carry on its work through the Swaraj Party whose policy would be controlled by the Congress." It would have been more accurate if Mahatmaji had said that the Congress would be controlled by the Swaraj Party instead of saying, as he did, that the Swaraj Party would be controlled by the Congress. The Patna decision virtually marks the end of Mahatma Gandhi's dictatorship of the Congress and the beginning of the assumption of that dictatorship by Pandit Motilal Nehru. We do not wish to enter into any discussion on the constitutional propriety of the All-India Congress Committee in altering the constitution of the Congress, as this question has already been raised by experienced Congress politicians. We are now concerned only with the future programme of the Congress.

Readers of the Reformer need not be told that we have been among the consistent pporters of the Congress constructive programme chalked out at Bardoli. Indeed, it was the Bardoli programme that attracted us to the Congress. It was from the very outset quite clear that certain ultra-politicians in the Congress had very little faith in that programme, and that their silent acquiescence in it was due solely to their personal regard for Mahatma Gandhi. The discontent among the silent followers of Mahatmaji at what they termed "the conversion of the Congress into a social reform body" found expression not long afterwards in the utterances of the members of the Maharashtra Congress Party who, by the way, had very little faith in the non-co-operation programme as enunciated by Mahatma Gandhi. Then began a period of acrimonious controversy on the question of Council entry, and the Congress split itself into two sections as No-changers and Pro-changers. The latter under the leadership of the late Mr. C. R. Das and under the name of the Swaraj Party, gained considerable strength and were able to obtain the passive acquiescence of the Congress in their Council-entry programme. Although the new party was equally emphatic in dwelling on the necessity of working out the constructive programme, their Council programme which was one of "continuous, consistent and uniform obstruction", precluded them from working the constructive programme from within the Councils, and they had very little time to devote for work outside the Councils. The result was that the constructive programme had nothing but lip-sympathy from the Swaraj Party.

Now that the Congress has entirely passed into the hands of the Swaraj Party, the constructive programme, which unfortunately had been given no fair trial by any party in the Congress, has hardly any chance of being revived, unless the Swarajists make a distinct change in their Council programme. Writing in a recent issue of Young India, Mahatma Gandhi says that "all that the All-India Congress Committee resolution has done is to put the Council programme on a par with the constructive programme," and that he hopes that "the constructive programme will not become a subsidiary activity in the Congress." With the present "wrecking" programme of the Swaraj Party, we fail to understand how the Patna decision could be interpreted in the light in which Mahatmaji has done. For all practical purposes, the Congress will be utilised for purely electioneering purposes and the constructive programme will find no place except perhaps in a passing reference in the election speeches of the Swarajist candidates.

The present lull and indefiniteness in the Swaraj Party has apparently been taxing the patience of some of the leaders of the party itself. The controversy regarding the acceptance of office is still going on. The party is now without any definite programme. Mr. M. R. Jayakar's courageous and outspoken statement to the representative of the Indian Daily Mail is but a manifestation of the disgust felt by a not inconsiderable section of the party at the present state of laxity in the Swaraj Party. A revision of the programme of the Swaraj Party seems imminent. The Maharashtra Swarajists have been from the beginning in favour of responsive co-operation. The resolution of the Executive Committee of the Swaraj Party in Berar openly declaring in favour of responsive co-operation echoes the feeling in Swarajist circles in Berar and some parts of C. P. The feeling among the Maharashtra and Berar Swarajists on the need of a revision of the present policy of the party is so strong that it is unlikely that they would tamely submit to the dictation of Pandit Motilal Nehru. Mr. Kelkar's article in a recent issue of the Mahratta on the Tambe controversy is virtually a challenge to the Pandit whose talk about disciplinary action he pooh-poohs by saying that "the backs of us—Mr. Jayakar and myself (Mr. Kelkar —are broad enough to bear any disciplinary action that the Executive Committee or the Party may take against us". The difference between responsive co-operation and the programme of the Independents is practically nothing, and even the advanced section of the Liberals will not find it difficult to fall in line with the advocates of responsive co-operation. It remains to be seen whether the Swaraj Party will have the courage to face the realities and make a distinct departure from the impracticable wrecking policy to which it still professes its adherence.

We have heard it said by some critics of this journal that the Reformer has no policy in politics. We have been, as our readers are aware, consistent supporters of the constructive programme the working of which, as essential for laying the foundation of Swaraj, must be advanced by all possible means. We have never supported the 'obstructionist' policy of the Swarajists, and have always advocated Council-entry to advance further the constructive programme. Recent events go to strengthen our coviction that we have been right in the attitude we have consistently followed towards the question. Any impartial observer will be convinced that every item of the constructive programme—enrollment of members to the Congress, popularising khaddar, organising national schools, temperance, organising village panchayats, inter-communal unity and collection of funds for Tilak Swaraj Fund—has been neglected. The number of members under the various provincial committees which the reports of those committees revealed, showed that the membership, instead of increasing, had decreased by more than half. The waning of the enthusiasm for khaddar resulting in the ultimate abandonment of the yarn franchise speaks volumes about the popularising of khaddar and the spinning wheel. The frequent reports of Hindu-Mahomedan fracas, and the candid declaration of Mahatma Gandhi of his inability to solve the Hindu-Moslem question, show what advance has been made towards bringing about inter-communal unity. The perfect equanimity with which the Bombay Government's attitude towards Mr. Pradhan's Local Option Bill has been viewed by the Congress politicians—there was not even a passing reference to this in the public meetings held recently, not to speak of the failure to convene a public meeting for the purpose—does not show any anxiety on their part to advance the cause of temperance. With the exception of Mahatma Gandhi, nobody does any practical work for the removal of untouchability.The reports of the national schools, several of which have ceased to exist, reveal a sad state of affairs. It will thus be seen that not a single item of the constructive programme has been worked out successfully. Much precious time has been wasted in political recriminations. In this connection, we would specially commend to the attention of the Swarajists the speech made by Dr. P. C. Ray at Nagpur in the course of which he laments the absence of constructive work and nation-building activities, and expresses his disagreement with the Swaraj Party for spending all its energy and money in party organisation exclusively for the purpose of defeating Government. Everybody recognises the need for unity. Speaking the other day at Mayavaram, Sir Sankaran Nair, who is standing as a candidate for the Council of State, has emphasised the necessity of unity among all political parties. The constructive programme with slight modifications affords a common ground on which all parties can unite. The evolution of a programme to advance the much-neglected constructive work is the need of the hour, and it is to be hoped that all patriotic people will address themselves to this task.

THE LOCARNO CONFERENCE.

With the adoption of the Security Pact at Locarno European politics enter a new phase. The Locarno Conference, though it cannot be called an unqualified success, undoubtedly marks an important landmark in the history of Europe. For the first time after the War, the Allies and Germany met not as victor and vanquished, but as equals. After the Armistice, various Peace Conferences were convened by British statesmen, but all these proved abortive, for Germany had not ceased to be regarded as the arch-enemy of Europe and European civilization, and distrust and suspicion still swayed European politics to a remarkable degree. But recently, however, there has come about a changed outlook in the mentality of the European nations, and it was this that in no small measure contributed to the success of the Conference. The two chief powers upon whom European peace depended were France and Germany. France, as the worst sufferer in the War, cherished the bitterest animosities against Germany and tried to wring out the last pie from Germany in the shape of reparations, and it was this ambition of hers that led her to the Rhineland which enterprise subsequently proved to be a blunder of the first magnitude. Recent French reverses at Morocco coupled with her war indebtedness to America and Britain have, however, convinced France of the futility of her policy and have brought her face to face with hard facts. To Germany also is in no small measure due the credit for the success of the Conference. At one time it was held that the election of Von Hindenburg as Chancellor portended a disastrous future not only for Germany but also for Europe. But, the recent conduct of Von Hindenburg has removed any such apprehension. It was Germany that took the initiative in the Conference and no less an authority than Mr. Chamberlain has complimented the German delegates to the Conference on their high courage and intelligence. Great Britain herself had long ago become convinced of the foolishness of the policy of isolating Germany from the rest of the world and was only waiting for the earliest opportunity of reinstating her as a world power in order to maintain the balance of power that was almost disturbed by the aggressive attitude of France. These, then, were the various factors that made possible the settlement arrived at at Locarno.

The Treaty concluded at Locarno includes a Mutual Guarantee Treaty, Arbitration Conventions and Agreements concerning the Western and Eastern frontiers of Germany. It guarantees the inviolability of the Germano-Belgian and Germano-French frontiers. The parties concerned definitely pledge themselves not to begin war against one another and agree that, where the unanimous decision of the League Council and the Assembly calls for such an action, neither party can initiate bellicose measures. Britain, as a contracting party, guarantees her support to Germany if

she is attacked by France and Belgium and vice versa. Although Germany had shown an intention of recognising the Western frontiers as de-limited by the Treaty of Versailles, she had never shown signs of respecting her Eastern frontiers. France, on the other hand, cleverly tried to limit Germany's Eastern frontiers by her treaties with Poland and Czecho-Slovakia. The Pact, however, gives a blow to French designs in this direction by conceding to Germany the right of separate treaties, thus making the Eastern frontiers subject to future negotiation and settlement. The net results of the Pact, therefore, are as follows. Germany is to be admitted to the League of Nations. She gives up Alsace-Lorraine and in return gets the Rhineland as well as facilities for raising industrial loans on comparatively easier terms, while France gets the support of Britain in case of an invasion from Germany which she very much dreads. And, as is evident, it is Britain that takes up the greatest responsibility by her alliance with both France and Germany. The fact that the Dominions and India are not parties to the Pact is a recognition on the part of Britain of the right of each Dominion to decide for itself one way or the other. The adoption of the Pact, however, cannot ensure permanent peace, owing to its obvious limitations. In the first place, the latest telegrams show that the Pact is meeting with heavy opposition at the hands of the Nationalists in Germany who are dissatisfied with the surrendering away of Alsace-Lorraine. A general election is considered to be the only solution in the circumstances, owing to the difficulty of getting a majority in the Reichstag for the Pact. Secondly, as compared with the Geneva Protocol which was dropped on account of Britain's objections, the Pact falls far too short. Whereas the Protocol included Europe and Asia in its operation, the Pact limits itself to Europe, and as long as European nations continue to hold colonies in Asia and Africa, mutual bickerings and rivalries are bound to exist. And lastly, until and unless another Disarmament Conference on the initiative of America puts a stop to the competition in armies and armaments, there can be no talk of world peace at all. That the jubilations which followed the conclusion of the Pact were too premature and unjustified, came only too true almost the next day. Scarcely had the Locarno Pact been concluded before Greece and Bulgaria involved themselves in a frontier dispute. The Balkans have always been traditionally noted for their inflammability and have often been the cockpit of political intrigues. It was a shot fired at Serajavo that imbroiled the whole of Europe, nay, the world, in a war, the effects of which are still reverberating. Unlike in the case of Mussolini's high-handed act of wresting Corfu from Greece, it is gratifying to see that the League of Nations has summoned courage to establish its authority as an instrument of peace and arbitration in international disputes by interfering in the matter, and it is to be hoped that the good work done at Locarno will not be undone.

INDUSTRY AND THE IDEAL OF SERVICE.

Except in the realm of natural resources and complete public utilities, where state control is needed (and often outright ownership), and the realm of original enterprise, exploration, exploitation and invention, where individual control is desirable, these two movements of the consumer and the producer, the one for use, the other for beaty, would absorb between them the functions of organization, ownership, and management. With the elimination of the overhead control of these great middlemen, the whole industrial structure would rest on the valid, democratic base of consumers and producers. In practice, of course, these movements are yet in their infant stage, and still have far to go before they can bind society together with the ties of service. But even then, the industrial problem is by no means solved. Better than a division of the industrial order into five groups, is this division into two; but even this is one too many. How can the interests of consumer and producer be reconciled? Both parties are attempting to own the machinery and control the management of production. Both are more or less organizers. To be sure, they agree in stressing the soundness of the product: the consumer naturally appreciates the quality of the commodity more than the mere coupon cutter; and the guild worker naturally takes more pride in the output of his work than does the wage slave. But in the primary matter of wages, the interests of the two groups seem opposed: a manager responsible to a consumer's movement, as well as a manager responsible to a company of interest-reaping stockholders, wants to minimize the cost of operation by restricting the remuneration of the workers; whereas a manager responsible to a producer's guild, as well as a private enterpriser, wants to sell his product at the maximum rate, so as to increase the remuneration of the workers. Thus in the realm of consumption, as also in the realm of production, the industrial problem is being solved,—peace and prosperity, harmony and creative zeal are being achieved through the ideal of service. But in view of the present antagonism between consumer and producer, there seems to be a limit to the practical application of service, and a need either for compromise or the subjection of one party to the control of the other!

Yes, there seems to be a limit to service; but in reality, the limit vanishes. In reality, the consumer is benefited when the producer is liberally remunerated, for only by a liberal income can the producer attain the security, comfort, and brimming health and spirits that will release the vital springs of brisk co-operation and invaluable originality that will sooner or later lower the cost of the product. And in reallity, the producer is benefited when the consumer is satisfied with the price of the product, for a satisfactory price, by increasing the volume of sale will increase the income up to a certain point,

and after that, increase the security of future income. Moreover, after reaching the level of comfort, man craves not money essentially, but success. Money is merely a means; success is the end. For some time past, men have struggled for money, simply because success has been measured in terms of money. But with the elimination of privilege with its unearned millions, success will come to be measured less and less by money, and more and more by the far-flung prestige won by the value of the output as determined by its quality, low price, durability, or originality.

The real interests of consumer and producer, then, are harmonious. The chief problem is to get each party to see the truth! There is no limit to the practicality of service. The chief problem is to get men to use it! And here we are reminded of the basic law of human life, that service is practical only when brotherhood is realized. Service is practical among consumers, for they have been drawn together in brotherhood through the common desperate need of keeping the wolf from the door. Service is practical among producers, for they have been drawn together in brotherhood through the common desperate need of wresting freedom from their employers. Likewise, when consumer and producer awake to the desperate need of saving civilization itself from collapse, they will come together in brotherhood to fight the common enemies of man. And just as consumers' co-operation and productive guilds are expressions in service of brotherhood already achieved, so also will this coming, wider brotherhood be expressed in an organization of the industrial world as a whole, in some sort of a new state, which will include as integral functions of its system of flexible and democratic councils not only associations of consumers and industrial producers, but also those of professional scientific, and artistic producers, as well as the massive institution of public service.

Here, in the light of free discussion from all points of view, waste will be avoided, crises anticipated, and unity of interest discovered. Party antagonism will be reconciled, and a group consciousness achieved even more intense than the spiritual unity of the primitive clan. There is no telling what new and effective organizations of industry will arise from such creative interplay of interests; but if present progressive tendencies are fulfilled, it is likely that ownership will be, in the main, a function of the consumer, management a function of the producer, while organization will be developed jointly. The public services and consumers' co-operation will continue to specialize in community systems and staple commodities while the productive guilds and private individuals will be free to branch out into all sorts of unique creation. The motives for service will be not only recognition of mutual gain, interest in workmanship, delight in worthy output, and desire for social approval, but also the dear love of brethren, country, and humanity.

Why should we paint the working of the new state in such rosy hues, when the working of the present state often gives cause for despair? For the simple reason that the two states are radically different in principle. The present state is a hold-over of the military empire, cut up into almost separate segments by competitive nationalities, and modified considerably by a wide extension of the franchise, and humanitarian sentiment. It is a government of the people, sometimes for the people, but hardly ever by the people. It still retains the ideal of the conquering class that supreme authority must centre above industrial life, instead of in the midst of industrial life. Since now the practical life of humanity centres in the life of industry, the authority of the overhead state is necessarily largely irresponsible, unwieldy, overbearing, and sometimes even corrupt. No wonder government seems abstract to the typical citizen, and "politics," either unworthy of his interest, or beyond his reach! The new state, on the contrary, arising peacefully and constructively out of the husk of the old, springs essentially from the every-day life of the people; and is based therefor upon industry instead of leisure; upon hewers of wood and drawers of water, rather than upon their conquerors; upon service, and not privilege. Its policies will arise from retail store, workshop, school room, laboratory, and study; and its representatives will be men and women personally known to the voters: but its scope will be as wide as the planet, and as deep as human need.

With such a different basis, the new state will certainly work differently from the old; and the hope that the ideal of service will actually guide industry is surely not vain. For service, far from being impractical, is the only practical method of industrial organization, the only method that will solve the problem by bringing harmony out of discord. Only in the realms where service has already been embodied, have turmoils been settled. The fringes of the present order, where peace and progress are astonishing, are saturated with service: the very word has become an advertizing slogan. Strife and stupid waste continue because the fabric itself has not yet been immersed in service. But service flows only from brotherhood. Our main task, therefore, is to win brotherhood by illuminating the desperate need for it in the present distressing order of competitive privilege, and by manifesting the supreme source of it in the life, teaching, and triumphant death and exaltation of him who is the brother of all.

WANTED PRACTICAL ACTION, NOT LIP-SYMPATHY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

About two months ago the Provincial Social Conference was held in Poona. As usual the proceedings consisted, apparently, merely of making speeches and passing resolutions, advocating, amongst other things, the following wholesale reforms, viz., (1) prevention of child marriage; (2) amelioration of widows' lot; (3) amelioration of the plight of the depressed classes; (4) prohibition of drink; (5) stoppage of the sale of brides and bridegrooms; (6) abolition of caste; (7) give and take in social and religious matters; (8) minimum marriageable ages of boys and girls to be 21 and 18, (9) establishment of Infant Welfare Centres; (10) widow re-marriage; (11) Children's Protection Bill; (12) women's education; (13) increase of rights and privileges of women; (14) prevention of polygamy; (15) divorce; (16) restriction of ceremonial expenditure; and probably several other reforms not reported. Truly a formidable and impressive (?) list!

Now, what I should like to ask is, how many of those, who attended the Conference, individually made any attempt to carry out any of the resolutions during the year since the preceding Conference, and what effort the Conference as a body made towards the same end. I am inclined to judge by resolution No. (3) with regard to which the subscription list of the Poona Depressed Classes Mission Society reveals that none, or practically none, of those who attended the Conference contributed a single pie to that struggling institution, whose very existence depends entirely upon monetary support. No amount of cheap patronage or well-wishing can take the place of money, which is their sole means of obtaining education, and thereby emancipation. It remains to be seen whether the non-Poonaites at the Conference contribute to any similar society elsewhere. The value of resolution No. (3), therefore, is largely nil. Consequently, why not omit it altogether at the next Conference? Judged in the same way I wonder how many of the other resolutions would require to be brought up at that Conference. Many people in India, including even social reformers, seem to think, strange to say, that charitable institutions can exist upon blessings alone. But those actually in charge of institutions, however grateful they may be for kind wishes, and however encouraged they may feel by the progress of views of the population that such wishes indicate, know quite well that neither their institutions, nor any others, could exist for a single day in the absence of hard cash.

There are a few devoted men in Poona and elsewhere, who have given their whole lives to the cause of social reform, and who have pauperized themselves in consequence. Nothing more can be expected of them. It is due to them, mainly, if not entirely, that those branches of social reform in which they are engaged have made the progress they have.

Incidentally resolution No. (8) is really impossible. In no other country in the world would anybody propose such extraordinary minimum ages. Stranger still, the proposal was passed!

What is the good of proposing and passing these numerous resolutions year after year, if, as in one case of resolution No. (3), very few persons make any attempt to carry them out. Everybody has long known quite well what social reformers and so-called social reformers say they believe in: so why reiterate it from year to year ad nauseam?

Nobody has any right to talk about resolutions he or she makes little or no attempt to practise. Resolutions should therefore be restricted to those the promoters of the Conference have made, or propose to make, an honest attempt to carry out. On this basis only, if I take the liberty of making what I consider a constructive proposal, should future Conferences be held. A Conference would, therefore, consist firstly, of a mutual stock-taking, exchange of practical experiences and of plans for future action; secondly deciding as to whether any ground won in any branch of social reform had been sufficiently consolidated to make further advance in that branch advisable; and thirdly, investigating whether, in any other branch of reform, sufficient progress had been made to ensure that further progress would be automatic, thereby justifying the consideration of fresh branches of reform.

No single individual, nor even a whole Conference, can possibly take up to any advantage all the numerous branches of social reform referred to in the resolutions of the Provincial Conference, and remarks should be restricted accordingly.

In short, to hold a large Conference every year mainly to talk about and pass as many and as various resolutions as possible, and then for a year to make very little attempt generally to carry them out is a curious pastime. However, if, strange to say, it amuses the great majority of those who practise it, they are, of course, entitled to procure their diversion as they prefer; but they can hardly thereby expect to be taken seriously.

"THE RISHIS AND THE BRAHMINS".

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I have been watching with some amusement the epistolary gambols of a Calcutta correspondent (Our correspondent apparently refers to Mr. Amritlal Majumdar and not to our Calcutta correspondent—I. S. R.) of yours. But his latest provokes me to put in a word to supply what I feel you ought yourself to have added to correct such queer notions of India's past—of her history as well as pre-history—as he has betrayed.

Sir, I happen by birth to be a Brahman (it rhymes with German, not vermin; so have a care, O printer, you don't make it Brahmin!)

And I suppose I have so little or (if you will) so much of the Brahman yet in me, that I feel bound to treasure the legend which represents the Brahman Parasburama, or Rama of the Axe, the mad punisher of the Kshatriyas, as having been finally defeated and overthrown by the 'Non-Brahman' Rama, son of Dasharaths, while yet a boy in his teens, and which, what is 'curiouser,' treats both these Ramas as avatars of the same Vishnu. On the contrary, when the latter Rama, a Non-Brahman, is made on the complaint of a Brahman to slay another Non-Brahman—the Shudra named Shambuka—for usurping the 'twice-borns' privilege of tapasya, I am ashamed of the Brahman complainant, am sorry for the Non-Brahman theocrat, and as a rationalist am bound to venerate the Shudra-muni's memory as that of India's and perhaps the world's first martyr on record.

But 'curiouser,' than all is the fact that this theocrat of Rama II is equally an avatar of the same Vishnu as the agnostic Buddha, the ignorer of the Vedas, and preacher of Ahimsa. While the theocratic Krishna, another avatar of Vishnu, had a devotee—or, as some say, half an avatar of him—in the person of the venerable patriarch Bhishma, the Kshatriya who treated so shamefully a young Shudra named Ekalavya,—we have on the other hand the example of the a-theocratic or 'secularist' Buddha's dispensation producing in King Ashoka the beau ideal of religious toleration and humanitarianism, not for ancient India alone, but for all the world, the cherished and cherishable case of a convert

True to himself, without the zeal
Of the fanatic, kind to bird and fish,
To beast and man alike, the morning star
Of reasoned faith, in regal splendour Beneficent.

A SIDE—LIGHT ON PROTECTION IN INDIA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

When it is announced that the Government of India is not opposed to give Protection to certain industries to make possible the industrial regeneration of India and when the Tariff Board has actually come into being, Indian leaders of thought, keeping before them "the brighter side of life in protected countries, rapid industrial growth and the consequential accession of wealth" expected that similar would be the results here, this is quite natural, but in their enthusiasm, they signally failed to remember that "the Protective system is being introduced in India while she is still in British leading strings." Perhaps, they thought that safeguards like the insistence upon British capitalists, who set up industries in India, to register their companies here only and to include a certain number of Indians upon the Board of Directors would minimise greatly the chances of draining away wealth and would fairly whittle down their competition in the Market.

But the history of Protection in India unfolds a sad tale. In spite of the safeguards the Fiscal Commission had recommended and the declared policy of the Government to support indigenous industries by giving financial aid and other means, the Government, it appears, is on the wrong track. That is the impression indelibly left on one's mind after a fair perusal of Mr. N. C. Kelkar's speech, in the Assembly, in support of paper industry from grass, bamboo being already recognised as a proper raw material, published in the Mahratta of Sept. 27. In his able plea, he referred to the letter of "an enterprising industrialist" in Maharashtra who wrote to him that he was going to launch a paper factory in Maharashtra, that the Bombay Government had allowed him certain concessions to use forest grasses in the Khandesh district, that his scheme would require a capital of 30 lakhs and that the Tariff Board only wanted to give financial aid to a European firm which would make paper only from bamboo. As this information is not so far contradicted to the best knowledge of this writer, by the authorities concerned, it is only just and proper to conclude that under the garb of Protection, the Government of India is extending liberally its financial aid to those shrewd British capitalists who, fearing a near or remote transfer of political power from Britons to Indians, want to set up industries here and add "to their wealth at a much faster rate than would be possible through the investment of the same capital in Britain, where labour is much dearer and more unruly than is the case with Indian workers."

That is why British industrialists in India are protectionist and it is no wonder that the Government of India initiated Protection. This is no mere assumption. The opinion of St. Nihal Singh on Indian Protection will much clarify the atmosphere and lay before us the naked fact underlying it. Writing in the "Irish Statesman" he says:

"During my recent Indian tour I was surprised to see the rapidity with which mining licenses were being acquired by British individuals and syndicates, and sites were being bought for building mills, factories, and workshops, and with which British firms were setting up chemical laboratories, iron and steel mills, cement works and the like. I found these British industrialists strongly protectionist, and have little doubt that, but for the demands put forward by them, the bill which has been framed to give Protection to certain classes of Indian Steel would never have emerged from the Legislative Department of the Government of India until that Government had ceased to be preponderatingly British in personnel, as it is to-day."

The observations of St. Nihal Singh go only to prove the contention that Protection is not mainly for Indians; it is mostly intended for Britons who set up industries here. This is the side-light which is now being thrown on Protection in India.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN INDIA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

I would be glad if some one of your talented correspondents to the Indian Social Reformer would give us a brief history of "Compulsory Education in India." I am sure it would be most interesting reading to those of us who are somewhat ignorant of the subject.

THE BOMBAY TOTALISATOR BETTING BILL.

PRESS COMMENTS.

(The Swarajya, Madras.)

"The law could not make men moral," observed the Government member in the Bombay Council, when the Council urged that betting at race courses should be discouraged, and the third enclosure abolished. His saying reminds us of Mr. Bumble. "The law" Mr. Bumble firmly believed, "was an ass." Dicken's famous beadle was, however, what the Bombay Government member is not, a privileged individual. He was in the happy position of critic, without even the obligation which attaches to critics of the Opposition, to make good their criticisms, by a demonstration of their own, if need be. To the same category belong criminals and other types of offenders whose doings do not come within the four corners of the law. Irresponsibility being the badge of their tribe, they can make the utmost of that irresponsibility and take liberties with the law—in word as well as deed. Government members, unhappily for our Bombay exponent, are less luckily placed and are not the same characterless libertines. Being the guardians of the law, in a sense its makers, they cannot very well figure as its traducers. The law, we readily grant, cannot make men moral. But can anybody deny that a certain wholesome terror of the law makes men conform to the legal demarcations of outward mortality? It is a travesty of the times that legality does not always square with morality, and the highest calls of morality sometimes transgress into the illegal sphere. But are these reasons for letting bad be, and allowing it to become an enemy to the good? At any rate, there can be no excuse, because men are what they are, and the law is what it is, for casting temptations in the people's way. We might be unable, with the utmost rigour, to combat the betting craze. Is it not all the more reason, why the existing facilities for the evil should be curbed and curtailed, so that it might not spread further than it has already done?

(The Siad Observer.)

The third reading of the Bill to impose a tax on totalisator betting was passed. The objection to this Bill pressed from many quarters that Government thereby creates for itself a vested interest in gambling or becomes a partner of the Turf Club by taking part of the gains is as strong as ever. Money gained by Government by peoples' gambling on the race course, like the money derived from the drink traffic, forms part of the fiscal arrangements of the presidency, and it would be very difficult in future for any member to introduce legislation to stop the enormous evils of gambling on the race course, much less prohibit them altogether. The Governor will refuse to allow any such legislation to be introduced on the ground that it interferes with a source of income to the presidency without any other alternative source being proposed and accepted by the Legislative Council. On the same ground, he refused permission to Mr Pradhan's Local Option Bill this year. A gambler on the race-course thus obtains the status of being a respectable citizen and a contributor to the coffers of the Government; and the same gambler, if he indulges in his pastime in a secret place, gets fined or imprisoned. A government that has excise and gambling revenue as its comfortable standby in balancing its budget cannot earn the respect of thinking citizens.

(The Tribune, Lahore).

The Bombay Government has introduced a bill for imposing a tax on totalisator betting. This tax is, it is said, to be levied for raising additional revenue needed to carry on the administration. A considerable body of the public, however, have objected to this form of raising revenue on the ground that it will still further encourage gambling instead of discouraging it. Mr. A. N. Surve, M.L.C., has written a note of dissent to the Bill in which he points out how it is likely to spread gambling at horse races and still further demoralise the people. At present while gambling is prohibited by law, it is practised in various undetected forms and sometimes in forms that are officially treated as harmless. The Bombay Government's attempt to levy a tax on betting will, it is considered, secure legal sanction to gambling. If this really happens, as Mr. Surve apprehends, the proposed Bill is clearly a dangerous one and should not be passed.

THE SIND HINDU PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE.

Among the resolutions passed by the 1st Sind Hindu Provincial Conference which was recently held under the presidentship of Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Bar.-at-Law, M.L.C., were the following:

Depressed Classes.

(a) This Conference strongly appeals to all Hindus to treat the depressed classes as their brethren and to allow them all human rights in Hindu society and to help in the uplift of their condition.

(b) The Conference at the same time appeals to members of these classes to give up their unclean habits and to wake up to the necessity of reforming their condition and to avail themselves of the opportunities offered to them for their educational, economic and religious uplift.

(c) The Conference is strongly of opinion that the Government has practically neglected the education of these classes in Sind and therefore urges upon it to provide more special facilities for their education such as the award of more scholarships, for distribution of books, stationery, clothing, etc.

Monogamous Marriage Bill.

This Conference supports the principles of Mr. Durgdas B. Advani's Monogamous Marriage Bill to enable the Hindus of this province to restrict themselves to monogamy, but is strongly of opinion that the bill to be effective should be compulsorily applied to all Hindus of Sind.

This Conference takes strong exception to the amendment carried in the Select Committee by the casting vote of the Chairman that the Bill should apply to Hindus only so long as they remain Hindus. The Conference calls upon the Hindu members of the Council to offer uncompromising opposition to the amendment which, in the opinion of the Conference, is sure to defeat the object of the bill.

Registration of marriages in Sind.

This Conference strongly protests against the proposed introduction in the Bombay Legislative Council of a bill for the compulsory registration of marriages in the province of Sind. This Conference is of opinion that the introduction of such a bill is extremely inopportune and ill-advised and may likewise cause an interference with notions of Hindu community as regards the nature and sanctity of marital rights and obligations.

Social Reconstruction.

(a) This Conference condemns the practice of disposing of girls in marriage by receiving money and appeals to panchayats to put a stop to this practice.

(b) This Conference further appeals to the panchayats to do their utmost in preventing women from going to Muslim Pirs and fakirs and tombs.

(c) The Conference further requests the panchayats to set apart a portion of their income for education of children, for teaching of Hindi and for development of physical culture.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

A Notable Contradiction: We are glad to note that Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, the President-elect of the Cawnpore Congress, talking to a press reporter at Delhi, has contradicted the news of her son's conversion to Islam as reported in the Muslim Outlook of Lahore and to which we drew attention sometime back in our news columns. We wonder whether our contemporary has now changed its opinion of Mrs. Naidu.

Temple Entry No Offence: A Travancore Decision: The Indian Daily Mail's Cochin correspondent writes to that paper under date 24th October: An important decision which will give a fresh impetus to the temple-entry movement as also the campaign for the removal of untouchability and unapproachability in Malabar, has just been pronounced by Mr. C. Raman Thampi, District and Sessions Judge of Kottayam, in what is known as the Poonthottam Temple-entry case. Poonthottam is a tiny village near Vaikom which has a dilapidated Siva Temple. Mr. T. K. Madhavan, Editor, Desabhimani and a prominent Ezhava leader and Mr. Thevan, a Pulaya, both of whom belong to the ranks of non-caste Hindus whose approach to temples is forbidden by custom, were charged by the Government with having trespassed into the temple premises and thereby polluted the deity. Both the accused were after a protracted enquiry, during which a number of priests and temple authorities cited chapter and verse in support of distance pollution, committed to the sessions to take their trial. The Sessions Judge has now acquitted them finding that, in having trespassed into the 'sanctum sanctorum' of the temple, they have committed no offence whatsoever. The Travancore Durbar had launched this prosecution as a test-suit and the present decision is in consonance with the policy now laid down by the Durbar that, in the eye of the law, no invidious distinctions are to be perpetuated between the various sections of Hindus, caste or non-caste. Soon after this decision, over 50 Pulayas who are among the lowest section of the depressed classes were led by Messrs. T. K. Madhavan, Thevan and other prominent workers to the precincts of the Thiruvarpu Temple, another strong-hold of orthodox Hindus, in assertion of their right to use the water-ways leading to the place. The Police rendered them the assistance needed, and the party returned peacefully after passing along hitherto forbidden routes.

The Viceroy's Donation to Seva Mandir: It is understood that Mrs. Mathiri Mathew of Kunnamkulam has received from their Excellencies Viceroy and Countess of Reading a donation of Rs. 1,000 (one thousand) towards the construction of the "Seva Mandir" the foundation stone of which was laid by Mr. C. F. Andrews on 1st January 1925. The Seva Mandir is a house for sheltering helpless and destitute children and orphans of all classes and religions, It is under the management of the Y. W. C. A., Kunnamkulam.

Satyagraha in Mysore: The Mysore Chronicle writes:—The 'Kaniyar' community in Tirumakoodli Narasipur have resolved upon offering Satyagraha to be able to persuade the caste Hindus to admit them into the temple of Narasimha. As the community's name indicates, they were originally a tribe of soothsayers, but under the stress of modern conditions, many persons belonging to the community have become cultivators, or mill-hands, or have engaged themselves in other occupations. Their neighbours have, however, chosen to keep them aloof, and treated them as untouchables. Our readers may be aware that when matters came to a head due to disabilities imposed upon the 'Kaniyar' mill-hands resident in Banglore by refusing to give them access to water-taps, Mr. Tagadur Ramachandra Rao, an ardent and silent social worker, was invited to arbitrate. Mr. Ramachandra Rao went into the question with commendable thoroughness, and toured in South India to collect authoritative Shastraic and orthodox Hindu opinion regarding the social status of the Kaniyar community. The verdict was that the community should not be treated as untouchables. About a month ago, this community convened a conference in T. Narasipur, under the presidency of Mr. M. Venkatakrishniah of Mysore, and soon after gave intimation of their intention of reporting to the Narasimha temple for worship. The temple authorities seem, however, to have felt flurried and called in police help to prevent any possible disturbance to peace. The Kaniyars have resolved, we hear, to sit dharana in front of the temple till such time as the 'superior' castes will yield. It is a contest that will be watched with interest. We trust that the 'Kaniyars' will soon earn their rights by strict adherence to non-violence, and win over by love those who consider themselves their enemies.

Anti-Untouchability Campaign in Travancore: A correspondent writes to the Hindu:—Thiruvarpu is a major temple situated three miles west of Kottayam and ten miles south of Vaikom in North Travancore. The roads round this temple are still closed against non-caste Hindus, though open to non-Hindus. Worse still, the waterway lying round the temple though open to the Ezavahs, is closed to Pulayas. A meeting of non-caste Hindus, with Mr. T. K. Madhavan in the chair, was held at Thiruvarpu on Tuesday last to take steps to get the temple roads opened to the untouchables. The Police attended the meeting. After passing the necessary resolutions, Mr. T. K. Madhavan in company with Mr. K. N. Panikkar, B. A., B. L., and Mr. Sankaran Nampudripad, led some Pulayas in a canoe through the prohibited waterway. Mr. R. Achuthan Pillai, B.A, B.L., Police Inspector, followed the Pulayas in a separate canoe. When the Pulayas approached the temple's bathing ghat, a Tamil Brahmin came out with a stick in hand and objected to Pulayas passing through, but they passed on and returned after passing through all the prohibited parts. The Brahmin kept on cursing the Pulayas and the party. Mr. B.N. Pillai, District Superintendent of Police, went to Thiruvarpu on Wednesday morning and made arrangements for the prevention of breach of peace and returned. The puja in the temple is going on without interruption. Pulayas are every day passing freely through the waterway.

All-India Philosophical Congress: An Associated Press message dated Calcutta, 27th October, says:—The All-India Philosophical Congress will be held in Calcutta next December under the auspices of the Calcutta Philosophical Society and the Calcutta University. The Working Committee, consisting of a number of professors of the University, will be in charge of the arrangements. Dr. Rabindranath Tagore will preside over the session. Many distinguished scholars from all parts of India are expected to attend the session. Already a number of important contributions have been received by the Secretary. The Congress will begin on Saturday 19th December.

An English Lady Disciple of Mahatma Gandhi: A Reuter's cable says that Miss Madeleine Slade, the daughter of Admiral Sir Edmond Slade, ex-Commander-in-Chief of the East Indies, has left Paris for India. She intends to devote the rest of her life and personal fortune in furthering the interests of Mr. Gandhi whom she describes as her Master. Miss Madeleine spent one year in Paris studying Mr. Gandhi's theories in the closest association with Romain Rolland, the French-Swiss Pacifist and one of the very fervent supporters of Mr. Gandhi in Europe.

Andhra Anti-Untouchability Conference: Along with the session of the Andhra Political Conference recently the Andhra Anti-Untouchability Conference was held under the Presidentship of Karyakarta Ganapati Sastry, a great Vedic scholar, who emphasised that untouchability has no sanction in the Vedas and would challenge any Pandit to disprove his statement and exhorted all to remove the curse. Resolutions urging the abolition of untouchability were adopted and a small committee was appointed to organise a Pandit's Parishad for concerting measures to blot out untouchability.

Marriage Reform Among Nambudiris: The orthodox Nambudiri Brahmin community who are the wealthiest inhabitants of the west coast, are at present greatly exercised in mind over a piece of social reform which the youthful section has been attempting to introduce. According to custom, only the eldest male member of a Nambudiri family is allowed to marry, other male members entering into a fugitive called "sambandham" with women of non-Brahmin castes, such as the Nairs, the alliance terminating at will. Under the auspices of the Nambudiri Young Men's Association, younger members of Nambudiri families have now been marrying women of their own community, in spite of vehement orthodox opposition. Considerable feeling has been aroused as a result of the President of the Nambudiri Conference and of the Nambudiri Family Regulations Committee, who is a younger member of a Nambudiri family in Malabar, disregarding the tenets of the Association and entering into an alliance with a non-Nambudiri woman, the daughter of a retired official. Meetings are being held in Nambudiri centres placing on record their "vehement repugnance at the action of a gentleman setting at naught the sacred aims and objects of the Nambudiri community." Another resolution asks other communities not to welcome or encourage Nambudiri youths who embark on "Sambandham" alliances.

Buddhist Mission to India: An Associated Press message states: Dr. Heiyavitarne accompanied by Swami Satchitananda Saraswathi and a large number of Buddhist priests arrived in Madras 24th October by the Ceylon Boat Mail from Ceylon. The Doctor has been deputed by the Buddhists of Ceylon with the High Priest at their head, to meet and discuss with the Hindu-Mahasabha, the question of Budha-Gaya. He will probably meet them at Patna and discuss with them the handing over of the temple into the hands of Buddhists. The Doctor has also been requested by the Buddists of Ceylon, to meet the authorities of the Government of India and will probably meet Sir John H. Marshall, Kt., C.I.E, M.A., Director-General of Archæology in India of the Government of India of Education to discuss the question of building the Vihara at Sharanath which work has now been suspended. The visit this year of the large number of Buddhist priests from Ceylon to Budha-Gaya, the Doctor explained, was significant. For the first time after nearly 700 years Buddhist priests have been sent from Ceylon to Budha-Gaga to hold the Wass ceremony (Chatur Masya). The ceremony will be performed according to Buddhist rites at the end of this month. The Doctor and the Buddhist priests accompanying him will leave Madras for Calcutta en route to Budha-Gaya.

Anti-Untouchability Conference: The Madras Provincial Anti-Untouchability Conference will be held on the 31st instant and 1st November next at the Victoria Public Hall under the presidency of Sir R. Venkataratnam Naidu, Kt. Those who are desirous of enlisting themselves as volunteers are earnestly requested to send their names to and meet Mr. T. S. Rao Naidu, B. A., B. L., at his residence No. 24, Harris Road, Triplicane, Madras.

A Widow Remarriage at Bangalore : In response to an invitation by Mr. and Mrs. E. Subbukrishnaiya, a large number of ladies and gentlemen, both from the City and Civil and Military Stations, Bangalore, attended a wedding ceremony which was conducted according to Theistic rites at the Brahmo Mandir, on Monday the 19th instant, at 6 p.m. Prof. P. K. Rajah Sandow of Bombay was the bridegroom and Sreemathi Sandaramma of Cocanada was the bride. The service was conducted by Mr. E. Subbukrishnaiya, Brahmo Missionary, Bangalore, who also stands in relation to the bride as a father and guardian. On Tuesday, the 20th instant, a reception was held in honour of the newly married couple, when the invited guests were treated to light refreshments. Then a few gentlemen made congratulatory speeches on the courageous step taken by the bridegroom in choosing to marry a widow belonging to another caste. This was the second inter-caste widow remarriage celebrated in Bangalore during the last six months.

I.C.S. Examination, 1926 : The Director of Information, Bombay, writes:—The Bombay Government Gazette of October 15th contains the regulations for the examination of candidates for the Indian Civil Service to be held in London in 1926. The number of persons to be selected at this examination will be announced hereafter. Applications from candidates desiring to compete at the examination must reach the Secretary, Civil Service Commission, before the 15th May next. Candidates will be notified in June of the viva voce test and the time-table of the written part of the examination will be posted to them early in July.

Jat Pat Torak Mandal : The Secretary to the Jat Pat Torak Mandal, Lahore, writes:—All lovers of social reform and well-wishers of Hindu Community will be glad to learn that Pandit Phuma Nandji the well-known religious preacher, has earnestly begun the propaganda work of the JAT PAT TORAK MANDAL, a Society to abolish caste system. With head-quarters at Lahore, he will go on tour to different places of this Province to preach his gospel of human equality. I hope that the members of the Mandal will help Panditji in every way in his work. Let it be thoroughly understood that, unless the Hindu Community is not freed from the shackles of this terrible disease, the caste system, the idea of Sangathan, Shudhi, removal of untouchability and even of Swarajya are mere idle talks. Down from Budha all the saints like Kabir, Nanak, Ramdas and Daya Nand have preached against this evil of evils. Therefore it is the supreme duty of every patriot and philanthropist to help the Mandal in every possible way. The Mandal has resolved to open branches at different places. Banda and Lucknow have already got such institutions. The necessity of Mandal is being felt everywhere. Hundreds of youngmen and youngwomen are ready to marry without any restriction of caste. I have got a heap of such applications in my office. Gentlemen and societies who desire to send for Pandit Phuma Nand for the propaganda of the objects of the Mandal should kindly correspond with me.

Venereal Disease in India : Presiding over the Imperial Social Hygiene Congress held at Wembley recently at which the problem of venereal disease in India was considered, Lord Willingdon paid a tribute to the wonderful work of the Indian Medical Service, and hoped for closer and more active co-operation between his society and India. Lt. Col. Carter of Bombay said that Indians had many old beliefs and customs, and it would take several thousand years to convert them to any ideas that we might think right. He emphasized that in starting on any campaign great care was necessary with regard to certain things. Major Harnett, speaking on venereal disease in Calcutta, emphasized the Government of India's habit of not interfering with the religious and social customs of people, and pointed out that there were strong currents of opinion among Hindus which felt very strongly with regard to questions such as childmarriage, widow remarriage, and polygamy. It was better to leave them to manage their own affairs in these matters and not to attempt to interfere in any way. Every one knows that this terrible disease, originally a product of the West, was imported into India by early adventurers from the West. While we do not, of course, countenance the social evils enumerated by the gallant Major, we fail to understand their connection with the subject.

Opium in India : In an article on "Opium in India" in Woman's Outlook published monthly by the National Y.W.C.A., (5, Russell Street, Calcutta) the Rev. William Paton states that Assam is far and away the worst opium consuming district, for the number of seers per 10,000 rises there in the Brahmaputra Valley to 173,189 and even 237. The significance of these figures is apparent when it is realised that the League of Nations has stated that for a country with a medical service, a figure of six seers per 10,000 of the population might be regarded as satisfactory. Mr. Paton points out, however, that it is notable that the great mass of rural India, and particularly Tamil India, is almost free from the opium evil. It is apart from certain exceptions in the towns that the habit is strongest and most of all in industrial towns.

Divorce Statistics of America : Divorce in the United States has increased at such a rate that one out of every seven couples who marry seek this way of release. Preliminary figures made public by the Census Bureau in Washington show that of 294,496 couples who "took the plunge" in twenty-three representative States and the district of Columbia during last year, 45,830 sought relief in the divorce courts. There was an increase of 1,554 divorces in these States last year as compared with 1923, while marriages decreased by 21,732. Only four States showed increases in marriages. Nevada, which contains Reno, still the chief divorce centre of the country, had 1,079 marriages, an increase of 67·6 per cent, and 1,037 divorces, an increase of eight.

Appeal in the Bawla Case Dismissed : The Privy Council dismissed the appeal preferred by the accused in the Bawla murder case on Monday the 26th instant.

NOTES

Geneva Child Welfare Congress: Dr. P. V. Shirkhare who has just returned from the Child Welfare Congress held at Geneva, in August last, to which he was deputed by the Government of Bombay, has enlightened the press in Bombay about the results achieved by the Congress. This Congress was the first of its kind and was attended by five to six hundred representatives from about 25 prominent nations. It is indeed a pity that the question of child welfare has not roused sufficient attention in India as it ought to have, considering that the death roll of children under 3, and especially of those under 1, is highly appalling. Bombay and Poona are pre-eminently concerned with this question more than any other part of India, in as much as their infant mortality ranges to 600 and 800 per thousand respectively. Dr. Shirkhare relates how the representatives of the other nations were struck with dismay on hearing the percentage of infantile mortality in India as compared with that in civilized countries varying from 70 to 100 per thousand. Every child born today is a potential citizen of tomorrow and hence child welfare is the basic problem upon which the whole social superstructure is to be built. Towards this aspect of the problem, the Geneva Congress has contributed much by enunciating the declaration of the rights of the child, commonly known as the Declaration of Geneva, which, in fact, summarises all the vital aspects of this all important problem: (1) The child must be given the means requisite for its normal development both materially and spiritually. (2) The child that is hungry must be fed, the child that is sick must be nursed. The child that is backward must be helped. The delinquent child must be reclaimed and the orphan and the waif must be sheltered and succoured. (3) The child must be the first to receive relief in times of distress. (4) The child must be put in a position to earn a livelihood and must be protected against every form of exploitation. (5) The child must be brought up in the consciousness that its talents must be developed to the service of its fellowmen. We would commend to the attention of social workers the various means which Dr. Shirkare suggests for educating public opinion on the subject, such as the publication of vernacular literature on the subject, lectures, exhibitions, Baby Weeks, Maternity Homes, infant welfare centres etc.

Mahatma Gandhi's Propaganda for the Removal of Untouchability: Among the Congressmen to-day there is but one man in the person of Mahatma Gandhi whose faith in the efficacy of the constructive programme remains as strong as it was when he launched out that programme early in February 1922 on the eve of the tragedy at Chauri Chaura. In the course of his tour throughout the country, he has, by example more than by precept, advanced the cause of the untouchables. A recent instance reported from Bhuj in Cutch is but one of the many examples Mahatma Gandhi has set to his followers. When he noticed that the "untouchables" were not allowed to sit side by side at a public meeting in Bhuj, he openly said that it was not possible for him to be a party to a function where the untouchables were banned or, in any way, insulted. He would therefore request them either to permit the untouchables to enter the meeting and sit side by side with them, or to permit him to go and sit with untouchables, but he would warn them that they should in no case smother their convictions and do anything out of mere courtesy. If they agreed to admit untouchables, they should do so because they were convinced that it would be purifying themselves and their religion by so doing. Otherwise they should permit him to go and take his seat among the untouchables. In either case he would consider that they had given him an honour greater than they had given him by voting him an address, or presenting him with a costly silver charkha. When at one meeting the orthodox elements outvoted the reformers and expressed their resentment at permitting the untouchables to sit side by side with them, Mahatmaji unhesitatingly went to the place where the "untouchables" had gathered and addressed the meeting from their midst. At another place when the meeting was held at a private place belonging to one Mr. Bawa, Mahatmaji resented the segregation of untouchables and himself passed through the entrance intended for untouchables. The meeting ended in disorder as the owner of the place could not countenance the firm attitude of Gandhiji. But the incident had such a moral effect on the people that they insisted on holding a public meeting in the maidan where all could meet as equals. While Swarajists were engaged in loud talk at Nagpur on the question of discipline among the rank and file in the party, Gandhiji was, in his characteristically unostentatious manner, devoting himself to the most important of our nation-building activities. Indeed, an ounce of practice is worth tons of theories.

The Bogey of Mass Conversion: We would warn the public, especially Hindus, in Northern India against giving credence to the reports, apparently of a propagandist nature, made by interested correspondents in various Moslem papers about the prospects of wholesale conversion of the Thiyyas or Ezuvas of Malabar to Mahomedanism. We have on more than one occasion referred to the loud talk of "mass conversion" in which some impatient leaders of the Thiyya community had indulged, and have expressed our view that they were intended only as a threat. We have never come across any report to justify the fear of mass conversion, and we have no reason to apprehend that the attempt of Mahomedan missionaries from the Punjab to take advantage of the discontent among the Ezhuvas at the unjust treatment meted out to them by the high-caste Hindus, would result in any appreciable success. The Thiyyas are the most educated and cultured among those classes to whom the stigma of unapproachability is attached, and in spite of all talk of conversion to Islam or Christianity, they can be trusted to appreciate the distinct change in the outlook of educated caste-Hindus towards the question of unapproachability. We trust the exaggerated reports of the changes of bringing "thousands and thousands of new converts to Islam and thus not only save them from the clutches of the high caste Hindu tyranny but also swell the ranks of the worshippers of one God and followers of His last Prophet (Mahomed)" will not disturb the equanimity of the leaders of the Hindu Sabha and of the Arya Samaj in Punjab. There is a vast field for the work of social uplift in Malabar for those interested in the elevation of the depressed classes, but what we wish the Hindu leaders to avoid is to make these exaggerated reports another bone of contention to widen the gulf further between the Hindus and Mahomedans.

The Madras Anti-Untouchability Conference: We congratulate the Reception Committee of the first Provincial Anti-Untouchability Conference which was held on the 31st October and 1st November in Madras on the excellent choice they made in electing Sir R. Venkataratnam Naidu, the Vice-Chancellor of the Madras University, to guide the deliberations of the Conference. The very fact that the Conference brought under one common platform persons holding divergent views in politics, persons belonging to every community and every party, bears eloquent testimony to the success of the Conference and to the importance of the subject for which it was convened. Both Mr. C. Rajagopalachari and Dewan Bahadur T. Vijayaraghavachari, in spite of their holding diametrically opposite views in politics, were there in the same platform holding equally strong views on the necessity of the removal of untouchability. We print elsewhere the Associated Press summary of the proceedings of the Conference. In the course of his learned ex-tempore address, Sir Venkataratnam referred to the famous saying of Jesus Christ which we have often quoted in these columns: "Let him cast the first stone who had not sinned in his own heart," and said that the problem of untouchability should be approached in the same spirit. He asked, who is there to determine whether one is touchable or untouchable? The Conference passed a number of resolutions including one denouncing the segregation of converts from the "untouchables" in Christian Churches and appointed a Working Committee consisting of the President, the Chairman of the Reception Committee, Dr. T. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliar, Messrs. Arya, Sundara Rao Naidu and others, to carry on a vigorous propaganda work throughout the year.

Communal Representation and Communalism: In the Reformer of the 8th August, commenting on the Major Municipalities Bill, we referred to Mr. Jayakar's plea for the deletion of the clause providing for communal representation to the Mahomedans. The Bill came up before the Bombay Legislative Council recently after the Select Committee's report on it. Owing to the vow of silence which the Swarajists have taken upon themselves as a protest against Government's unholy alliance with the Non-Brahmins and the Sind Mahomedans against them, the Bill was ensured of a safe passage except for the solitary protest of Mr. R. G. Pradhan, who moved an amendment to delete the clause providing for Mahomedan representation. We have often pointed out that it is communal representation that retards Hindu-Muslim unity and that the sooner it is done away with the better. Experience has sufficiently shown that the appetite of this monster grows on what it feeds on. Originally conceived as a concession for Muslims alone, it was slowly extended to other communities also such as the Sikhs and Christians. Again, whereas the Lucknow Pact provided only for Muslim representation to the Legislatures, it was later on sought to be extended to local bodies also. The Major Municipalities Bill is only an instance in point. If we go on like this, there is no knowing where all this will end. The Mahomedan members of the Council pleaded for the retention of communal representation on the technical ground that what applies to the depressed classes equally applies to Mahomedans also. This classing together of Mahomedans and depressed classes for certain purposes alone cannot deceive anybody, for the facts do not accord with it. Moreover, this unjust imputation, implying as it does a stigma upon the whole Mahomedan community, is likely to be resented by the more thoughtful section of the community. The views of the Hon Minister for Local Self-Government in Bomby on the subject are only too well-known. It was only recently he said that, given communal representation and Swaraj, he would prefer the former to the latter. To the Hon. Minister and his co-religionists of his way of thinking, we can only commend the remarks of the Hon. Mahomed Usman Sahib, the Home Member, Madras, a bureaucrat for the time being, who gave it as his emphatic opinion that communal electorates must go if at all India is to be united. But communal representation is only a phase of communalism which, unfortunately, has poisoned our public life for the last few years. The remedy therefore, lies in striking at the roots of communalism. Speaking at the Gujranwala Provincial Political Conference the other day, Mrs. Naidu condemned communalism and communal representation in no uncertain terms. We are glad to see that Sir Sankaran Nair also in his election speeches at Mayavaram condemned communalism and communal representation in identical terms.

Stock Exchange Reform: The Stock Exchange Bill which Government introduced in the local Legislative Council recently and which was passed a third time after the Select Committee's report on it, is a necessary and long-needed piece of legislation in the interests of trade and business in Bombay. The Native Share and Stock Broker's Association of Bombay formed in the year 1887, conducts the business of the Stock Exchange and, under the able guidance of Sir Shapurji Broacha, has won a name and reputation for itself by inspiring a large measure of confidence in the investors. But, with the death of Sir Shapurji, the craze for gambling which is unfortunately only too prevalent now in Bombay has caught hold of the business world also, and businessmen were trying to make immense gains and fortunes at a stroke by what are technically known as "bear-raids" and "bull-raids". The result was that a few months ago, things came to a head and culminated finally in the almost total destruction of some brokers of good standing and repute, and then only Government woke up to the realities of the situation. The law, obviously, cannot touch many things which are immoral and, unfortunately, in Bombay, certain unconscionable transactions which, in legal parlance, go by the name of contracts of wager as opposed to bona fide transactions, are recognised in the courts of law. What the Bill proposes to do is to give certain statutory powers to Government to enforce and approve the rules of the Share and Stock Brokers' Association for the proper conduct of speculative transactions, in order to ensure the protection and prosperity of the investors. Government, however, does not undertake any direct control of the Stock Exchange operations, for they remain entirely in the hands of the directors as at present.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1925.

THE ANTI-CHRISTIAN MOVEMENT IN CHINA.

Those who have been following recent events in China cannot but sympathise with the struggle of that great country to rid itself of foreign domination and exploitation. Ever since the fall of the Manchu dynasty, the history of China has been one of strifes and wars between the rival Tuchuns who established themselves in various provinces, sometimes one and sometimes another getting the upper hand. This chaotic situation, however, became more complicated by the presence of an external factor, namely, the foreigners. The European nations, even as early as the last century, carved out for themselves "spheres of influence," and it is but natural that they should have looked askance at the establishment of a strong central government, lest it should jeopardise their own extra-territorial privileges. The result was that provincial governors were more often the playthings and tools of European nations. The recent riots at Shanghai were, if anything, directed against this foreign incursion. It is a mistake to think, as has been urged by some, that the Bolshevik influence was the chief factor in the recent anti-foreign demonstrations in China. True, Russia, which was for long held to be the inveterate enemy of China, is now her closest friend so much so that she has voluntarily relinquished many of her extra-territorial concessions and privileges. But the more potent factor, however, is the upsurge of Chinese nationalism—a nationalism that is directed against the foreign capitalism and exploitation. The Anti-Christian Movement in China is only one such manifestation of this spirit of nationalism with which China now surges from one end to the other.

In the September number of the Student Movement Review, there is an informing article on the Anti-Christian Movement in China from the pen of that eminent Chinese scholar, T. Z. Koo, reprinted from the July number of the Student World. The fundamental causes underlying the movement, he analyses under three heads. There is, first of all, the growth of nationalism. Ever since Kang Yu Wei, Liang Chi Chao, Sun Yat Sen, and their followers started the fight for a "new China" as early as the nineties, a spirit of nationalism has been abroad, which received an added stimulus after the establishment of the Republic in 1912. It has called forth an increasing interest and participation in national affairs on the part of the Chinese. "China for the Chinese", is the cry all over. The much-vaunted superiority of Western civilization, especially since the war, is being everywhere questioned, and strenuous attempts are being made to resist the whole-sale Westernization of Chinese life and to preserve intact the national and social heritage of the Chinese people. Born of these tendencies are the various movements which have risen of late all over the country such as the Patriotic Student Movement, an attempt on the part of students in 1918 to unite the Chinese in common action to direct their Government to fight against foreign domination, the Revivalist Movements in the older religions of China, especially in Buddhism and Confucianism, attempts to preserve and re-state the religious values in Chinese culture and life, the Chinese Renaissance Movement, an attempt to preserve and evaluate the intellectual heritage of China, and the Young China group which aims to develop a national and racial consciousness among the Chinese people as an anti-dote against the insidious attacks of Western Nations. The growth of national education since 1905 is another potent cause of the Movement. A third and no less important cause is the growth of the Christian religion in China during the last twenty-five years.

And now to the origin and the purpose of the Movement. When the eleventh Conference of the World's Student Christian Federation was being held in Peeking in 1922, a student Anti-Religion Movement was started at the same time as a protest against the activity of Christian students. The movement numbered among its ranks some of the greatest intellectual leaders of China and for some months was very active in attacking organised religions as a bundle of superstitions and as an exponent of the philosophy of imperialism and capitalism, but quited down in less than a year, only to be revivified again when Russia appeared on the scene playing the role of a righteous nation, denouncing the imperialistic West. The result was the formation of the Anti-Imperialistic Federation in the summer of 1924. About the same time the Anti-Christian Federation of 1922 was also revived in all its vigour. The avowed purpose of the Federation is actively and aggressively to oppose Christianity. It denounces religion in general as a glorified superstition and as a prolific breeder of religious wars, and organized Christianity, as the ally of imperialism and capitalism. As we have said before, this Movement is not a thing to be trifled with, for it is a national movement pregnant with tremendous possibilities for the future. It is part and parcel, as T. Z. Koo says, of the whole question of the relation between East and West—political, intellectual, economic, and racial. It is only a reaction against Western imperialism and capitalism, that was bound to come one day or the other. Bitter experience has taught the Chinese to regard Christianity and opium as the two imperialistic weapons of European exploitation, the former to stupify their minds and the latter to poison their bodies. "Instead of living the Christian life many of our leaders and Christian workers are trying to sell religion in the best approved methods of modern "salesmanship." We have so institutionalized the life of the spirit as almost to have killed it for many people. Can we wonder then that people should despise and hate us? It must have torn the heart of Jesus again to see the reproach we have brought upon His name." These words, coming as they do from a devout Christian, are a deplorable confession of the failure of Christianity in China. We hope the Anti-Christian Movement will serve as an eye-opener to the Christian Missionaries in China as also elsewhere, for, as T. Z. Koo remarks, in the East to-day there is a respect for the person and life of Christ which does not extend to the organized Church

THE CURRENCY COMMISSION.

The meeting that was held in Bombay on Tuesday last under the presidentship of Mr. Jinnah to protest against the composition of the recently appointed Royal commission on Indian Currency inasmuch as it does not represent the interests of India adequately and effectively in accordance with the solemn undertaking given by the Finance Member of the Government of India in the Legislative Assembly last February, is only an expression of the universal resentment that is felt all over the country against the constitution and personnel of the Commission. It is but fitting that Bombay, true to its tradition, and as the premier commercial city in India, should have taken the lead in the matter. Whereas the Assembly's resolution recommended to the Governor-General-in Council the appointment of a Commission immediately, with a majority of non-official Indians on it, and with an Indian Chairman, to go into the question of currency and exchange reform in the light of the experience gained after the Babington Smith Committee's report, the Government appointed a Commission neither immediately nor with a non-official Indian majority nor with an Indian Chairman. Mr. Venkatapathy Raju's resolution was passed in January last and Government appointed the Commission only last August. The truth is that the Commission was appointed not because the time had arrived to examine the question of Indian currency and exchange, but because England had adopted the gold standard. There can be no more striking instance of the subordination of Indian to English interests and the dictation of Indian economic policy from Whitehall and the impotence of India to decide for herself the policy she thinks best for herself. Moreover, there is also some truth in the allegation that Sir Basil Blackett was only biding the time when the Commission could not but find in favour of 1s. 6d. ratio. But it is the personnel of the Commission that has come in for a good deal of criticism and, not unjustly, for it is in direct violation of the pledges given by the Finance Member as regards the effective and adequate Indian representation as well as the consideration of the Indian and Indian interests alone in the formulation of the currency policy. With the exception of Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, the personnel is not calculated to inspire confidence in the people. As it is, the Indians are in a minority of four, of whom the previous history of three cannot but justify us in thinking that they will only voice forth the opinions of Government rather than that of the people. As regards the English majority, they may be all experts, but experts, with strong vested interests behind them, who cannot but find in favour of the London monied interests. The following extract from the Financial Times which Mr. Jinnah read at the meeting, is only typical of the attitude of the average Britisher towards Indian currency policy: "Assuming that the Commission decides to recommend that the rupee should be linked to gold, it is desirable again to emphasise that such a course will necessitate the adoption by the Indian Government of a standard of currency having gold as its basis and silver and paper as the media of circulation, both the latter being interchangeable with gold at a fixed ratio. Any such recommendation will have to be most carefully considered from the point of view of the London market as it must inevitably involve in years of prosperity an even larger off-take by India of the precious metals than at present." The Commission, therefore, is not unjustly described as a packed one. It was against this that the Assembly, under the vigilant and watchful guidance of Mr. Jinnah, directed its attack when, in August last, it declared its no-confidence in the personnel of the Commission and demanded the appointment of three more trustworthy Indians. Government's contention that no more capable persons are to be found, is only an insult to the intelligentsia of the country as well as a sad reflection on the effects of its so-called beneficent rule for the last 150 years. While we are, therefore, in sympathy with the protests made all over to make the Commission more adequately representative and effective than it is at present, we may say at once that we are not in favour of altogether boycotting the Commission, a movement set on foot by a section of people. The resignation of Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, the only Indian member who is calculated to inspire confidence in the people, will only have the effect of letting the popular cause go by default.

The main reason, however, why the Assembly insisted upon an Indian Chairman as well as an Indian majority in the Commission was that a gold standard and a gold standard alone, will cure all the currency maladies from which India is now suffering. The Indian currency system is a hybrid system which goes by the name of the gold exchange standard. The essence of it is that, for all internal purposes, the rupee is the medium of exchange, while for international exchange, Government offers to convert rupees into gold at a certain ratio at a particular time. By its very nature, therefore, it is subject to manipulation at the sweet will and pleasure of the Government, with all the attendant fluctuations and uncertainty in the trade and business of the country. In one word, it is not automatic but managed. The Chamberlain Commission, which declared that, though the Indian currency system was a managed one, it was not so as a matter of fact, has only been falsified by the recent experience gained after the publication of the Babington-Smith Committee's report. That Committee, it should be remembered, committed the grossest blunder in fixing the exchange ratio at 2s. per Re. It was to maintain this highly artificial ratio that the Government squandered away 35 crores of the hard-earned money of the Indian tax-paper in the shape of Reverse Councils. Subsequently, Government realised the foolishness of its policy and left the exchange to its fate with the result that it has from that date soared somewhere above 1s 6d. The statu-

tory ratio of 2s. is, therefore, for all practical purposes, a dead letter. This manipulation, however, is not the only evil of this gold exchange standard. The Secretary of State is keeping large reserves in the gold standard and paper currency reserves amounting to about 60 million £s for the purpose of paying money in England in case of an adverse balance against India. But, as a matter of fact, the balance of trade has always been in favour of India except once in a decade, and, therefore, if anything, a case has been made out for retaining the reserves in India rather than in England. The gold exchange standard having failed, it is but natural that, in the circumstances, Indian opinion should incline to a gold standard as the panacea for all our currency troubles as ensuring not only stability but also freedom from the machinations of Government which have led to such disastrous results during the last few years. Indian opinion will not rest content with a mere improved system of gold exchange standard upon which Sir Basil Blackett lays so much stress, for the simple reason that, however improved it may be, it will not be freed from the control of Government. It would also be a mistake to think that the restoration of the old 1s 4d ratio will satisfy Indian public opinion, as may be gathered from Sir Purushotamdas Thakurdas' resolution in the Assembly, for it is only intended as a temporary measure to ease the situation until the publication of the report of the Commission. In fact, it was originally the intention of the Government of India to adopt the gold standard, but the successive Secretaries of State turned down the proposals of the Finance Members till at last the Chamberlain Commission of 1913 definitely declared in favour of the gold exchange standard into which it had accidentally drifted. Much is also made of the hoarding habits of the Indian people. But a study of statistics will show that India absorbs only 7 per cent of the total production, a figure that is not much for a country with a population of 17 to 20 per cent of the whole world. Indian opinion is so much in favour of the gold standard that Mr. Jamnadas Mehta and Dr. Lohokare wanted to restrict the terms of reference to the Commission to the question of gold standard alone and subsequently waived their objection only on the assurance of the Finance Member that the Commission would not be precluded from going into that question. The Currency Commission, as at present constituted, is not in the least likely to find in favour of a gold standard which is accepted on all hands as the only possible currency system for India.

TRAVANCORE LETTER.

The Problem of Women's Education.

The inaugural meeting of the Women's Club of H. H. the Maharajah's College of Arts, Trivandram, was held in the College Hall on the 16th October. Mrs. Thackwell, M.B., B.S, wife of the Commanding Officer, presided. Besides the Principal and some of the members of the staff of the College and the members of the Club, a large number of ladies, mostly former students of the College, were present.

In formally commencing the meeting, Mrs Thackwell introduced the lecturer of the evening, Mrs. Poonen Lukose, Acting Durbar Physician, who was received with acclamation.

In the course of a very illuminating address, Mrs. Poonen Lukose said: I am just going to give you a short, plain, straight talk. My pleasure in being here today is all the greater as we have, as our President of the evening, Mrs. Thackwell (applause), an old and esteemed friend of mine, and a fellow member of the London University. No doubt, this meeting to-day reminds Mrs. Thackwell of many similar happy gathering of women students that we attended, when we were students together in the London School of Medicine. Perhaps, it may not be known to you all that our President is a very distinguished graduate in Medicine of the London University. After explaining the advantage of the Women's Club formed as a branch of the College she said: I frankly envy the present women students of the College for having these advantages, and my sincere advice to you is to make the most of what the College is offering you to-day. One other reason why we women should appreciate the formation of this Club in the Arts College is this. We have always been in the minority in Colleges, though we have every year become an increasing minority. Still we must admit that many of us have not felt quite at ease at having to study long in this manner. Personally, though I would rather have a Women's College for women for the ordinary B.A. course, I think there is a great deal to be said in favour of co-education of the type we have had. Such education need not necessarily unsex the women. A great deal depends on the type of co-education you get and on the type of the student. Of course, one hears occasionally of women students having cast their modesty and feminine qualities to the winds and brought ridicule on themselves. Such instances are rare and cannot be cited against co-education. Most modern educationists and many serious-minded people today are of opinion that co-education, though it may have its drawbacks, has many advantages and is beneficial both to men and to women.

I trust that there is no student here whose ambition after graduation is just to live the life of recluse. If you want to live in the world in the real sense, you must expect to mingle with men and women of different kinds, and the sooner you make up your minds to do it, the better. Much of your happiness in life will depend on how you are able to get on with your fellow-creatures around you. At present you have no option in the matter and you have to attend the classes with somewhat different ends. I trust, however, that you will scrupulously guard against it being said of you—that higher education had shorn you of your modesty or other feminine qualities. I say this seriously. Having been closely connected with student life for the past four years and more, I have had opportunities of seeing a lamentable change coming over the outlook and attitude of some of the women students of the present day—a change which, if allowed to spread, must surely have a baneful effect on society. If such is the occasional result of higher education for women, is it any wonder that our older women are still opposed to it? "The test of any religious, political or educational system is really the man which it forms". A system which injures the intelligence is bad; a system which injures character is vicious; a system which injures conscience is criminal. I am convinced that even in such cases as I have alluded to, it is not our co-educational system that is so much at fault as our women students themselves and their environment. You women students have thus a very great responsibility, since your success or failure will react on the education of women now and hereafter. Look to it that you students of the present day do not bring about a set-back in women's education. I fully hope that when your time comes to this College, you will sincerely feel that the days which you have spent here have been well spent, that you have been all the better for studying at this College, and that your College in turn will have good reason to be proud of you.

There is one other subject about which I should like to say a word before I close. It is to draw your attention to your physical welfare. It has been repeatedly remarked that the majority of our women students, when they leave the College, leave their health behind them and that they are mere wrecks. It is true that students as well as parents have displayed greater anxiety in passing examinations than in the development of their physical powers to the fullest extent. And the higher we advance, the greater is the danger of the physical side of the students being neglected. It is no uncommon sight to see a College student come home in the evening quite tired out, dropping into the nearest easy chair, hoping to be waited upon by a fond or foolish mother or perhaps by a fussy aunt, or an old grandmother, and then start burying herself over her books almost immediately after she has got down her tea and keeping to her chair till darkness sets in. All the time, she will not of course be disturbed by anybody. However much the poor mother may be busy, or however much the little baby may cry, she is not there to help other people, least of all, her own younger brothers and sisters. And when the examination time comes, she is provided with some strong tonic obtained from the nearest doctor, and there is no limit to the amount of black coffee and midnight oil that is consumed. This is no exaggeration. They are things which I have myself seen, and that is why I wish to talk to you so seriously about it. Now, higher education for us, women, instead of fitting us to do our domestic duties better, is often having a baneful effect, and is tending to make our women look with disrespect on domestic work. This should not be. Is it any wonder then that such a student frequently turns out a nervous, ill-tempered, selfish, "full-blown lady graduate"? And what good does the world or she derive out of her education? This is surely not what education ought to do for women! I am afraid to continue the description for fear of shocking Mrs. Thackwell. She can bear witness to the fact that, in England, even in the medical schools, where we had very strenuous, very tiring work, we devoted a good bit of our time to physical exercise and to sports. We had our daily hockey, or tennis or boating, or at least a long walk after the day's work. We were the better for it. When the examination results came out, it was invariably found that those students who took the keenest interest in sports were those who distinguished themselves at the examinations, and later on in life. You students, perhaps, do not realise the importance of all this now. But remember, your health is one of the greatest of your assets, and without it all your coveted degrees are of no avail. The Goddess of Health will favour you as long as you obey her laws, but directly you begin to trifle with the laws of health, sooner or later, Nature must be at war with you. I do not want to detain you further, but I hope that the criticism which I have ventured to offer will be taken by you in the right spirit, and that this Women's Club will meet your needs and solve your difficulties. The presence of so many past and present women students here today makes me feel that you all realise the value of your Women's Club. From what I know of the older women students of this College, I think I can make the confident assurance on their behalf to your office bearers that they can always count on our hearty support and co-operation in all their activities. I wish the Club every success. (Continued applause).

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF SOCIAL REFORM.

(By R. H. Hodgson).

During the last twenty years, and particularly during the last ten years, there has developed a very remarkable interest in psychology. Men and women of all ranks of life who have had a desire to make the most of their lives have been drawn to a study of psychology, because they have come to realise that there is operative in each a mighty power—the power of thought; and that it is only as a man learns to intelligently control this power, through his mental processes, that he can attain success—the success of full self-expression and freedom. There are thousands of these students of psychology who now gladly testify that the application of the knowledge they have gained has brought about a great change in their lives—a change that in many cases means improved circumstances, but also the elimination of fear, worry, sickness, and a confident, brave, happy facing of life. They have come to understand that each is master of his fate, that all that is good is accessible to each, and they can now pursue their way with confidence.

The Problem of Social Reform.

Why should not a knowledge of psychology be brought also to the problem of social reform? May it not be expected to be as applicable to social life as to individual life? Nay, it may be asked, is it possible to bring about a change of conditions in any department of life without a knowledge of mental states and their effect on external conditions? The life-process, in all its aspects, is ever from within outward. In man, from the thought to the externalisation of the thought. Therefore, the only way by which a permanent change can be made in human affairs is by changing the thought, which is the organising cause. Men may struggle to make changes without altering the thought, but conditions will ever come back to a correspondence with the general mental attitude.

The Inauguration of a Social Order.

The great movement known as Socialism which has developed during the last seventy years has, at the bottom, been a revolt against the exploiting, every-man-for-himself industrial order, against the jungle morality of that order; and its ideal has been an order based on justice, co-operation and brotherhood. Whether the pioneers in this movement would have been satisfied with the position of the movement to-day, could they have known it, is a question which must remain unanswered; but we know that there have been great disappointments on the way. It is true that the Labour Party has now won a remarkable popularity; and it may in the near future be returned to Parliament with a majority over other parties, and take on the government of the country. But would that mean the inauguration of a social order such as has been visualised—an order of harmonious and joyous co-operation? There are some workers for the better order who cannot think that it would. They cannot hope for this because they recognise that that change in the mentality of the people without which there can be no permanent change in external conditions and the character of social life has not been made.

Let us have frank speaking and an honest recognition of truth. Does this increasing success of the Labour party at the polls indicate a longing for a better social order—an order raised above self-seeking and material aims, an order of harmony and beauty based on joyous service in a great common cause, or is it rather an indication that a large section of the people believe that they can best advance their own material interests along these lines? To the judgment of this writer, anyhow, it seems that material interests—the hope of getting more of this world's goods for oneself and for one's class, is the motive which is immensely predominant.

It is not meant, of course, that there is any wrong in desiring to better one's material circumstances; nor can it be expected that working people should be indifferent to improving their circumstances. But it is essential, if we are to have a really better order, that the move to that order be made under the impulse of the ideal. It can never come from a movement which is, at the bottom, an expression of the now dominant acquisitive impulse.

Material Interest Predominant In Labour Party

It must be acknowledged that seeking and appealing for support for a political party is a matter utterly different from the spreading of the ideal of a higher social order and winning adherents to this ideal. There is always a strong, and, apparently, inevitable tendency to appeal to the interests of the people who may be hoped to support you, and to strictly avoid saying anything that may offend. And thus, in the course of the last twenty years, the position has become more and more confused. What degree of idealism there is in the movement represented by the Labour Party to-day even those in close touch with it can only vaguely estimate; but it may safely be said that the material interest is greatly preponderant. This is not said in depreciation of the Labour Party. The material interest is dominant with other parties. This is the day of materialism. But we cannot build a better social order on materialism, and it is important that this truth be clearly recognised now. Moreover, the better order cannot be established by votes; nor by legislation; nor a change in the form of organisation—not by these alone. It can be established only in the measure that we get that type of citizenship which will put into the social life the elements of a better order. Let it be made clear that it is not meant by this that no good can be accomplished by legislation or changing the character of social organisations. What is meant is that something must be taken into account which is now but little regarded, but which, in the long run, is the dominant factor of the situation. This thing is citizenship—a word which to many of our people has possibly little practical significance, but one which covers the citizen's relationship to his fellows and to the community, and his concept as to the meaning and purpose of the corporate life—matters that are fundamental and vital in social life.

The Pull of a Great Ideal.

What determines the condition of any society—its well-being or ill-being, is the concept held by the average citizen (possibly quite unconsciously) as to the meaning of the common social life. If the prevalent idea is that it is just a matter of keeping law and order while each gets what he can of the good things and pleasures of the world, then there will be strife; there will be poverty; there will be no advance. But with the prevalence of the concept of a common life and service in a great common purpose—the elimination of present evils and the building of an order which shall give opportunities for a fuller, truer expression of life by each individual—with this there will be harmony prosperity, and advance on the lines of this purpose. For the spirit of service, the consciousness of a high purpose, and the pull of a great ideal are absolutely necessary to good social life. A materialistic basis and concept can never give a harmonious and progressive life.

There is a constructive, harmonising type of citizenship, and there is a disruptive type. The aim, therefore, of those who desire a better order should be to create the first type. This we can do by moulding our young people to it. At present the greater parts are being moulded to the disruptive type through neglect. The boy is released from the school into the rough-and-tumble world in which men earn their daily bread, and the only purpose he sees in it is that of each getting what he can for himself and pursuing his own interests in his own way. Taking in this idea, he becomes, without any conscious intent to do injury, a disruptive factor in the corporate life. Whatever changes we may make in the form of organisations or in the basis of industry, we shall not attain to a social order which will give any satisfaction so long as this idea of the meaning of our corporate life prevails.

Constructive Type of Citizenship.

The constructive type is the citizen who is conscious that he shares a common life with all other members of the community, for the advance and well-being of which he seeks to serve; who endeavours to keep a right relationship with all his fellows, seeking rather to serve for their benefit than to gain advantages out of them. He is conscious also that there is a great purpose in the corporate life—its progressive betterment, unfoldment, and enrichment. To this purpose he is loyal, and he recognises that one of his best contributions to it is to develop all that is best in himself, so as to make himself a more worthy citizen of a better order. This type is based on the concept of a common life and common service in a great purpose.

To men who are in the grip of the industrial machine, and to those who are engaged in industrial struggle, this may seem a sentimental nicety; it may even bring forth ridicule from some hard-headed reformers who know (or think they know) this hard world. "Idealism; a high purpose; work in the spirit of service; yes, theoretically, as sentiment, it is very nice, but it is not practical politics. People are not interested in this sort of thing to-day. They have more faith in dollars."

The matter, nevertheless, is fundamental and vital. It goes to the roots of the social condition of the future. With such a concept of social life as prevails with the greater part of our people to-day we shall never get a better order. If there is to be a real advance to a better order (which must be better in something more than a materialistic sense) that better must be visualised and desired by our people; it must be held in their thought and their energies, must go out toward its actualisation. It is only when this obtains, when there is a great motive drawing out a people's energies and lifting

them above petty and selfish aims, that a people truly live. Let the energy of our people be released along the lines, and a social life of such richness and beauty will be actualised as is only hinted at by the best aspects of our life to-day.

ONE LIFE THROUGH THE WHOLE SOCIAL BODY.

There are many people whose only motive is to get money, more money. Their only idea of a condition more desirable is one in which the things money can procure are more easily obtainable. For the sake of the better Britain that we long for, it is to be hoped that it will be realised that no degree of real social betterment can come from people of this kind, no matter what political party they belong to. The quality of life does not come from money or the things obtainable with money. It is not difficult to find examples of people who have plenty of money and abundance of the good things of the world who actualise only a low standard of life and are unhappy. And, on the other hand, we can find people of quite moderate means who actualise a high standard of life—a life, beautiful, joyous, and truly progressive. And so in regard to our social life: its quality is not determined by material values. What is the materialist's nearest idea of paradise may be a hell of discord. And prosperity built on materialism could not last, for even material prosperity is ultimately dependent on harmony and a recognition of a high purpose expressing through the corporate life. Only when the well-being of the common life is put by all above all individual and sectional interests, when private interests are willingly subordinated to the higher interests of the community, when men recognise one life expressing through the whole social body and seek in all circumstances to do to all their fellows as they would be done to—only when such social harmony is established is enduring prosperity actualised. Self-seeking—which means failure to recognise the one life in all, and consequently failure to keep right relationship—inevitably destroys and inhibits harmony, and thus it destroys the condition necessary for material prosperity.

TRUE CO-OPERATIVE IDEAL.

The co-operative order can be established only by the general acceptance of the co-operative concept—that of a great common purpose in which each is loyally serving. Therefore the aim of those who desire such an order to be established should be to spread this concept. And it should be understood that this is something quite different from attaching a label to a person, or making him a member of this party or that organisation. It means securing the acceptance of the true co-operative ideal.

With this purpose we should ever keep in mind the fact that every year some hundreds of thousands of young people attain the age of adult citizenship; and our aim should be to secure that their recruits to our civilian army shall be of the constructive type. It should be a primary aim of our educational system to mould our young people to the type based on the concept of a common life and service in a great common purpose. It would be necessary also, it is true, to adapt conditions so as to allow the true and free expression of this type. But the important thing to stress is a recognition of the absolute necessity of the true concept of social life for real social reform and true progress.—The Forward, Calcutta.

ANTI-UNTOUCHABILITY CONFERENCE IN MADRAS.

The first Madras Provincial Anti-Untouchability Conference commenced its sitting on the 31st October under the presidentship of Sir R. Venkataratnam Naidu, the Vice-Chancellor. The opening function was performed by the Rajah of Pittapur. Among those present were Sir T. Sadasiva Iyer, Mr. T. V. Seshagiri Iyer, Justice Venkatasubba Rao, the Rajah of Panagal and Sir A. P. Patro. The Chairman of the Reception Committee, Dr. Lakshmanaswami Mudaliar, in welcoming the delegates, observed that they had met in order to popularise the message of anti-untouchability and to resolve to realise that birth "is but the guinea stamp and man is the man for all that." They had come to learn, said the President, in the course of his presidential address, that they had political and social rights but they had yet to learn that in the commonwealth of spirit every soul had a vote. If they recognised that principle, they could see the force of the humorous definition of a Negro that he was the image of God cut in ebony. In attempting to remove the curse of untouchability people were apt to consider what Mrs. Grundy would say. He appealed to such of them to act on their own testimony and on the testimony of their God. On November 1st, a number of papers dealing with the various aspects of the question of untouchability were read. Most of the papers described the horrors and inequities of the practice of untouchability and declared that untouchability had dealt the greatest blow to Hinduism and was the most reactionary influence on national advancement. Gitanand Brahmachari in his paper on "untouchability and temple entry" said: "Attack must be made against the stony walls of selfish and stupid orthodoxy. Nothing less than a radical and revolutionary attitude will bring the high castes to their senses. Humility has been overdone and years and centuries of unredeemed slavery and degradation has been its result." The Conference passed a number of resolutions urging the total abolition of untouchability, formation of organisations to carry on propaganda, admission of so-called untouchables to all public institutions and Hindu temples, and abolition of all restrictions imposed on untouchable classes in the free enjoyment of conveniences intended for general public such as restaurants conducted by railway companies, and motor busses. The Conference also condemned the practice followed in certain Churches of totally refusing admission to converts or of segregating them to particular corners of Churches and of making invidious distinctions in the matter of certain religious practices. The Conference ended with a cosmopolitan dinner in which members of all communities took part.

INDIAN REFORM LEAGUE, FIJI.

We have much pleasure in publishing the following representation addressed by Messrs. S. S. Chowla, W. Miller Caldwell, R. Parmeshwar, Dwarka Singh and J. F. ### THE OPIUM EVIL IN INDIA.

"Nowhere, so far as I am aware, has any official defence of a non-medical use of opium been offered, except in India," declared the Rev. W. Paton, Secretary, National Christian Council of India, Burma and Ceylon, in addressing the Calcutta Rotary Club recently. The opium evil is evidently on the increase throughout the country. The worst sinners in this respect are Assam, Calcutta and Bombay. The League of Nations fixed 6 seers per 10,000 of the population per annum as a suitable figure for a country which has a medical service, but the Indian average works at the rate of 12 seers. This average, however, is rather misleading, for as the Rev. Paton points out, when we come to examine the figures, district by district, we see very great variations. Tamil India, for instance, is, as a whole, almost free from this evil and the greater part of agricultural India is already down to the League of Nation's figure and even below it. It is only in certain defined areas as well as the industrial sections that the evil is more pronounced. The following figures furnished by Rev. Paton will be found of much interest: Burma, 29 seers, individual districts rising as high as 65, 109, and 147; the Assam Valley where the figure rises as high as 237 in one district; Balasore and Puri districts of Orissa, 55 and 30; the Godaveri and Ganjam districts of Madras, 67 and 22; the Panch Mahals, Broach, and other Gujarat districts of Bombay, 62, 51, and thereabonts; Sind, 40, 50, and above; the Central Punjab, for instance, Ferozepore, 60, Ludhiana 49; the industrial sections of India, for instance, Calcutta 144, Bombay 43, Cawnpore 29; and central parts of the Central Provinces, especially the Berars, about 30. The problem, therefore, that confronts us is how to eradicate this evil from these areas. A Dangerous Drugs Act or some similar provision for each area, as Rev. Paton points out, would evidently be the best solution under the circumstances. It was only recently that we reprinted an article by Mr. C. F. Andrews from the Times of Assam wherein he pointed out the good effects produced by the picketing campaign of the non-co-operation movement on the consumption of opium in Assam. But, with the cessation of this temperance camapign, Assam is once more reverting to its old position, as a short summary of the Administration Report for 1924-25 which we publish elsewhere will amply testify. The evil seems to have also spread to the Eastern Godaveri District, Madras, which has necessitated the All-India Congress Committee to appoint an Opium Enquiry Committee on the lines of the Assam Opium Enquiry Committee. In Calcutta, the figures still remain at 144 per 10,000, owing, obviously, to the presence of a large number of Chinese who buy and smoke opium to a large extent. The figures for Bombay, though they stand at 43, are still far from being satisfactory. Not a day passes without our hearing of one death or other of opium poisoning. Everyone in Bombay is only too familiar with the practice of drugging infants with opium by women employed in mills and factories, in order that they may remain quiet during their absence. Lady Wilson recently declared before a "Baby Week" exhibition that every 98 out of 100 mothers systematically dope their babies with opium before going out to work. The evil became so pronounced that the Bombay Corporation appointed a Medical Relief Committee to go into the question, the report of which came up for discussion before it last Monday. The Committee opines that, though medical opinion is divided on the effects of the Bal Goli upon the health of the infants, there can be no doubt or dispute whatever about the deleterious effect of raw opium upon the constitutions of infants, and, after considering the various factors, concludes that legislation, in order to prevent the drugging of children with raw opium, would be premature in the present state of public opinion, owing to the fact that such an action would not only interfere with the prevailing practice but also deprive women f their means of earning bread, and recommends propaganda work among the people. After some discussion, the Corporation adopted the Committee's report. We wish, however, that some steps were taken in the direction of legislation to put an end to this growing evil. We commend to the attention of our readers St. Nihal Singh's article on the subject which we publish elsewhere.

Censure Motion on the Bombay Excise Minister Disallowed: The President of the Bombay Council disallowed on the 20th October Mr. R. G. Pradhan's censure motion on the Excise Minister for his being by implication a party to the Governor's veto of a private bill on local option. The President ruled the motion inadmissible on the ground that it recommends the removal of a Minister which power is absolutely within the discretion of the Governor. As this is purely a constitutional question, we do not want to comment at length on the subject. Suffice it to say here that the President's action strikes at the basic principle of Ministerial Responsibility which is the essence of a parliamentary government.

PROHIBITION AND FINANCE.

The following is the statement of excise policy of the Bombay Government made by the Minister of Excise on Wednesday last before the Bombay Legislative Council, as published in the Times of India, Bombay:

Mr. R. G. Pradhan moved: "This Council recommends that a small committee, consisting of some elected members of the Legislative Council, one or two officials, and one or two financial experts, be appointed to consider and report on the financial measures that should be introduced in order to give full effect to the policy of prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic drink and drugs."

After some discussion, the Honourable Mr. A. M. Dehlavi, Minister of Excise, made a long statement regarding the excise policy of the Bombay Government. He said Government had declared total prohibition as the goal of its excise policy and he need hardly assure the House that Government was prepared to stand by it if the House and the country behind it was equally and practically prepared to stand by Government. In a former statement he had told the House how far Government was prepared to go towards prohibition, and how far Government rightly expected people to go with it in the matter of facing and meeting the great difficulties in the way of total prohibition. It needed no argument to state that having prohibition as the goal every step taken towards it by the one and one hundred methods which might be adjusted and readjusted as experience, circumstances, and conditions demanded would annually cause a gap in the revenues of the Presidency, and that gap would grow bigger and more alarming as they passed on from year to year towards prohibition, and might some day, sooner than they thought, create a financial collapse which the acutest financiers might find it difficult to meet. There were figures in his hand which showed that at the end of 1924-25 the Presidency had actually lost Rs 18,93,760, plus roughly 5 lakhs more on the sale of liquor in that one year. Their entire loss from 1922–23, when they started rationing, to the end of 1924-25 was Rs. 38,81,954, both still head duty and license fees taken together. This was the result of a 40 per cent. cut in Bombay and 20 per cent. in the mofussil in rationing. Now, if they continued to cut at that rate next year also, it was easy for the House to imagine as to how much more they would stand to lose in the revenue, and he would be failing in his duty as the responsible minister in charge if he did not point out for the most careful and serious consideration both of Government and the House as to whether it would be in the interests of sound administration and finance to go on incurring this increasingly recurring loss without preparing themselves to make it good, and thus jeopardising the whole financial programme of the Presidency. But this was not the only loss to be considered. As they went along pushing their policy of prohibition from year to year, the expenditure on the excise administration was bound to grow and must be met. The Excise Commissioner calculated that at about two crores, and by the time total prohibition was reached, the loss to be met, therefore, was roughly speaking six crores. Let that be ascertained and ways and means found to meet it. Concluding, Mr. Dehlavi said: "I have formulated the prohibition policy, and I am ready to stand by it, and I point out all these things only to show that this great and unprecedented policy in India should not be deemed as impracticable by reason of the people not rising to the occasion to face the problem and surmount the difficulties. Again, as the representative of the people and as a Minister of Government, it is my honest duty to lay bare before this House the pitfalls of the problem, and ask the House to meet them if they expect me to carry out their wishes as a Minister, responsible also to a practical Government.

Mr. Dehlavi suggested the omission of the words "one or two" occurring at both the places in the resolution, and the mover of the resolution having accepted the suggestion, the resolution thus modified was carried.

An Associated Press message says that the Finance Member, speaking on the resolution, observed that it was a little in advance of the Taxation Enquiry Committee's Report. There were reasons for the belief that the Taxation Committee had gone into the question of taxation in relation to prohibition and would make certain recommendations on the matter. Any way the Committee proposed in the resolution was necessary and would serve a useful purpose.

ST. NIHAL SINGH ON THE OPIUM EVIL IN INDIA.

In the course of an article in the Daily Herald, St. Nihal Singh writes:

When the British housewife sits down to her cup of Indian tea, does the thought ever enter her head that the Indian semi-slaves who produced it were so hard-worked and so ill-nourished that they systematically doped themselves with opium every day in order to be able to endure their existence?

The amount of opium which is being consumed in Assam, whence comes most of the Indian tea, appalls everyone interested in the growth of a virile, alert people. According to competent authorities, 12lb. of opium should more than cover the scientific and medicinal requirements of every 10,000 of population in any country. In Assam according to the latest statistics available, the consumption is 39 times in excess of the normal rate. In other words, 462 lb. of opium are being used by every 10,000 persons in Assam for purposes of drugging themselves and drowning their misery.

The situation is hardly less alarming in the industrial areas which are rapidly growing up all over India. Going through slums in and near Bombay, Calcutta, and other cities during my last Indian tour, I was aghast at the hold which this deadly drug was taking upon the working people of my homeland. I found that women were giving opium pills even to their infants so that they would remain quiet during their absence.

Doped Babies.

Since my visit to these industrial areas a semi-official statement has been made confirming the evidence of my own eyes.

Lady Wilson, wife of the Governor of Bombay, declared recently, at the opening of a "Baby Week" exhibition that doctors and welfare workers had informed her that in the cotton mills 98 out of every 100 mothers systematically doped their babies with opium

before going out to work. A social worker testifies to seeing Indian women labourers actually scuffling with one another outside the opium shops to secure a supply of the drug for themselves and for their little ones.

It is possible to buy opium in India with as much ease as one can buy potatoes or onions. Shops in the vicinity of mills employing large numbers of workers vend opium produced in factories under Government management. The work people, finding opium so accessible, buy it on their way to work and eat it with their scanty lunch, or purchase it on their way home and consume it as the craving demands.

Much of the opium produced in Government factories finds its way to the Malay Straits Settlements and Far East, and is even smuggled into the United States. The havoc wrought by it is, therefore, not confined within the Indian borders. Its trail, indeed, stretches well-nigh over the whole world.

American Alarm.

Americans, who are becoming very alarmed at the growth of the narcotic habit, insist that, at the end of a clearly defined period, British shall put an end to the export of opium from India, over and above medical requirements. To this demand the makers and administrators of Indian policy reply that the opium smuggled into the States is not of Indian origin, and that if they cut down the export of Indian opium, they would merely be putting money into the pockets of Chinese opium growers, who, taking advantage of the present chaos, are already reaping a rich harvest.

They also try to shirk responsibility by declaring that India is a separate member of the League of Nations and, therefore, her own mistress. Apologists for the Government of India have even sought to give the impression that under the absurd system of Dyarchy Indians make and, inferentially, can break the opium policy.

British Responsibility.

The great majority of Indians in the Central Legislature, have, by their outspokenness, exposed the hollowness of these pretensions.

If Indians had their way they would quickly get rid of this infamous traffic in human souls.

Unfortunately, a former British Treasury official—and not an Indian Nationalist—manages Indian finances. The majority of his colleagues, who constitute the Central Government, are also non-Indians. They have not been put into power by Indians, nor can they be deprived of power by Indians. What possible incentive can they have to pay heed to the Indian wishes?

The Conference at Geneva of the Opium Committee of the League of Nations can only touch one part of the question, namely, the export of Indian opium. And that, only if the British are not permitted to shuffle by giving a conditional undertaking. That Conference is, however, powerless to deal with the systematic drugging of Indians through the producers of the Government opium factories.

Both these questions are the responsibility of the British people until they actually permit us Indians to become masters in our own country.

PROHIBITION IN BHAVNAGAR.

During his recent visit to Europe Sir Prabhashankar Pattani seems to have taken great pains to study the question of "Prohibition" in America in its comprehensive sense, and appears to have been so favourably impressed with the solution of the drink problem there that as a result of his advice the Bhavnagar State Council has issued a strict prohibition order which has come into force from the 1st October.

According to the latest orders it would not be possible to manufacture any English or country liquor within the State territory or to import or export the same In the term 'liquor' are included all kinds of wines, spirits, toddy, beer, and, in short, anything that contains alcohol. As a result of this order licences issued to three or four European liquor shops have been cancelled. It would now be very difficult to get a drop of liquor in Bhavnagar surreptitiously or otherwise, except for medicinal purposes.

A limited quantity of English liquor and wine is entrusted to the charge of the head of the Medical Department and anybody requiring liquor for medicinal purposes will have to apply to the Chief Medical Officer who would issue such quantity as he would deem absolutely necessary after instituting due inquiries. Any disobedience of this order would render one liable to a fine of Rs. 500 or six months' simple or rigorous imprisonment as may be deemed advisable on the merits of each case. This arrangement has been received with great satisfaction, as it would now check the tendency of all low class people to indulge in country liquor freely.

ASSAM EXCISE ADMINISTRATION REPORT.

The Administration Report of the Excise Department for the year 1924-25 published by the Assam Government, shows that the consumption of country spirit, ganja and opium increased during the year under report by 14.7, 8.6 and 2,5 per cent respectively. This all-round increase was attributed principally to the natural revulsion after the collapse of the non-co-operators' temperance agitation. Better supervision, detection of cases of illicit distillation and of several ganja cases, the vigilance exercised over the smuggling of Malwa opium and the increase in the number of foreigners addicted to ganja, were additional factors at work The consumption of liquor and drugs having increased, the revenue demand for the year expanded, under all heads, from Rs 51,55,500 to Rs. 55,18,888, showing an increase of Rs. 3,63,388 or 7 per cent. In order to check the consumption of country spirit, the Deputy Commissioners have been authorised to close 3 or 4 country spirit shops in a district between the hours of 2 p m. and 4 p. m on days other than market days and holidays. A second change of reform has been that the system of settling opium shops by tender is now extended to the district of Nowgong, The new system of selling opium only to consumers who hold passes from the Deputy Commissioner has been introduced in Kamrup with effect from July 1925. The total revenue from country spirit amounted to Rs. 14,66,765 or Rs. 3,32,195 in excess of the previous year. To put a check on illicit trade and to meet the demands of the garden coolies several shops were opened in the various districts. Cases of drunkenness increased inevitably to 186 from 131 last year, but it is felt that the increase is due more to the greater vigilance of the police than to the larger quantities of liquor consumed. The number of licences for ganja were 127 as against

realpatidar.com

136 last year. The actual increase in consumption was 19 maunds 24 seers. Thus consumption has again gone up, but a reaction was bound to set in as already stated, after the temperance agitation subsided, and it is believed that this reaction is only just beginning.

Cambridge Union and Prohibition: The Special Correspondent of the Sunday Times, Lahore, writes to that paper: The most astounding resolution ever proposed at the Cambridge Union was this: "That this House would welcome prohibition of the sale of alcoholic liquors in this country." Equally with Oxford, there has been enjoyed at Cambridge a freedom from the Liquor Control Board as ample as that in Devon or Cornwall. Mr. G. W. Theobald (Emmanuel), who opened the debate in a crowded House, said they had no wish to force their proposal on the public apart from the public wish. They had to safeguard liberty. He spoke with enthusiasm of merry nights when one embraced lamp-posts as the friendliest of material things, but argued against the sale of drink on economic and moral grounds. £410,000,000 were spent in alcohol. Then there was the waste of time due to drinking. Alcohol was a drug which led to moral loss. He made a strong appeal on behalf of the future of the Empire. The speech was a singularly able one, and the House and gallery applauded it. Mr. E. L. Davison (St. John's), in opposition, said that they were not appalled by the picture of hob-nailed livers. They had heard much about the Ford firm, which had exploited its workmen by making them dry to the financial advantage of the firm of Ford. He condemned, amid applause, the interference in England of "Pussyfoot" who betrayed a fine knowledge of saloons in America as distinguished from the public house in England. The public house was an Englishman's club. He pointed out that the murders of wives had increased in the United States since that country went dry. Mr. K. Gauba (Downing) said he could not see an England free that was not sober. He traced, amid cheers, the course of the drinker. The moderate drinker, in time took seriously to drink until the period was reached when a man took gin, and then a second gin to put the other right. (Laughter and cheers.) When this alcohol was prescribed by a doctor that was all right (Loud cheers.) Finally, he insisted that, on the moral side, the liquor traffic was a disaster. He did not think that burglary should be connected with alcohol. Burglars as a rule were teetotallers. (Cheers.) Those who were guilty of assault and robbery with violence were drinkers (Cheers.) He pointed to the night clubs to which the honourable opposer belonged as "haunts of vice due to drink." This allusion raised the wildest hilarity. Mr T. A. Sinclair (St. John's) followed against the motion. After further speeches a division was taken, and resulted in a majority of 8 against the motion.

Opium Enquiry in East Godaveri; In pursuance of a request from Mr. C. F. Andrews and a circular from the All-India Congress Committee, the Andhra Provincial Congress Committee has appointed a Committee to enquire into the excessive consumption of opium in the East Godaveri District ranging to over 67 seers per 10,000 of the population, and prepare a report. In accordance with this, a questionnaire has been issued to the people.

Dutch Churches in South Africa Demand Local Option: The South African Outlook writes: We rejoice in the brave stand in favour of Local Option the Federal Council of the Dutch Reformed Churches of South Africa took at the Raad der Kerken which met in Durban. The following is a translation of the resolution: "The Federal Council of the Dutch Reformed Churches of South Africa has noted the fact that the Christian Churches of our land, and of most others lands, under a deep sense of the nameless misery which is caused by the abuse of strong drink, and under the conviction that the existing liquor laws are unfair to the community, have, almost without exception, felt themselves called powerfully and repeatedly to demand the legislative enactment of Local Option regarding the drink trade. It is, therefore, with deep disappointment that the Council has noted that our Parliament has, on more than one occasion, disregarded the expressed wish of united Christendom in this matter by rejecting the Bill for Local Option. It is, however, impossible for the Christian Churches, in view of the misery which is being caused by the existing conditions, and the injustice which is thereby being perpetrated to acquiesce in the said rejection. The Council is convinced that it is still the heartfelt desire of the Churches that the said legislation shall be obtained. The Council therefore resolves to appoint a Committee from its membership for the purpose of calling, at a convenient time and place, a strong inter-Church Congress for the purpose of planning an effective programme of action which will lead to the speedy adoption of a legislative enactment of Local Option.

Liquor Prohibition: Question of Time-Limit: Mr. C. M. Gandhi, Member, Bombay Excise Committee, in a letter to the Indian Daily Mail explaining the Committee's omission to set a time-limit for reaching the goal of Prohibition, stated that if the policy of rationing, that is, a reduction of 10 per cent. in urban and 5 per cent. in rural areas followed since 1921 were continued, Prohibition would be reached within 20 years. Rationing, however, without an intensive educative propaganda against alcohol would be unavailing and the Committee thought if the Government accepted local option, temperance reformers would be in a position to educate the people and the goal would be attained even sooner. Hence the Committee thought it would not be right to fix a time-limit. The argument advanced by some official witnesses that the enforcement of rationing would result in an increase of excise crime was not sound, as the Committee found that even in areas where the licensed quantity was not exhausted excise cases were on the increase.

Local Option in Ceylon: At the meeting of the Legislative Council held recently it was announced that the Government has appointed a Commission to "report what amendments, if any, should be made in the Local Option rules and what action, if any, is required to control the rising consumption of foreign liquor." The Commission will consist of the Controller of Revenue (Chairman), the Hon'bles Sir H. M. Fernando, Col. T. Y. Wright, W. Duraiswamy, D. B. Jayatilake, S. Rajaratnam and W. A. de Silva and Messrs F. R. Senanayake and W. A. Philips.

laudable efforts of Christian Missions and the Indian people themselves, very little is being done by the Government. There are no prescribed text-books, no examinations, no system of official inspection, no one in the Department of Education acquainted with an Indian language, and no Indian on the Board of Education. 3. We respectfully submit to Your Excellency that it will be a wise investment of public monies to establish a system whereby educational facilities for the training and moulding of character shall be placed within reach of our 24,000 children under 15 years of age. 4. The preliminary appointment of a Committee of enquiry to throughly explore this grave and urgent problem will doubtless show that questions such as teacher-training, language, and finance etc., are not insuperable. 5. The following resolution was passed unanimously at a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Indian Reform League held on the 10th instant:—"That the Government of Fiji be asked to appoint a Committee or Commission to consider and recommend what steps should be taken by the Government for formulating a progressive policy of, and affording facilities for, education for the children of all classes of the Indian Community in Fiji." 6. We place great stress on the need for the personnel of this Committee or Commission being men in sympathy with the educational needs of the Indian Community."

AN IMMORAL TAXATION PROPOSAL.

The Dnyanodaya, Poona, of which the Rev. J. P. Edwards is the English editor, writes: Mr. A. N. Surve, M.L.C., of Bombay, deserves all possible praise for the brave fight he has made against the immoral proposal of the Bombay Government to share, as a tax, the proceeds on totalisator betting. Such a proposal, coming as it does from Government, shows how far down the 'slippery slope' the authorities have gone since 1912 when a member of the Government pointed out that to legalise betting at all by statute was an attempt 'to perpetuate a technical illegality.' If Government is going to claim a certain percentage of all the takings by the totalisator at the race-courses, then this means a complete legal recognition of the whole gambling principle which must inevitably exercize a pernicious influence on the whole of India's public life. That such a proposal should emanate from Government is to be most deeply deplored, and all who believe in the value of the British connection with India must oppose it to the very utmost. The British Cabinet turned down this proposal for Britain, though the annual yield would have been five million pounds and though Britain is needing cash so badly to meet its post-war debt payments and its unemployment expenditure, the proposal being negatived because taxation would have implied legal recognition of the gambling principle and because taxation would inevitably increase betting. If such reasons prevailed with the British Government with regard to Britain, why, in the name of all that is just, should they not be given their proper weight by British administrators in India? As a Britisher himself the present writer feels utterly ashamed at the very necessity of having to put on record his protest in such a matter, and he would call upon his fellow-countrymen in India to set their faces against such ruinous and inequitable means of raising taxes

If the public immorality and inequity of foisting on India a legal recognition of gambling which British opinion has prevented in Britain itself—if these arguments do not appeal, then what do one's fellow-countrymen think of so-called Christian statesmen having to take lessons in public morality from those they glibly call non-Christians? Let them ponder ever what Mr. Surve of Bombay points out in his able minute of dissent, that 'both the Hindu and the Mahomedan laws have penalised gambling as a crime...; but in this Presidency the Government...are trying to turn people into gamblers whose religions declare gambling to be a sin': ...Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas, speaking in the Legislative Assembly at Simla on September 2 this year, condemned the proposal to take a share of the receipts from the totalisator on the race-course in the following words: 'If the race-course and betting on the race-course were things which could be considered to be in the interests of the masses, one might have been able to understand this. The various cases of ruin of people who are attached to the race-course are notorious, and I really wonder if the Government of India and those responsible for the good name of British administration in this country would not deplore the day which might come when they would be driven to this pass.' If such utterances do not move those who favour this dangerous proposal, we would ask them to weigh over what Mr. Natarajan said a few days ago, with all its serious implication: 'It is a maxim of jurisprudence that whatever the sovereign permits, he commands, and if Government not only permits, but also becomes a participator in the profits of gambling, the evil is bound to acquire an artificial respectability in the eyes of the ignorant masses who now regard it as an evil, though they may not always be able to resist its temptation. If Government can take a share of the profits of gambling, why should it not take the whole by running the totalisator in the precincts of the Secretariat or Government House?'

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Famine Danger in Orissa: In the course of a long communique referring to three articles which have appeared in the press by Mr. C. F. Andrews headed "The Famine Danger in Orissa," and to which we referred last week, the Government of Bihar and Orissa says: As these articles are calculated to give a misleading impression as to the attitude of the Government it is desirable to emphasise certain facts. The Government have throughout been fully alive to the serious nature of the situation in Puri. They have already adopted such relief measures as were possible and suitable during the rains and they now await the proposal of the Commissioner (who has been touring in the flooded tracts of Cuttack and Puri during the past fortnight). It does not appear that during his stay in Puri Mr. Andrews approached the District Officer, Rao Bahadur Dayanidhi Das who is himself an Oriya. Had he done so, he might have learnt both what relief measures had already been taken and what are now proposed and possible. The apprehension that the subordinate officials are again misimising matters would not have been entertained

The District Officer and his subordinates have been moving through the distressed tracts during the past four months and have already distributed nearly a lakh of rupees in the way of relief. It is the intention of the Government as soon as they receive the Commissioner's report to publish a statement explaining the extent of the distress and the measures which will be taken to cope with it.

Poona Depressed Classes Mission Society: The Secretary writes: The 20th Anniversary of the Depressed Classes Mission Society was celebrated at its Ahalyashram Hall at Poona on the Dipavali day, under the presidentship of Mr. K. G. Bagde, B.A., LL.B., ex-member of the Legislative Assembly. After the divine service, speeches on the several useful activities in the past 20 years by the Mission were made by Mr. Krishna Rao Patade, Subedar Ghatge, Councillor, Poona City Municipality, Mr. A. B. Gavande B.A., Mr. S J. Kamble, Councillor, Suburban Municipality, and Prof. Nagarkar of Bombay. All are requested to help the laudable cause undertaken by the Mission by subscribing to its funds. The 9th session of the Indian Anti-untouchability Conference is postponed in as much as a similar Conference is organised at Madras in early November. It is earnestly requested that the advocates of the Depressed Classes in Mysore, will also arrange for an untouchability conference in the immediate future, which will certainly add to the good name of Mysore. The D. C. M. Society is maintaining at present (1) Full Primary A. V. School, (1) Students' Hostel, (1) Girls' School, (1) Feeder School, (1) Night Class, (1) Tailoring, Carpentry, Drawing and Painting Class, (1) Free Reading Room and Library, (1) Dispensary, (1) Boy Scouts Troop, (1) Debating and Sports Club, (1) Bhajan Samaj, and (1) Sunday School and Gita Class. Besides this the Mission Society organises public lectures and conferences with a view to remove the unjust spirit of untouchability afflicting the one-fourth Hindu race and one-sixth of the total Indian population. The annual deficit ranges over Rs. 2,000. The Society, therefore, appeals to all to practically sympathise with its work by contributing a suitable sum towards the Society's funds, which will be duly acknowledged by the Society's Hon. Treasurer, 896, Nana's Peth, Poona City.

Are divorce facilities to be extended?: The Catholic Leader, Madras, writes: Of all the attempts to bring the institution of marriage into contempt, perhaps none are more insidious and dangerous than those of the ministers of religion outside the Catholic Church. The facility with which divorces are granted has tended to a constant increase in their number, and one would expect Protestant ministers to plead for its abolition or at least restrict it to flagrant cases. The local Daily Express publishes the report of a speech of a certain Rev. Dr. W. F. Geikie Cobb, Rector of St. Ethelburga's Church, Bishopsgate, and Chairman of the Divorce Law Reform Union, in which he pleads for a further extension of divorce facilities. "The time has come," he declared, "when we should free ourselves from marriage laws made in the Middle Ages by people who knew nothing about it, because they were celibates." Marriage laws about the indissolubility and unity of the marriage contract were not made by medieval celibates but by Christ Himself. The inadmissibility of absolute divorce was ordained by Christ and the modern married clergymen are notoriously forsaking His teaching in their advocacy of the dissolution of the marriage bond for natural motives. The spread of such teaching will drive the world to adopt a standard of morality, of which even savage tribes would be ashamed. Only a return to the Catholic view of marriage can save the world from decay and ruin.

Depressed Classes and Temple Entry: The Hindu, Madras, writes:—On the 20th May last, "two members of the depressed classes, aged 20 and 22 respectively, were convicted," to quote the Law Member's statement in the Council in reply to a question by MR. R. VEERIAN, Adi-Dravida representative, "and sentenced to two months' rigorous imprisonment for trespassing into the temple at Narayanavaram with intent to wound the feelings of the public." MR. VEERIAN stated that the entry of the Adi-Dravidas was accidental, but the Law Member pointed out that "the Court found that the trespass was deliberate, not accidental." Granting that the Court's finding is true, still one feels that the punishment was out of all proportion to the offence. The offence was at worst technical and one should have thought that the ends of justice would have been sufficiently met by the imposition of a nominal fine. Sentences like the one under consideration are surely not calculated to promote intercommunal harmony and cordiality of relations and we shall be surprised indeed if, as a result of the Government's consideration of the case which the Law Member promised, the sentence is not remitted or its severity substantially reduced.

The Andhra Ladies' Conference: The Ladies' Conference met on October 25th at Masulipatam. Mrs. Unnava Lakshminarayana presided. Nathavajjala Saraswatamma Garu, Chairman of the Reception Committee, and the President, both delivered lectures on subjects pertaining to the regeneration of the fair sex. The following are the resolutions passed at the Conference: 1. This Conference resolves that all patriotic Indians should send their children to National Schools, and that charka should be introduced into night schools. 2. This Conference further resolves that people do recognise at least now the value of Khaddar and that they should use Khaddar on all festive occasions. 3. This Conference requests all ladies to remove the evil of untouchability. 4. This Conference encourages all ladies to make united efforts for the attainment of Swarajya. 5. This Conference requests all the ladies to give up the custom of early marriages and to remove the evils of bride-dowry and bridegroom dowry. 6. This Conference urges all ladies to devise a scheme for removing all evils involved in widowed life. 7. This Conference regrets the death of Bi Amman. 8. This Conference expresses deep feelings of sorrow at the demise of that great Andhra lady, Gundu Achamamba Garu.

Bombay Corporation on Electoral Disqualification of Political Prisoners: The Bombay Corporation unanimously passed at its meeting on Monday the following resolution: "That the Governor-in-Council be requested to order that the disqualification arising under Section 16 (b) of the Bombay Municipal Act, be removed as against all those persons who have undergone terms of imprisonment for political offence involving no moral turpitude for the purposes of the next Bombay Municipal election, and that the Act be amended as far as Section 16 (b) is concerned, so that a sentence of imprisonment for political offences involving no moral turpitude should not cause any disqualification."

Scholarships for Girls: Commenting on Government's reply to a question in the Bombay Legislative Council asked by Mr. W. S. Mukadam that, while Rs. 2100 are set apart specifically for scholarships to girls in secondary schools in Sind, in the Presidency proper, no separate provision is made for girls in secondary schools, the Praja Bandhu, Ahmedabad, writes: Why? Is there no need for encouraging secondary education among girls in the Presidency proper? Government cannot be unaware that most of the girls give up education after the primary stage. If secondary and higher education is to be promoted among girls they should be given special scholarships. Indian parents in general have not as yet realised the value of secondary and higher education for their girls. They are therefore not disposed to send their girls to secondary schools and Colleges. The cost of fees there is prohibitive for even boys.

Cochin Princess's Success at Hons. Examination: It is understood that Princess Ikkavu Amma Thampuratti of the ruling family of Cochin State has come out successful in the B. A. Honours degree of the Madras University, her subject being English language and literature. She was educated privately. She is the first Princess from a ruling family of the Cochin State to gain this distinction. The tutors were presented with bangles etc., by His Highness the Maharajah of Cochin.

A Freak of Nature: A young Bania woman of Barajada, a village near Limbdi, gave birth to a child with queer features. The queerest of all was that in the neck of the child a dead serpent was found. The child lived but a few minutes.

Dry Laws Will Benefit Indians: The following extract from an American journal, the Philadelphia Public Ledger, will be read with much interest: Prohibition measures in India have greatly improved the condition of the working people in the opinion of C V. Mehta, a member of the Executive Council in Bombay who arrived recently on a visit. Mr. Mehta, who was formerly minister in charge of excise, estimated that in Bombay the drinking was about a third less than before the dry campaign began. During strikes or any serious trouble, Mr. Mehta said, all liquor shops in Bombay are closed. Three years ago during the non-co-operation movement, when volunteers picketed liquor shops in Bomboy and Poona, there was virtually no consumption of alcohol for five months and the authorities found that the condition of the workers had distinctly improved. "The majority of Indians have virtually been abstainers for centuries, so it was easy for us to work toward prohibition at a quicker rate," said Mr. Mehta, "and in two and half years we were able to reduce consumption from 2,800,000 gallons to 1,800,000 gallons. There has been a relative improvement in the condition of the masses as a result."

Fasting To Remove Untouchability: One Tulsiram Lodhi is reported to have commenced observing fasts from the 24th October, with a view to bring pressure on the Hindu community to remove untouchability.

New President of Madras Corporation: Mr. Sami Venkatachellam Chetty, M. L. C., (Swarajist) was elected President of the Corporation of Madras by 27 votes against 20. His rival candidate was Dr. Natesa Mudaliar of the "Justice" party.

Local Option in Ceylon: In endorsing an appeal from the Jaffna Central Temperance League for funds amounting to Rs. 4200 being the expenses of closing 21 taverns on an average of Rs. 200 per tavern, the Hindu Organ, Jaffna. writes: As things are, Local Option is the only resource left to us, much as we would wish for Total Prohibition which should certainly be our goal. If Local Option had been introduced when taverns were established all over the Island, we would have been saved all this trouble. But now just as we have to pay for maintaining police, prisons, and reformatories, we have also to pay for driving an evil out of the country. Unless we are prepared to make some sacrifice, we cannot hope to do so. We are sure the public will generously respond to the appeal.

Fracas in Palghat: An A. P. I. message says that, as a result of a serious fracas that occurred at Kalpathy Agraharam in South Malabar between some Brahmin residents and a batch of Ezhava Arya Samajists, an Ezhava received a lathi cut on the head, and a Brahmin youth was stabbed. Both of them were removed to the hospital.

NOTES

The Lucknow University Convocation: This year especially some of the Universities have been fortunate in their choice of persons for delivering the annual Convocation address. The address of the Right Hon. Sastri to the Mysore University has almost become a classic by this time and the one delivered by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru recently to the Lucknow University was equally excellent. It is a notorious fact that commercialism is the dominant note of our present-day education. Education for education's sake, is not the goal. Our University degrees are intended only as passports to Government clerical service. No wonder then students think that their education is ended with their College career. As long as Government offices absorbed many graduates, everything went on smoothly. But, with the increasing turn-over of our University factories by thousands every year, the question of finding employment for these graduates is becoming more and more difficult. Judged by this standard, therefore, our educational system is a failure. It is not on account of it, but in spite of it, that we have a Bose, a Ray and a Raman in our midst. Sir Sapru, therefore, rightly stressed that the time has come for laying greater emphasis upon thoroughness and depth, at any rate, in scientific and technical, and possibly some other subjects. Another of the patent defects of our educational system is the neglect of our own languages. Sir Sapru almost pathetically lamented the deplorable consequences which have followed from the adoption of English as the medium of instruction when he said: "After all, the pride which an Indian may take in his command of the English language must rest on a very slippery foundation, while the humiliation arising from his inability to express himself in his own language with dignity and elegance must at times make him feel his intellectual and literary bankruptcy."

Indian Christians and Communal Representation: We are very sorry to see that the contagion of communal representation has spread among the Indian Christian community which had, under the wise and able guidance of leaders like Dr S. K. Datta, K. T. Paul, Rev. J. R. Chitambar and others, stood firmly against the temptation to demand communal representation for Indian Christians. At the annual Conference of the Indian Christian Association of the United Provinces which was held last month at Fategarh under the presidentship of Prof. E. Ahmad Shah of Lucknow, a resolution was passed advocating communal representation "in view of the present situation in India". The strong plea put up by Dr. and Mrs. Chitambar to pursue the policy of trust and confidence in the Hindu and Mahomedan communities and to drop the resolution advocating communal representation, the evils of which Dr. Chitamber explained at length, was, according to the report, a voice in the wilderness. So deeply rooted was the vice of communalism in the rank and file of the community. We fail to understand how "the present situation in India" justifies communal representation. Communal representation has been the greatest hindrance to Hindu-Moslem unity, and to all who have ears to hear and eyes to see, the present situation in the country conveys a lesson just the contrary to what has been inferred by the U. P. Indian Christian Conference. We hope the leaders of the community in other provinces will take a lesson from the U. P. Conference and see that the contagion is not allowed to spread.

India's Poverty and the Cost of her Civil Service: Every visitor to India has been struck with the appalling poverty of India's masses, and recently the subject has figured prominently in some of the American newspapers. We need not be told by any foreign visitor about India's poverty which, we have repeatedly said, is at the bottom of the present wide-spread discontent in the country. The figures quoted in the last week's Dnanodaya from Mr. Savel Zimand's article in an American journal confirm the oft-repeated complaint about the high cost of her Civil Service to which every Indian publicist has given expression. Mr. Zimand had been in this country for a pretty long time and had interviews with both officials and non-officials, from Lord Reading to Mahatma Gandhi, and his observations, coming as they do from an unbiased source, are not without special interest. Mr. Zimand observes that 64.6 per cent. of India's population are under-nourished, and that the 1921 census showed that over 70 per cent. of the workers of the city live in single rooms—an average of over four persons per room. 'About a fifth of the single rooms in Bombay contain from six to nine persons and 13 per cent. have ten persons in each room.' In contrast to the miserable condition of the people, Mr. Zimand refers to the high salaries paid to the Indian Civil Service which, he contends, are "far in excess of what India can afford to pay". This can readily be seen, he observes, by comparing the salaries of a few posts in India with similar ones in the United States. The Viceroy gets a salary of about $ 83,000 with various allowances; the President of the United States receives $ 75,000. The pay of a member of the Viceroy's Council is about $26,000; a Cabinet Member of America receives $ 12,900. The Governor of Madras Presidency gets $ 40,000 besides certain allowances;

the Governor of New York State receives $ 10,000. The Chief Justice of Bengal gets $24,000; the Chief Justice of the United States receives $15,000. Presumably Mr.Zimand has worked out the figures from the emoluments paid to the Civil Service before the increases recommended by the Lee Commission were given effect to.

Mr. Andrews in Orissa: The Bihar and Orissa Government has followed with a quick rejoinder to Mr. Andrews' articles on "The Famine Danger in Orissa" which appeared in the daily press. If anything, it only reveals the vast amount of distress that still remains to be relieved. Mr. Andrews has got no particular antipathy towards the Bihar and Orissa Government, nor is he one of those who are apt to make rash statements founded more upon fancy than upon fact. Mr. B. Das, an Independent M. L. A. from Orissa, has practically endorsed Mr. Andrews' observations and has controverted the Government communique. But whatever may be the extent of Government's efforts towards combating famine distress, we do not see how it will justify its action in allowing two C. I. D. officers to shadow Mr. Andrews while he was engaged in investigating the districts of Puri and Cuttack. It would have been more straightforward for the Government to have refused permission to Mr. Andrews to carry on his investigations at all rather than to insult such a tried social worker in this way. And this, in spite of its solemn protestations that it is ready to welcome non-official help and assistance ! Inscrutable are the ways of Governments.

Moplas and the Andamans: We are glad to see that the Madras Government have decided to suspend the Andaman colonisation scheme upon which they had set their heart. The scheme, as we already pointed out, was suspected on all sides as a clever attempt on the part of Government not only to denude Malabar of one of its vigorous races but also to kill their martial spirit by subjecting them to the rigours of an unhealthy climate as that of the Andamans which are unfit even for criminals. An Anglo-Indian who recently returned from the Andamans gave it as his opinion in a Calcutta paper that the islands are unfit for Anglo-Indian settlement. If such is the case with Anglo-Indians, we do not see how it will be different in the case of the Moplas who, after all, are also human beings. Sir Alexander Muddiman, the Home Member of the Government of India, has returned from a visit to the Andamans where he had been to personally ascertain for himself the suitability or otherwise of the islands for settlement purposes, and whatever may be the results of his investigation, we wish the Madras Government abandoned the scheme once for all.

Europeanized Turkey: Evidently, the process of westernization in Turkey is proceeding fast apace. It is said that the hat question is engaging popular attention even more intensely than the Mosul question. A decree has been passed authorising a long-term loan to all Government servants to enable them to buy a hat and a suit of European clothes. Shoes need no longer be taken off by worshippers in mosques unless they happen to be muddy. And if the proposal for making Sunday instead of Friday as the day of rest is carried out, then the process of bringing Turkey into line with Europe will fairly be complete. The women also are determined not to lag behind in social reform. They have discarded the veil and put on hats, for 'no civilised lady can be in society in Europe wearing a veil.' The Women's Union has requested that in future mosques should be placed at its disposal once a week for the purpose of holding women's conferences. But one would like to know whether Kemal Pasha has the country with him in all this process of Europeanization. Probably not, for it is well-known that there is a strong orthodox and conservative party ranged against him. Kemal Pasha's attempts at forcing social reform upon the people by means of coercive legislation will only have the effect of provoking an orthodox outburst. While we have every sympathy with the efforts of Kemal Pasha to bring Turkey into a line with other European countries, we deprecate his making a fettish of Western civilization which, after all, is far from being perfect.

The Deposition of the Shah: The proverbially unalterable laws of the Medes and the Persians are not, after all, so unalterable as one would suppose. Thus, at one stroke, the Khajar dynasty has been done away with and the Shah has been deposed. The suddenness with which the deposition has been effected has almost come as a surprise. But, for a parallel to this, we need not go too far. Only a year ago, the Caliph found himself deposed one night and deported to the Continent. Persia is only following her neighbour. But whether Persia is going to establish a Republic, time alone will reveal. Meanwhile, it is a personal triumph to Reza Khan, the Premier, who, by cleverly winning over the army to his side, has raised himself to dictatorial power. The leading powers have also bestowed their official recognition on Reza Khan's government. We do not think the people of Persia will take seriously the angry protests made by the ex-Shah of the treachery of Reza Khan or of the voluntary sacrifice he has imposed upon himself in the good interests of his country, for His Majesty, by his frequent travels, had long ago ceased to command the loyalty and affections of his people.

The Sikhs and the Gurudwara Act: The decision of the Shiromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee to work the Sikh Gurudwara Act will, we trust, bring to an end the protracted struggle between the Punjab Government and the Sikhs. Reconciliation will be complete if the Government meets the Sikhs in a sympathetic spirit on the question of the release of the Sikh leaders who are still in prison. They believe, rightly or wrongly, that the undertaking required of them is too big a price to pay for their freedom. The cloud of suspicion and bitterness will linger on the horizon so long as they are not released. Complete reconciliation seems only possible by the unconditional release of the Sikh prisoners, and we hope that Sir Malcom Hailey, who has shown real statesmanship in handling the Gurudwara situation, will not stand on prestige, and that he will announce the immediate release of the imprisoned leaders.

BOMBAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1925.

SWARAJIST POLITICS.

We have heard it repeatedly stated both in the press and in the platform that the Patna decision of the All-India Congress Committee had "converted the Congress into an essentially political organisation." Even Mahatma Gandhi made the very same statement in the course of his recent speech at Sitapur to which we referred the other day. The statement that the Congress was "converted into an essentially political organisation" implies that hitherto it was not an essentially political organisation. What was the programme of the Congress till it was "converted into an essentially political organisation" at Patna? For theoretical purposes the constructive programme of the Congress, which though utterly neglected in practice, remained the working programme of the Congress in general, while the Swaraj Party which was but a section—though the dominating one—within the Congress had, besides the constructive programme to which it owed its allegiance by the very fact of its being a part of the Congress, its activities within the Councils. The complete domination of the Congress by the Swaraj Party at Patna eclipsed the constructive programme and made the Congress for all practical purposes the machinery of the Swaraj Party for carrying on the work of the Party as distinguished from Congress work.

In our article in the Reformer of the 31st October, we urged the necessity of evolving a constructive programme. The All-India Executive of the Swaraj Party at its meeting at Nagpur decided to make no alteration in the Party's programme, in spite of the indefiniteness and lull in the Party to which expression was given by certain influential leaders of the Party. The Nagpur meeting of the Swarajists was, as could have been foreshadowed, a seeming triumph of the leadership of Pandit Motilal Nehru, although, in view of the approaching Congress session in December, it could only be considered as having been the outcome of a passive acquiescence by the leaders of the Maharashtra and Berar Swarajists. But the utterances of Pandit Motilal Nehru soon after the Nagpur meeting were not calculated to strengthen the solidarity of the Party. His utterly ill-advised challenge in the course of his speech at a Nagpur public meeting to those holding views different from his to resign from the Swaraj Party and seek re-election, and his subsequent threat that he would not hesitate to amputate a diseased limb, implying thereby that he would not tolerate anyone who might dare to differ from him, were, to say the least, most unfortunate. As the Tribune of Lahore rightly points out, "a more ill-advised utterance than this it would be difficult to think of," and "if, as a consequence, any split in the Party is likely to occur, which Heaven forbid, Pandit Motilal will have largely to thank his tactlessness and his indiscretion for it." In the course of a speech at a public meeting in Bombay on Monday, the Pandit, having apparently been appraised of the injustice he had done to those who differed from him in having held out the "challenge" and the "threat", made it clear that, in having represented to the All-India Executive of the Swaraj Party on the need for a change in the programme of the Party, the Bombay members, of whom Mr. Jayakar was the spokesman, were perfectly within their rights, and that Messrs. Jayakar and Kelkar, having been in a minority, had, like honourable gentlemen and men of culture that they were, subordinated their views to those of the majority. This explanation has only made the Pandit's indiscretion in challenging the "dissentients" to resign from the Party and in threatening them with dismissal, all the more glaring. We are not, therefore, surprised at the resignation tendered by Messrs. Jayakar and Kelkar of their membership of the Executive Council of the All-India Swaraj Party. In their letter of resignation they observe:—

> We find that Pandit Motilal Nehru is violating the understanding arrived at Nagpur by openly preaching a violent crusade against responsive co-operation while insisting on our remaining silent. We wish to exercise our right to reply to his criticisms which are causing great misunderstanding and prejudice in the public mind. We recognise the desirability of our ceasing to be members of the Swarajya Party Executive Council while we reply to the Pandit's criticisms. We are, therefore, tendering our resignations of our membership of that Council so as not to embarass our colleagues thereon and in order to be able to exercise our right of reply to the Pandit with freedom and frankness.

Now what is the programme of the Swaraj Party? We looked in vain to find in the speeches of the leader of the Party any programme of national reconstruction. The Pandit indulged in what can be characterised only as political jugglery when he repeatedly said that the Party stood for its programme and nothing else. He then went on to say that the Swarajists were sometimes wreckers, sometimes obstructionists, and sometimes a combination of all. Referring to the revised programme of the Party as adopted by the General Council after the last elections, he said that (1) within the legislative bodies the Party shall whenever possible throw out the budget, (2) throw out all legislative enactments by which the bureaucracy consolidated their power, (3) move resolutions, and support bills which were for healthy growth of the national life, (4) help the constructive programme of the Indian National Congress, (5) fully defend economic policy to prevent exploitations, and (6) to protect the rights of labour, agriculture and industry.

It will be seen that the party had made a distinct departure from the original programme as explained in their election manifesto in that they had decided to move resolutions and support bills which were for the healthy growth of national life. This is certainly not consistent with "consistent uniform, and continuous obstruction" of which we had heard so much in the election speeches of the Swarajist candidates. It is also clear, however much the Pandit may maintain to the contrary, that in the course of the last three years, the policy of the Party within the Council had been diverted from the path of obstruction to various directions according to varying circumstances. The representation made by the Bombay Council Swarajists, which was backed up by influential independents, although it did not find favour with the majority of the Executive of the All-India Swaraj Party, clearly showed that the original policy of the Party has been found impracticable at least in one important province. "From our experience of the Bombay Legislative Council and of the Bombay Government", they observed, "we are of opinion that the time has come when the Swaraj Party should change its present policy to that of responsive co-operation lifting up the ban against the acceptance of Ministerships and leave the matter to the discretion of the Swarajist members of the Council of the Provinces concerned."

As the Pandit himself declared in one of his speeches, the Swaraj Party has taken over only the political programme of the Congress. The term "political," according to the Pandit and others, who by implication contend that the Congress was not a political organisation so long as the constructive programme was its working programme, does not include those activities which come under the constructive programme. Thus, as the Hindustan Times rightly observes, "the present policy of the Swarajists is an unrecognisable amalgam of co-operation and non-co-operation so far as the Councils are concerned and almost total inaction so far as the organisation of the masses is concerned." And yet the Pandit speaks of Civil Disobedience! No wonder tried workers like Dr. P. C. Ray considers this sort of talk as "bluff and bluster."

To those ultra-politicians who belittle the constructive programme, we commend a perusal of Lala Lajpat Rai's article in the latest number of his weekly, the People of Lahore, wherein he explains what is political work. Lalaji reminds the politicians that politics is only a branch of sociology, and that the political status of a country or a people is indicated by its social, intellectual and economic life. "Our political evolution has reached a stage", writes Lalaji, "when it cannot make further progress without a good deal of spade work in the social and economic fields. What we require at present is a programme of service and not one of bluff. Civil Disobedience is perfectly legitimate when the time for it is ripe, and you have a chance of success. To talk of Civil Disobedience at this gloomy juncture may be very good electioneering tactics, but it certainly is not sound politics." If we refer to what the late Mr. C. R. Das, the founder of the Swaraj Party, stated in his last public utterance at Faridpur on 2nd May, the speech the Swaraj Party considers as the "will and testament of the late Deshbandhu", we will find that Mr. Das had fully recognised the efficacy of the constructive programme. "I can see little hope of India ever being ready for Civil Disobedience", he declared in that famous Faridpur speech, "until she is prepared to work Mahatma Gandhi's constructive programme to the fullest extent". It is deplorable that the Government utterly failed to take proper note of the terms under which the late Mr. Das was prepared to co-operate with the Government. But, he did not think that by making it impossible to carry on the administration of the country without exercising exceptional powers, he would be able to prepare the country for Civil Disobedience.

In refreshing contrast to Pandit Motilal's utterances, Mrs. Naidu, the President-elect of the forthcoming Congress, gives a brief outline of the Congress programme. In an interview to a representative of the Sunday Times, Lahore, Mrs. Sarojini Naidu stated that she wanted all shades of opinion to be gradually represented in the Congress which she desired to convert from a merely demonstrative political body passing pious resolutions of contempt on Government actions to an active organisation doing substantial political work throughout the year in various directions. She wanted the Congress to take up publicity in and outside the country, labour organisations, spinning and weaving, economic research, social reform and various other departments of political activity and ask fit men to guide and control these departments. "I want" she said, "people to do away with political mahants also. I want the Congress to cease to be a monopoly of rhetoricians and orators, and become the working ground of sober and intelligent men". Pandit Motilal is confident that he would get for his Party a mandate from the Congress the terms of which, though he said he had in mind, he did not divulge to the public. We do not think that it would enhance the prestige of the Congress as the largest representative public body in India by allowing it to be made a simple machinery for the electioneering campaign of the Swaraj party. The Congress should evolve a comprehensive programme of national reconstruction which would command a compelling claim for support from all patriotic people.

THE PRESENT SITUATION IN CHINA.

Last week we dealt with only one aspect of the situation in China, namely, the Anti-Christian Movement. We have since received a pamphlet on "The Present Situation in China" published by the Philip Dodge International Study Club of Tokyo, Japan, a society composed of serious-minded people of various nationalities, which proposes to obtain and study reliable information about the origins, racial characteristics and present life of nations or races with a view to discerning the spiritual force which each nation or race has contributed to the life of the world-family. In this pamphlet an attempt is made to study the situation in China, not as it is seen by the prejudiced eyes of the British or the French Government, but from the point of view of the Chinese people, which is what is wanted. The one fact that stands out clearly is the awakening of present-day China. The same foreign pressure which once disintegrated China is now welding it into a coherent whole. Well has it been said by an American witness: "The Great European war was begun by the killing of one man,

He was a Prince—but the murder of one coolie in a cotton mill in Shanghai may kindle a flame which cannot be put out and may develop into the greatest conflagration the world has ever seen." This, in fact, sums up the immediate cause of the Shanghai disturbances. The Shanghai outburst was nothing but the result of a long series of injustices which the Europeans at Shanghai had piled upon the Chinese, and it is but natural that students who are imbued with western ideas and ideals should have taken the lead in this movement. Though Shanghai is Chinese territory, it is virtually administered as foreign territory. The treatment meted out to the Chinese at Shanghai reminds one of the treatment accorded to our countrymen overseas by the colonials. In front of the gate of a public park is posted a notice saying that Chinese and dogs are not permitted. Human degradation could go no further. Though the Chinese are the largest tax-payers, they have absolutely no voice at all in the Municipal Administration. Again, the British do not even respect the Settlement Treaties, for they build their roads outside the settlement boundaries. The British are also adepts at taking much from the other Powers as well. The International Settlement at Shanghai, though nominally under the control of the International Executives, is, in fact, under British control. The Municipal Council is also under the hands and influence of the British. The judicial power in the Mixed Court, though nominally shared by all the Powers' consuls, is, as a matter of fact, exercised only by the British consul. To go back to the shooting affair at Shanghai. It has now been clearly established, after investigation by a Commission at which representatives from six Powers participated, that the students were unarmed and not riotous in behaviour, and that the whole blame rests upon the English officer who gave the order to fire, and yet what justice have the Chinese got? The English officer is not even punished. No wonder then the students went about preaching against the "Unequal Treaties" and organised the general strike and boycott which so effectively and disastrously paralysed British shipping and trade in China for a long time.

"No country in the world has been so ill-treated by the great Powers," declares Mr. H. F. Ward. The manner in which the "Unequal Treaties" were wrung out from the Chinese, will for ever remain one of the saddest chapters in the history of British dealings with foreigners. The same aggrandizing spirit which drove England to India also drove her to China from the year 1793 onwards. The British sought to impose the immoral opium trade on China. The Chinese authorities resisted it and took stringent measures against the opium traffic. The British, however, would not brook this insult and would rely upon their navy as a last resort, if necessary. So a naval battle was fought; China was defeated; a Treaty was signed; and five ports were opened. America, France, Sweden and Norway quickly followed with treaties and trade concessions. Not being content with what they had got, the British demanded the revision of the Treaty. The Chinese again resisted. So a second battle was fought; three more ports were opened and treaties were also concluded with four more foreign powers. Nor was this all. One by one China lost all her dependencies. Annam, Burma, Cochin China, Formosa and Korea, all of which had been paying tributes to her for hundreds of years, became either dependencies of England, Japan or France, or independent under their supervision. China's buffer states being removed, the way thus lay open for the Powers to carve out "spheres of influence" within the borders of China itself. This, in short, is the history of the unjust Treaties. One more thing and China's cup of misery is full. Tariff autonomy, i.e., the right of each country to regulate its own tariff by legislation or otherwise, is an essential pre-requisite for the development of trade. But the Powers have been denying to China even this elementary right on the pretext of lack of a strong central government. If China wants to regulate or change her tariff, she will have to get the consent of all the Powers concerned which experience has proved to be well nigh impossible. There are also many defects in the tariff as now fixed. First, it lacks reciprocity. Foreign importers pay only 5 per cent ad valorem while Chinese importers must pay whatever foreign states levy. Again, it is not scientific in as much as raw materials and manufactured goods are taxed alike. Necessaries of life which should be imported free of duty, have also to pay the uniform rate of 5%. At the Paris Peace Conference and Washington Conference, the Chinese delegates pleaded for tariff autonomy, but the Powers have all along been evading this issue for some reason or other. It is, therefore, pleasing to note that, on the initiative of America, a Conference has been summoned for this purpose which has been holding its sessions since the 26th of October. The decisions of the Conference are to be looked for with great interest. A perusal of the pamphlet thus forces upon us strongly the conviction that Britain and Britain alone is responsible for the recent Shanghai troubles. The only relieving feature in the situation is the thought that there are Englishmen like Mr. H. G. Wells who, recently addressing a Union of Chinese students in London, said: "It is almost a duty, in view of what has happened during the past year to speak out an apology for the attitude of our country towards the aspirations of China. I am sure I am speaking for the majority of my countrymen when I say I am ashamed for what has happened in China."

SOCIAL REFORMERS AND THE DEPRESSED CLASSES.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In the recent obituary notices of the late Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, very appropriate as they were in several respects, he is spoken of as a social reformer; in fact it is clear that he was regarded as one of the greatest of social reformers. May I, therefore, ask whether a great social reformer, or even a small one, can be so if, when well able, he does nothing, at least of real nature for one great branch, perhaps the principal branch of social reform—I mean the Depressed Classes? About 18 years ago Sir R. G. Bhandarkar did not subscribe any money to the Poona Depressed Classes Mission Society. On the best authority, I believe he actually went to the length of refusing when asked to do so, the reason being that he was annoyed because the Society rightly declined to remain a branch of the Prarthana Samaj, under the auspices of which it had, I understand, been started. The current subscription list of the Society does not include Sir R. G. Bhandarkar's name. I conclude, therefore, that for 18 years at least, he gave no money to it. If the "Satanic"—Englishmen are now as proud of this title as they are of that of "contemptible" applied to their pre-war army—British Government, a Maharaja and one or two wealthy Banias, (practically the sole sources of income,) had done the same, the Society would have died 18 years ago, and there would have been an end of it.

When Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, the "great social reformer" passed away, very many persons expressed their sorrow and regret; in fact crowded meetings were held in several places for the purpose. But how was the principal branch of social reform in the "great reformer's" own city affected? The answer, of course, can only be, strange to say—in no way whatever. His death can have made even less difference to the Society, and to the brave men who, in spite of much general hostility, keep it going than would that of any of the very humble persons of the depressed classes who practically alone give individual subscriptions to it. The Depressed Classes, therefore, had no reason to mourn his death, at least in his guise of a "great social reformer" or for anything he had done for them.

Judging by the financial interest that not only the late Sir R. G. Bhandarkar took, but also, still more strange, every other so-called social reformer, with very few exceptions, and all self-styled adherents to social reform take in the Depressed Classes, it might well be imagined that the improvement in the lot of those classes is not a branch of social reform at all. Is it not, therefore, high time that almost all social reformers, so-called, gave up all further pretence of interest in the Depressed Classes? No charity can exist an hour without money, and those with very few exceptions whose "interest" in anything stops short at money had better not bother about that thing at all, as they cannot really care a tuppence about it. The very few exceptions I refer to, do not subscribe to the Depressed Classes either, but they give their lives to other branches of social reform, and as they are pauperizing themselves in consequence, nothing more can be expected of them.

In a leading article on 22nd July last the Indian Daily Mail animadverted on the fact that "improvement in the lot of the Depressed Classes in India is proceeding very slowly," and the President of the recent Provincial Social Conference even said it had hardly improved at all. I ask, is it surprising? When so-called social reformers, from the greatest to the least, well-to-do as well as ill-to-do, care so little about the lot of these classes that they do not subscribe a single pie to help them, how can it be expected that their lot will progress otherwise than slowly? In fact, as the plight of these classes is due entirely to the tyranny and to the cruelty of the other classes, and it is therefore almost impossible for them to rise without outside help, it is a wonder, considering the largely hostile attitude towards them of the other classes still, that improvement in their lot makes any progress at all. I have already said whence alone the outside help comes. The writer of the article, of course, missed the true reason for the slow progress to which he referred, and hunted about for other and minor ones.

7th November 1925, 19, Bombay Rd., Kirkee.

Yours etc., H. STEEN, Lt.-Col., Indian Army (Retired).

[Col. Steen's criticism shows that he does not know the history of the Depressed Classes Mission Society, which led several of its founders, including Sir Narayan Chandavarkar, to give up their connection with it. The breaking-up with the Prarthana Samaj, of which he approves, had a significance which Sir Ramakrishna understood, but Col Steen has not. However, we need only say here that the Prarthana Samaj has its own D. C. Schools and other social activities which its members are bound primarily to support —Ed., I. S. R.]

WHAT JAPAN OWES TO INDIA.

Prof. J. Thakakusu, Professor of Sanskrit in the Imperial University of Tokio (Japan), whose interesting articles on "What Buddhists Are Doing in Japan" and "India and Japan" we reprinted in previous issues, writes in the October number of the Young East, a Japanese magazine of Buddhist life and thought, published from Tokio :—

In the preceding two articles I have tried as far as possible to study the part played by Indian teachers and thinkers in the growth of civilization and culture of ancient Japan. In order to break monotony, I now propose to consider things brought from India to Japan, which have exercised powerful influence on the religious life of the Japanese people, though nothing definite is known concerning their bearers. To begin with, let me take up Indian deities of greater or less importance introduced in to Japan. If investigation is fully made, it will be seen that practically the whole of Hindu pantheon is represented in this country.

HINDU PANTHEON.

In Japan we have "seven deities of fortune," who are most popular among the masses. Three of them are of Indian origin. The first is Daikokuten, i. e, Mahakala. This deity is a form of Siva in his capacity of destroyer and in India is generally represented black with a terrific aspect. The Japanese Doikoku-ten, however, is of very gentle feature, though black in colour. A Japanese house has a pillar called Daikoku bashira, which is the chief support of the building. In early times, it was customary to enshrine the deity in this pillar. To-day this custom is fast disappearing, but it can still be seen remaining in old temples. As in India, the capacity of this deity as destroyer has been forgotten in Japan, and here he is worshipped as a powerful dispenser of fortune.

The second Indian deity adopted by the Japanese as a deity of fortune is Benzai-ten, i. e. Sarasvati. Now the word Sarasvati means a place containing many rivers and swamps and was undoubtedly the name of the native place of the Aryan race of the earliest period

The name remains mentioned in the Zend Avesta and the Riga-veda. The one mentioned in the former is found in Afghanistan, i. e., the River Haraquaiti and the one in the latter in India, where it now stands for a small stream called Sursooty which disappears in the desert of Rajputana. The Sarasvati mentioned in the Veda was called mother of seven rivers and was a tolerably big stream, so that in ancient times it must have represented the whole of the five rivers, especially the River Sindhu. The word sindhu means a river and was originally a common noun. It afterwards became a proper noun and the river represented by this name was called the Indus through its Persian name Hindu according to Greek pronunciation. The river to which the name Sarasvati was originally given was forgotten and about the time the Aryan race in its southward march reached the desert region it was given to the stream flowing into it. In the Vedic period all the twenty-one rivers of various size had already been deified. Of these the Sarasvati was the most prominent and was considered the guardian goddess of oratory, having connections with language, art and literature. She was also regarded as the patron goddess of music. For this reason she is symbolized with a lute and is also called Myo-on-ten or Bi-on-ten (Goddess of Beautiful Voice—Bharati). In India it seems that this deity is popularly worshipped as a deity of fortune, while in Japan she is adored among the masses as a goddess of wealth, though strictly speaking she is a goddess of oratory. It is interesting that the temples dedicated to her are invariably built near water, rivers, ponds or seas, which fact shows that her origin has not been completely forgotten. In Japan typical temples dedicated to her are those by the Shinobazu Pond at Uyeno, Tokyo, and on Yenoshima, an islet near Kamakura. Images of this goddess enshrined in such temples are sometimes in the form of Indian angels carrying a lute, but are mostly in that of dragons with human heads.

The third deity of fortune adopted by the Japanese from India is Kichijo-ten, i. e. Lakshmi or Sri. Originally a patroness of good luck as well as of beauty, this goddess is symbolic of courage in contrast to wisdom personified by Benzai-ten. In Japan, Kichijo-ten is regarded as a daughter of Hariti (Kishimojin) and a younger sister of Kubera (Bishamon-ten).

Beside the above-mentioned three deities of fortune another deity of fortune who was adopted from India and is next to them in popular adoration in Japan, is Bishamon-ten, i. e, Vaisravana or Kubera. This deity is sometimes called Tamon-ten, a name translated in meaning from the Indian original. He is one of the four guardians of the Buddhist world, but his personality as a deity of wealth has never been forgotten and is worshipped as such. His another name Kubera is also still existent.

The Indian deity, who is next to Bishamon-ten in popular esteem, is Sho-ten. i e., Ganesa. This deity was originally a relative of Ji-zai-ten and was possessed of the power of surmounting obstacles, so that his help is invoked by people undertaking various enterprises. He is a male deity symbolized with the head of an elephant with a single tusk. For this reason he is also called Binayaka (Vinayaka). In Japan, in most cases he is represented by a dual body or a combination of a male and a female. This image is called Kangi-ten and is generally worshipped by people who desire changes for the better in their luck. This deity is especially adored by followers of the Shingon Sect, it being considered that his answer to prayer is certain and beneficial. Prayers are offered to him before his image steeped in boiling oil. It is said that in most cases priests serving him do not die a natural death. In India, he is worshipped as a deity of literature and art and an Indian author often invokes his help when he sets himself to literary work. In Japan, however, no such custom is existent. Temples dedicated to this deity at Ikoma, Nara, and Daigo, near Kyoto, are very well known.

An interesting deity, who is very popular in Japan, is Kompira, i. e. Kumbhira. Now, Kumbhira is the name of the crocodile living in the Ganges, but the Kumbhira deified in Japan is a Yaksa. The name of a Yaksa called Kumbhira Rajagahiko Vepullassa is mentioned in the Maha Samaya Sutra, he being stated as having attended the great meeting of disciples of Buddha. This deity was an inhabitant of Mt. Beipura (Vepulla) standing to the left of the North Gate of Rajagriha. Now Mt. Beipura is sometimes called Zozusan (Gajasirsha), literally elephant head mountain, on account of its resemblance in shape to the head of an elephant. In Japan the main temple dedicated to this deity is in Shikoku. It is very likely that his temple was erected there because the mountain looked like the head of an elephant. Nothing exact is known as to the relation between this deity and the crocodile of the Ganges, but paragraphs concerning him are sometimes found in Buddhist sutras as if he were connected with crocodiles. At any rate, he is worshipped in Japan as a guardian of sailors and a dispenser of good luck. It is an interesting fact that of many Indian Yaksas, this deity alone was adopted by the Japanese people and has numerous devotees throughout the country. How this came about is a mystery. It is possible that Indian sailors believing in this deity, who had been ship-wrecked on the coast of Japan in some remote time, erected the first temple in his honour.

Sui-ten, i.e., Varuna, is a deity having a great many worshippers among the citizens of Tokyo. He is a very ancient deity coming down from the Vedic period and one of the sun gods. As a deity of covering he represents atmosphere and as a deity of justice carries a rope in his hands and administers punishments. He is sometimes worshipped as a water-god and it is as such that he was introduced into Japan, but here he is worshipped as a deity of fortune, having nothing to do with water.

There are some other deities of the Vedic period, who were adopted by the Japanese. Of these the most popular is Taishaku-ten, i.e. Indra Sakra. This deity was the tutelary god of the Aryan race, and being a god of martial valour, his help was invoked when some adventurous enterprise was undertaken. He was, however, introduced into Japan as a guardian deity of Buddhism. Another deity of the same character is Bon-ten, i.e. Brahma. He came to be influential in the Atharva period towards the end of the Veda and, in India now, is believed to be possessed of the capacity of a creator of the world as one of the triad of Hinduism. In Japan it was customary with warriors in feudal ages to invoke the aid of Bonten and Taishaku before going to battle.

Another deity of the Vedic period widely believed in Japan is Kojin, i e. Rudra, though it is not known who brought him to this country. Rudra was a powerful deity during the Vedic period being in charge of winds. His function was later transferred to Siva and he is no longer worshipped in India, but in Japan he is made much of as god of mountains and forests as well as of winds. Tradition has it that he was invited to Japan by the ascetic Yen-no-Otsunu, to whom reference was made in my preceding article. He is said to be a powerful deity, having 98,000 retinues.

Besides all these deities, there is Narayen, i.e. Narayana. The name of Vishnu, God Preserver, is not found among popular deities of Japan, but it is represented by Narayen. He is two-sided. On one side, he is the incarnation of Vishnu and is deified as progenitor of all living creatures, it being said that he flies in the air on the back of bird Garuda. On the other side, he is the two Deva Kings guarding the gate of a temple. As for the Deva Kings, various opinions have been presented, but in my opinion they are the second representation of Narayen, who is considered a strong man of heaven. One of the two Deva Kings guarding the gate of a temple, who stands at the left side with his mouth firmly shut is Narayen as a strong man. Another standing at the right side with his mouth open and carrying a Vajra weapon is called Kongo (Vajra). Both are one and the same Kongo Narayen and counterparts of Yakshi or Dvarapala holding a stick as occasionally seen in stone caves in India. In Japan they are commonly called Kongo Rikishi (strong man of Vajra).

Haya-griva, one of the avatars of Vishnu and well-known recoverer of the stolen Veda, is worshipped in this country as Kannon and is called Bato Kannon (horse-necked saint of mercy). This is one of the six aspects of the Avalokitesvara of which the thousand armed Kannon is best known. Sahasravaha is the name of Siva. Fudo Myowo, who is one of the most popular deities among the Japanese masses, is none other than Siva known by the name of Acala (Immovable), one of the Vidyaraja of Buddhism. Shogyo, i.e. Nila-kantha, another aspect of Kannon, is also Siva. In music, the term conquering Beiro is met with. This Beiro is fierce-form Bhairava of Siva, it probably representing his fanatic dance.

The consort of Siva is represented in various forms in Buddhism. In India the name Durga is common. This is rendered as Tukka in Chinese, but is not known in Japan. This deity has two aspects, gentleness and violence. The aspect of violence is Candi and is worshipped as one of the aspects of Kannon (Avalokitesvara). The aspect of gentleness is in evidence as Uma in the rituals of mystic school of Buddhism. The Eleven-faced, i.e. Ekadasa-mukha is the name of Durga and is most popular as one of the aspects of Kannon. A female imp. Dakini attending Kali, another form of Durga is also deified in Japan. Marishi-ten, a ray of light of the sun or a form of Prajapati, is also worshipped in Japan as a deity, who helps removal of obstacles.

Kishimojin, the Demon-mother Hariti, who was wife or sister of Kuberas has also a fair number of worshippers among the Japanese masses.

Ucchushma, an aspect of Kwaten (Agni), is enshrined in toilet rooms of temples as a deity in charge of cleaning of impurity. This deity, who was in the ascendant in the Vedic period as god, who took the form of sun in heaven, that of lightning in the sky and that of fire in the earth, was thus made to occupy so low a position in Japan. On the altar of Homa ceremony of the Mikkyo (mystic) school of Buddhism, however, Agni occupies the highest position, so that it may be said that he is master of all from the highest to the lowest. The Indian deity of war, Skanda, who is regarded as a son of Agni or that of Siva, is deified in Japan by the name of Idaten.

It will be seen from what I have so far written that nearly all the members of the Hindu pantheon are deified in Japan. There are many more deities, such as Yama, Asura, Gandharva, Raga and Yaksa, who were brought to this country with Buddhism, but I had better refrain from writing about them in detail, as I have written enough.

Finally there is a deity who is worshipped throughout this country, though his lineage is not definitely known. This is Gozuten-wo (the cow-headed deity). If this deity is the same as Go-mukha of India, he was an attendant of Siva. If he is the same as Go-sringa, his name is found in the Khotan and is found in China and Nepal too, all as the name of a hill. The name must have come from a sacred mountain in India. In Japan a temple dedicated to this daity is invariably called Gion and the deity is believed to be the guardian of the Indian Gion, i e., Jetavana. From this it is conceivable that the name was derived from the hill standing outside of the Sravasti town, in which the Anathapindaka Monastery stood. Jetavana means a garden owned by Prince Jeta and Anathapindaka was the name originating from its rich donor Anathapindaka. Very likely the original name of the hill was either Gyukakuzan (Cow-horned) or Gozuzan (Cow-headed). In Chinese rendering, it is the same as Go-muhka or Go-sringa. As I already mentioned in my preceding article, the man who worshipped this deity for the first time in Japan was the Indian priest Hodo. In fact this guardian deity of Gosringa Hill (i. e. Jetavana) was first introduced into Japan by Hodo (Dharma-bodhi) in 650 A. D, and was enshrined in a temple on Mt. Hokke in the province of Harima. Tradition has it that in 876 A. D. Yennyo, a priest in the service of the Imperial Court at Kyoto, removed the deity from Mt. Hiromine (probably another name of Mt. Hokke) in the province of Harima and enshrined him in Kankeiji temple at Yasaka, Kyoto. In 934 A D, a shrine was built for the worship of the deity. A special festival was given in his honour on June 14, 970 A.D. for invoking his aid in the suppression of an epidemic, which prevailed in that year. Since that time, it has been annually given until the present time and following the example of Kyoto similar festivals are held at temples dedicated to the same deity in various parts of Japan, though at present in many cases the day has been changed to either July 14 or August 14. This deity is identified with Prince Susanoo, brother of the Sun Goddess, the mythological founder of the Empire of Japan. This may have helped to increase the popularity of this deity among the Japanese people. A curious fact is that Prince Susanoo is related to Soshimori of Korea, which means a village of cows. The name Susanoo may have some connection with cows.

THE PLIGHT OF NAYADIS.

(From the Hindu, Madras.)

The Nayadi belongs to one of the lowest tribes of Malabar and Cochin. Non-Malabarees, whose ideas of untouchability are perhaps limited to the notion of one caste abhorring the polluting touch or immediate presence of an "inferior" caste, will be shocked to hear that the Nayadi may not approach within a hundred yards or more of a house or village. He was formerly a hunter and subsists largely on roots and rodents. These he supplements with alms, rice, etc., earned by standing at the non-polluting distance from the house or thoroughfare, and then raising his lusty voice in a passionate supplication, which varies from the cry of a wild beast to the sob of a human creature in pain. His pitiful case is, therefore, rather an illustration of un-sight-ability than untouchability. He is the direct antithesis to the "little boys" of the common proverb. He must be heard and not seen. Readers should not be deceived by the seeming levity of the following verses. Men are most readily approached through a sense of humour, and, if an appreciation of the Nayadi's terrible position results from a reading of these light-hearted lines, they shall not have been penned in vain :

I met a West Coast lunatic
Who often paused to pray,
But oftener he'd rush about,
Gesticulate, and say :
"The Brahmin has his little bell,
But the Nayadi must stand and yell."
I asked him if perchance it was
A cycle-bell he meant ;
With rising scorn and ire again
On me his rhyme he bent :
"The Brahmin has his little bell,
But the Nayadi must stand and yell."
"Others," said I, "than Brahmins may Ring little bells they own :
Why call that right exclusive then ?"—
He answered with a groan :
"The Brahmin has his little bell,
But the Nayadi must stand and yell."
"In every temple in our land,"
Said he, "Before each shrine
Is hung a bell, which twice-born men
Alone may ring : in fine,
The Brahmin has his little bell,
But the Nayadi must stand and yell.
"For Nayadi's pollution strikes
From hundred yards away :
His presence is a thing abhorred
By temple, house or way :
The Brahmin has his little bell,
But the Nayadi must stand and yell.
"The Brahmin has remembrancers
To win the ear of God :
The Nayadi must stand and howl
To Man upon the sod—
The Brahmin has his little bell,
But the Nayadi must stand and yell.
"And even God obeys that bell
And hearkens to that ring :
The Nayadi may howl unheard,
By God and Man—I sing :
The Brahmin has his little bell,
But the Nayadi must stand and yell."
I said, "My friend with pain I hear
This foolish blasphemy,
Faith ringeth louder than a bell
Unto the Deity.
The Brahmin though he ring his bell,
If Godless, shall go down to hell."
At that the madman clapped his hands,
And, like a prize buffoon,
He crowded all his ecstasy
Into a change of tune :
"The Nayadi must stand and yell,
But the Brahmin has his little bell."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Deshbandhu's 56th Birth Anniversary: Friday the 6th instant being the fifty-sixth birthday of Deshbandhu Chittaranjan Das, the occasion was celebrated with befitting solemnity in Calcutta. Imposing processions paraded the streets and huge mass meetings were held at Harish Park and Beadon Square. At the Harish Park meeting Sj. Sen Gupta, the President, spoke feelingly on the ideals for which the great Tribune of the Nation lived, and died, and appealed to the people to join the Congress and strengthen the Swarajya Party so that the fight for freedom which Deshbandhu had left unfinished might be crowned with success.

Sir Surendranath Banerjea's Will: The Forward, Calcutta, writes: "We are credibly informed that the late Sir Surendra Nath Banerjea left a will appointing Messrs. Jatindranath Basu, M.L.C., J. Choudhury and Bhaba Shanker Bannerji (his son) as Trustees to his estate. The income from the property is estimated to be Rs. 5,000 a month, of which only Rs. 500 a month or its capitalised value are meant for Mr. Bhabashanker Banerji and the rest of the income is to be devoted to the sanitary improvement of the province and this money is to be handed over to the Public Health Department. If our information is correct, we are surprised to find that the Trustees have not thought it proper to publish the details of the will. The object for which the bulk of his property is said to be set apart is one which requires immediate and urgent attention. One wonders why the Trustees have allowed three months to pass without taking the public into their confidence regarding the nature of the bequest and letting them know the great mind of the Tribune of the people." The Bengalee, commenting on this, says that it is subject to one condition, which, however, is not revealed.

Shah of Persia Deposed: The deposition of the ex-Shah who belonged to the Kajar dynasty by the Majliss resolution on the 4th instant has almost come as a sudden surprise. It was the result of a sudden rising of national sentiment against the dynasty throughout Persia, and Parliament fearing the danger of a national revolution passed a resolution for the deposition of the Kajars and gave temporary rule to the Premier Reza Khan Pehlevi, leaving the decision as to the permanent rule with the National Constitutional Assembly.

Reza Khan held a public court and receptions and expressed great hopes for the progress and future of Persia. The ex-Crown Prince undertook a journey to Europe Since then the ex-Shah has issued a protest addressed to the Persian people, stating that the coup d'etat which put an end to his dynasty was carried out by Reza Khan winning over the army and making improper use of all the organized forces in the country. He also says that he has imposed this sacrifice upon himself, in order to avoid internal agitation and the consequent suffering to his people, and asserts his rights and those of his dynasty to the throne.

Religion and Politics: Religion has been divorced from politics with disastrous results, said Canon Donaldson, speaking in London on "Christian Civics." The abdication by the Christian Church of its civic office and function was responsible for our reaction to methods and aims upon the lower plane of competition and antagonism, between men, groups and nations. To say that religion had nothing to do with politics was largely true, and lamentable. To rationalise the fact into a precept was a violation of the Gospel. If religion had nothing to do with politics, then God was ruled out of the greater spheres of man's activities and made a director of petty pieties. Christ's teaching definitely opposed this idea. He inaugurated the Kingdom of God, involving a new social order and set it into opposition to the 'world-powers of this darkness." A Christian's religion must embrace citizenship. What is must be confronted with what ought to be. The things that are must yield place to the things that are just and humane.

Christian Missions and British Imperialism: Mr. K. M. Panikkar, who has gone on a tour to Europe, has been contributing occasional letters reviewing European politics to the Swarajya of Madras of which he was for some time the Editor. In the course of his letter from London dated the 10th October, Mr. Panikkar writes: "The Church Congress which has been sitting at Eastbourne concluded its session on Saturday. It has served one useful purpose so far as we in India are concerned. It has authoritatively demonstrated the political bias of the Missionary movement and its complete subordination to Imperialist purposes. The general feeling in Church circles which was voiced by the Bishop of Chichester was that the Congress has helped the clergy generally to understand their responsibilities as "trustees for the future development of the races under the British care." It has helped them to realise the white man's burden. What the Church Congress discusses was not how to spread the light that was in them nor how to propagate the religion of Christ but how to help the political domination of the British race. As the "Times" remarks in a leading article, ample evidence was forthcoming at the Congress "that the Church is conscious of the far-reaching problems of the Empire." We have here an authoritative statement as to the purpose of the Anglican Church in India as well as the other oriental countries. It is to serve as an instrument of Imperialism as an advance agent to the political and military forces of the government of Britain. It is such an organisation that asks for the moral sympathy of educated Indians and wants—naturally enough—to control our education."

Zoroastrian Bigotry: The Indian Messenger writes:—Reuter informs us of the facts of a law-suit which has just been decided by the Privy Council. The appeal was preferred by a lady named Bella whose parents were Goanese Christians but who was brought up in a Zoroastrian family. Thus having imbibed the Parsee culture, she claimed the right of worshipping in the Zoroastrian temple. But Zarathushtra would not own her as his own. Consequently she was not permitted to enter the temple, far less to worship there. Naturally enough, she sought the protection of the court for relief, and now after a protracted litigation extending over ten years, the verdict has been pronounced against her! This is how the Zoroastrian law stands even today. It shows that Zoroastrianism has not yet stripped itself of its ethnic swaddling clothes. It is rather late in the day for the Parsees among whom modern culture is so widely diffused to run religion on the basis of race and to make the house of God a preserve for a few. Alas! men, deluded men, in the very act of worshipping a tribal God deny the God of truth, the Father of all nations, and offend Him.

New Development at Vaikom: A new development is reported from Vaikom. In the last settlement all the three roads excepting the eastern road round the temple were thrown open to untouchables. But as the eastern road is still barred, Satyagraha continues there even to-day. The Government now propose to acquire lands in front of the eastern road and enclose them. The roads outside the enclosure shall be open to all. Satyagrahis are not agreeable to the proposals and have addressed Mahatmaji for advice.

Training of Hindu Widows as Nurses: We are informed that the Managing Committee of the Zanana Hospital founded by Rai Bahadur Lala Benarsi Dass, Ambala, has decided to train 10 Hindu widows as nurses. The course of training extends for 3 years, after which they will, if successful, be engaged as nurses in the Hospital or allowed to seek employment in other hospitals. Service in the hospital for 5 years after training will be obligatory, if required; a stipend of Rs. 10 p. m. will be given during the period of training and the candidate for that period will be under full disciplinary control of the Doctor in charge. Intending candidates may apply to the Secretary, Managing Committee of the Benarsi Dass Hospital for Women, Ambala Cantonment.

Hindu Mahasabha's Resolution: The Working Committee of the Mahasabha at its meeting held on the 4th instant passed a resolution regretting that cases of unwarrantable interference with the observance of Hindu religious rites, ceremonies and festivals and the taking out of religious and other processions are becoming frequent occurrences in the country. It is of opinion that, in the circumstances of the situation, it is clearly the duty of every Hindu organisation to take every concerted and legitimate step as may be necessary to ensure that Hindus shall be free as heretofore to observe their festivals and perform their religious rites and ceremonies and take out religious and other processions without molestation by any one. It also calls upon all provincial and local Hindu Sabhas to render all necessary guidance and assistance to Hindus at such places where their just rights are interfered with.

The All-India Swadeshi Exhibition, Cawnpore: The All-India Swadeshi Exhibition of Arts and Crafts will be held along with the 40th Indian National Congress at Cawnpore. Those interested are requested to send in their exhibits.

Cawnpore Congress Bulletin: The Publicity Commissioner writes that a visitor's ticket in the Cawnpore Congress will cost Rs. 30, 100, 250, 500 and 1,000, respectively, the principle being, the higher the ticket, the better the advantages. Visitors are requested to make haste and write to Mr. Roop Chand, Joint Secretary, Congress Ticket Committee, Cawnpore, lest the sale should be closed before they make up their mind.

Thanesar Eclipse Fair: A Punjab Press communique notifies for the information of intending pilgrims that the next Solar Eclipse, which is due on 14th January, 1926, will not be visible at Thanesar or its neighbourhood.

Reduction of Fares on E. I. Railway: The decision of the E. I. Railway to reduce 3rd class and Intermediate fares, though a belated concession inasmuch as first and second class fares were reduced long ago, is to be welcomed. We hope the other railways will follow suit.

Anti-Untouchability Conference in Trivandrum: An Anti-Untouchability Conference of over five thousand untouchables and other non-caste Hindus was recently held in Parur in Travancore State, under the presidency of the prominent untouchable leader, Mr. Madhavan. Its object was to carry on an agitation to secure recognition of their freedom of passage along all roads maintained from public funds.

The Begum of Bhopal in London: We are glad to learn from a recent communication of the London correspondent of the Tribune that the British Women's Temperance Association is going to invite H. H. the Begum of Bhopal to an "At Home" when Her Highness will be felicitated on the introduction of Prohibition in Bhopal.

Compulsory Primary Education in Bombay: The Bombay Corporation has at last initiated from the beginning of this month the scheme of free and compulsory primary education in the F. and G. Wards of the city covering an area of about 13 square miles, out of a total of about 24 square miles. The two wards are principally composed of Marathi-speaking people, a great majority of whom are illiterate. The Schools Committee, we are glad to note, is making elaborate arrangements to popularise the scheme by means of posters and other ways explaining the advantages of sending children between the ages of 6 and 11 to the Municipal schools. It is apprehended that such compulsion is likely to meet with opposition from the mill area in the wards in the initial stage, but we hope it would be able to surmount this difficulty by applying the methods of gentle persuasion rather than that of coercion, thus making education a pleasure to children rather than a burden to them. We do not understand, however, the propriety of excluding Muslim girls in the area from the benefits of the scheme. All the same, we wish every success to the Corporation in its new venture.

Lala Lajpat Rai to stand for the Assembly: The Bande Mataram (Lala Lajpat Rai's Urdu daily) understands that Lala Hansraj, M. L. A., of Jullundur has resigned his seat in the Legislative Assembly in order to make room for Lala Lajpat Rai who shortly intends to seek election to the Assembly from the constituency from which Lala Hansraj was elected.

A Depressed Classes Meeting in Belgaum: A correspondent writes: A public meeting of the Depressed Classes of the Belgaum District was held under the presidentship of Raosaheb Papana Jalliah, Honorary Magistrate, and the following resolution was unanimously passed: "This meeting expresses its heart-felt thanks to L. J. Mountford, Esquire, O. B. E., I.C.S., Commissioner, S. D., for his kind initiation of representation of the Depressed Classes in the Upper Branch of the Subordinate Revenue Service by ordering the conferment of a schedule post on Mr. D. R. Ghatkamble, a member of their community, in service, which benevolent act is the first of its kind in the history of the Depressed classes of the Bombay Presidency, and to W. Dillon Esquire, I.C.S., Collector of Belgaum, for the favour of his giving effect to the order immediately as a special case by way of appointing Mr. Ghatkamble to the above post as Shirastedar to the Huzur Deputy Collector, Belgaum." This appointment being the first, as it is, has infused remarkable enthusiasm among this most backward community of this side for promoting education with the assurance that deserving literates meet with the special attention of the British Government even for the responsible situations, which was not the case in them so long.

NOTES

The Disintegration of the Swaraj Party: The aggressive speeches made by Pandit Motilal Nehru after the meeting of the Executive of the Swaraj party at Nagpur, have driven influential members of the Party like Messrs. Jayakar and Kelkar to open revolt. Their resignation from the Party's Executive was followed by a campaign in Poona explaining the circumstances which led to their resignation and advocating a change in the programme of the party in favour of responsive co-operation. That these two leaders of the Maharashtra are not alone in their views has been made quite clear by the resignation from the Executive of the Swaraj Party of Messrs. Lohokare and Aney, both members of the Legislative Assembly. The attendance at Mr. Jayakar's public speech in Bombay on Thursday and the manner in which the audience behaved belied the apprehensions of the supporters of Pandit Motilal that in Bombay at least advocates of responsive co-operation would meet with a hostile audience. In his Bombay speech, Mr. Jayakar assured on behalf of himself and his "much reviled colleagues in the Bombay Council" that, in the event of the Executive of the Party which next meets at Cawnpore remaining adamant, they like honourable men will not remain a moment in the Swaraj Party. Thus the Pandit's challenge has been taken up in right earnest by the Maharashtra leaders, and events go to show that they are gradually gaining strength. In the Punjab, where the Swaraj Party's position has never been a strong one, Lala Lajpat Rai's election to the Assembly would naturally result in Punjab M.L.A's. following his leadership which would mean the alienation of the support of those members from the programme of the party as expounded by Pandit Motilal. Lala Lajpat Rai has made no secret of his differences with the policy and programme of the Swaraj Party. Unless the Party at its meeting at Cawnpore next month review the situation in the light of recent events and decide upon a change as demanded by the experience of the last three years, there seems little hope of its existence as the "most organised and disciplined party" in the country.

The Kalpathi Affray: The dispute between the Ezhavas and the Brahmins over the right of the former to enter the Brahmin agraharams at Kalpathi, a Brahmin centre in Palghat, recently developed into a regular fight between the two communities resulting in serious injuries to a Brahmin and an Ezhava, besides minor injuries to several of both sides. This is not the first time when the trouble between the two communities break out at the approach of the car festival at Kalpathi. Last year the Government, with a view to prevent a breach of peace, had to resort to section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code under which orders were issued against the "polluting castes" from entering the agraharams during the car festival. It is significant that the Divisional Magistrate, Mr. Dodwell, I. C S, declined to continue the prohibition order some days after the car festival, thus showing clearly that the Government wanted only to prevent a breach of peace and not to take sides with the Brahmins. The talk of mass conversion this year attracted the Hindu and Mahomedan missionary bodies from North India to Malabar, and in the race betwen the two to obtain more converts to their respective faiths, they have aggravated the situation at Kalpathi. It was reported that "unapproachable" converts to Arya Samaj had on several occassions passed through the Brahmin agraharams and the Arya Samaj missionaries in Malabar were proclaiming, though only by implication, that "conversion" to Arya Samaj would remove from the "unapprochables" the unapproachability just as conversion to Christianity or Mahomedanism. The approach of the car festival at Kalpathi somehow alarmed the orthodoxy who decided to resist the interference of Arya Missionaries in their religious affairs by refusing to recognise the removal of unapproachability in the converts from the "unapproachables" to the Arya Samaj.

The Government's Position: Replying to the representation made by Pandit Rishi Ram, the Arya Missionary, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Palghat made it clear that he had no objection to the Arya Samajists going to Kalpathi to see the car festival, but that, in view of the refusal of the inhabitants of Kalpathi and adjoining agrahārams to treat the depressed classes converts to Arya Samaj as entitling entry to agrahārams, he could only treat such "converts" as merely members of the classes to which they originally belonged "till the converts prove their claims in a Court of Law." We have italicised the clause the significance of which seems to have been completely overlooked in the press comments we have so far came across on the situation. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate has only expressed his inability to judge the point at issue, and we cannot help feeling that he is perfectly right in the attitude he has taken. The Arya Samajists cannot be considered as serving Hinduism or the cause of the unapproachables no long as they do not make the cause of the unapproachables, irrespective of "converts" to the Arya Samaj, their own. What is required is to establish the right of the so-called depressed classes to enter the Kalpathi Agraharams, which is quite a different thing from establishing the equality of Arya Samaj with Christianity or Mahomedanism so far as the removal of "untouchability" by the process of conversion is concerned. In the latter case, one fails to see in what way they are different from the Christian or Mahomedan proselytising agencies. The whole question should be viewed in a broader light and, with all respects to the Arya Samaj for its social and educational activities, we venture to say that no proselytising body is competent to handle the situation similar to what Kalpathy is faced at present.

Adult Education in Punjab : Both Sir William Marris and Pandit Motilal Nehru are unanimous on the necessity of "educating our masters," the rural voters, for if Swaraj is to be a reality, the masses ought to be made to understand its implications. With the increasing democratisation of India, the problem of adult education is becoming more and more pressing. We are glad to see that the Punjab educational authorities are making vigorous attempts to grapple with the problem of adult illiteracy. Steps have been taken towards bringing educational facilities within easy reach of the illiterate adults. In the beginning of this year, provision was made for the maintenance, on an average, of 75 adult schools in each district of the Province. An appreciable increase in the number of those who take advantage of this education, has been recorded. Besides these schools of a permanent and stationary character, Government also proposes the establishment of temporary night schools to be transferred from one place to another wherever there is a more urgent need for them, thus enabling all adults in the province to avail themselves of them sometime or other. But too often the adults, after their course is over, relapse into illiteracy, and in order to counteract this tendency, Government also proposes to take measures to create an intellectual atmosphere in and round the area of the school and the village by the establishment of village libraries, the organisation of meetings for the reading of pamphlets and journals and magic lantern lectures etc. We need hardly say that such measures, besides educating the illiterate in the latest developments of agricultural and hygienic science, are eminently calculated to make the citizens take an intelligent interest in the civic and political life. We wish other provincial governments also followed this good example.

The Punjab Money-Lenders' Bill : We in this part of India are not unfamiliar with the ways and methods of money-lenders in charging exorbitant and usurious rates of interest for advances of money, often resulting in the utter destitution and poverty of borrowers. The evil has probably assumed high proportions in the Punjab and a private Bill has been brought forward for the purpose. In Punjab, as elsewhere, the sahukars, as the professional money-lenders in that part of the country are called, are not the only people who are carrying on this blood-sucking traffic. The exactions of landlords and zemindars from their lessees and tenants are only too notorious. We gather from the comments of the Punjab press that there are many serious objections to the Bill as it is drafted. It would seem that the definition of the word 'money-lender' has been made so elastic and comprehensive as to include even the trader in the town who deals with educated people and not with villagers. Again, it is apprehended that it will penalise money-lending as such, almost making it impossible for the creditor to recover his dues from the debtor. As long as there are rich and poor, money-lending is bound to continue. To penalise money-lending wholesale will only embarrass many a poor man in difficult and straitened circumstances. So, legislation, obviously should only be confined to unconscionable and usurious transactions. And lastly, though the avowed object of the Bill seems to be to release borrowers from the clutches of the professional sahukars, it leaves untouched the exactions of the landlords and zemindars, which, as we have said above, constitute the special grievance of the rural classes. It is to be hoped that these defects will be rectified by the Select Commitee when it comes to that stage. The Bill, with these defects removed, will remove a long-standing grievance that has been pressing hard on the agriculturists.

Orissa Famine Relief: We have received from several quarters appeals for funds for Orissa famine relief. From all accounts, conditions in Orissa still seem to be alarming, and unless help is immediately forthcoming, Orissa will soon find herself in the grip of a terrible famine. The ill-fed and and ill-clad men, women and children, are enduring their sufferings and privations with wonderful fortitude and courage, while many are migrating to other places. The cattle also are languishing and dying for want of fodder. We once more appeal to public-spirited bodies and individuals to come to the rescue of Orissa in this critical moment of hers. Contributions may be sent to Lala Lajpat Rai, Lahore, and Chandra Vallabh Joshi, Puri. The only point we wish to emphasise in this connection is the necessity for relief agencies to co-ordinate their efforts.

The Passengers' Day : The Passengers' Day which was observed yesterday in Bombay, serves to remind us of that fateful day when hundred Moplas, huddled together like a herd of cattle in a small waggon, met their miserable fate by asphyxiation, as well as of the many hardships and grievances the third class passengers in Indian railways are put to. The tragedy of the situation is that, while the railways derive the major part of their income from the third class passengers, their comforts, conveniences and safety are often scrupulously neglected. The messages of sympathy which the Bombay Chronicle published yesterday from men in different walks of life, show how public opinion is unanimous on this point. The Passengers and Traffic Relief Association deserves to be congratulated on the excellent work it is doing on behalf of these voiceless third class passengers by representations to the authorities and otherwise.

The "Calcutta Municipal Gazette": The messages from the Mayor, the Deputy Mayor, the Alderman and Councillors of the Calcutta Municipal Corporation congratulating the conductors of the Calcutta Municipal Gazette which completed its first year on the 14th instant, bear eloquent testimony to the appreciation with which the journal is regarded by the city fathers of Calcutta. In its issue of the 14th instant which is issued as the anniversary number, the Editor pays a touching tribute to the memory of Deshabandhu C. R. Das who gave a new turn to the civic life of Calcutta. To Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose, in whose ability, integrity and high sense of civic duty as Chief Executive Officer, the Corporation passed a resolution reiterating its complete confidence, the Calcutta Municipal Gazette sends its loving greetings to his prison home at Mandalay. The informing and instructive articles on civic affairs from persons who are competent to handle the subjects, which have been a usual feature of the journal, and the strict impartiality and high sense of duty which have been the guiding features of its editorials, have earned for the Gazette a chorus of appreciation from well-known publicists of Bengal, irrespective of party or community, and we join in the wishes expressed by many for its long career of increasing usefulness.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.
BOMBAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1925.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE MEDAL.*

It is with reluctance that the incidents of the Indian Mutiny are recalled and, unless it is with a view to bring to light facts obscured by the bitterness and animosity with which the history of the period was recorded, it is hardly worth while doing so. For, strange as it may seem, the literature on the period is mostly from the pen of Englishmen who actively participated in suppressing the Mutiny or were not far removed from them in their sympathies and antipathies. Such an account must necessarily be one-sided and to-day the title "Mutiny Veteran" conjures up in the Anglo-Indian mind a halo of glory which reflects high military honour. There have not been wanting English writers who have tried to hold the balance even, but their writings have not been as well read as the partisan type of writers.

Sixty-eight years after the Mutiny, an Englishman—perhaps more than one—has awakened to a tardy recognition of the fact that a certain injustice has been done to the Indian by the suppression of one side of the picture, and with rare courage he has set himself to the task, as far as it is possible for one man to accomplish, of supplying an omission which, he feels, has contributed largely to what he terms Indian irreconcilability. In a preface to the book the author quotes: "Truth has an eternal title to our confession, though we are sure to be the sufferers by it." We are further told that the book had long been suppressed and that, while several friends urged that its publication would stir up bitter feeling, others suggested that the risk be taken. Mr. Edward Thompson even claims to have "set out matters that no Indian could or perhaps should set out", and concludes with the hope that it will change the attitude of every Englishman who reads the book.

The main theme of the book is that, while the horrors perpetrated by the mutineers have been exposed in the plainest language, a veil has been drawn over the excesses committed by those who put down the Mutiny. In support of this contention the author, to take a single instance, quotes passages from a book written by Mr. Fredrick Cooper, Deputy Commissioner of Amritsar, who wrote in the belief that he was recording events which would immortalise his name.

Mr. Cooper relates how he dealt with the mutineers of the 26th N. I. at Lahore. On the 30th of July a fanatic named Prakash Singh rushed out of his hut, sword in hand, called to his comrades and cut down the Commanding Officer, Major Spencer. The 26th Native Infantry fled a distance of 40 miles under cover of a storm to an island on the Ravi. Mr. Cooper arriving on the scene took in the situation at a glance, and by some means, not clearly stated, the "mutineers" were given to understand that they were to be tried by court martial. "Thirty six stalwart sepoys submitted to be bound by a single man and stocked like slaves into the hold of a boat." By midnight 282 prisoners were safely lodged in a bastion. Next morning the prisoners were brought out tied together in batches of ten to be shot. When 237 had been disposed of in this manner, in the course of which, we are told, one of the executioners swooned away, the "District Officer was informed that the remainder refused to come out of the bastion. ...The doors were opened and, behold! Unconsciously the tragedy of Holwell's Blackhole had been re-enacted!" The bodies of all these men were thrown into a neighbouring well by sweepers. "There is a well at Cawnpore," says Cooper, "but there is also one at Ujnalla."

"What crime, what law, the reader may ask," philosophises Cooper, "demanded the extermination of a helpless multitude, described by the very best authorities as unarmed and panic-stricken, famishing with hunger and exhausted with fatigue?" This question is answered by Greathed, another mutiny hero. "The sacrifice of 500 villainous lives for the murder of two English, is a retribution that will be remembered."

Consciously or unconsciously, this code of Greathed's has been religiously observed in all disturbances in this country from the Mutiny to the "Jallianwalla Rebellions"—"500 villainous lives to 2 English," that is the reckoning. And yet Cooper was a devout Christian who believed that a divine dispensation had delivered these poor victims into his hands. "It was not policy or soldiers or officers," he says with modesty, "that saved the Indian Empire to England and saved England to India. The Lord our God, He it was." And Cooper was congratulated for his heroic action by John Lawrence. "All honour for what you have done; and right well you did it," wrote Robert Montgomery, the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab.

This is a little incident which gives us a glimpse of the Indian Mutiny as it was. No quarter was given to the rebels and every opportunity was taken to offend their feelings before putting them to death. General Sarrail at Damascus was acting on the same principle as British officers at the time of the Mutiny and General Dyer at Jallianwallah. Mr. Baldwin, the British Prime Minister, was therefore wise in asking his countrymen to remember their own history in judging of the doings of the French in Damascus.

On all this a veil is sought to be drawn. Let both sides forget, says Mr. Thompson. To Indians within the last few years, this task of forgetting has been rendered more difficult. Jallianwalla has revived bitter memories. In the Punjab there are men who cannot extend the right-hand of fellowship because they have lost it in the disorders of 1919. Perhaps two generations hence, all will be forgotten, given an atmosphere of patient forbearance—when Britain feels that there is no longer any need for John Lawrence to eternally ask India to choose between the pen and the sword and when British Justice holds a pair of even scales.

But the forces of moderation in this country as elsewhere are daily weakening and even now it may be too late.

THE JUBILEE OF THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY.

The fiftieth anniversary of its foundation which the Theosophical Society is to celebrate shortly at Adyar, Madras, its headquarters, is an important event in the history of that movement. The time is, therefore, not inopportune to make a brief survey of its history and activities during the last fifty years of its existence. Ever since its foundation by Madame Blavatsky with the help of Col. H. S. Olcott in 1875, the Society has undergone many changes of fortune. At one time it seemed as though the movement would collapse, but it was the zeal and enthusiasm of Dr. Besant that gave it a new life and made it what it is to-day. The movement first found favour in India as a reaction against the mania for the western civilization which had taken hold of the English-educated people of Indian society. Everything Indian was then looked down upon as antiquated and unprogressive while everything western was considered to be the last word in civilization. To the credit of the Theosophical movement, it must be said that it was chiefly instrumental in diverting the attention of India from the glamour of western civilization with all its many drawbacks and few virtues to the greatness of her own civilization. Under Madame Blavatsky the movement, however, did not make much headway owing to two chief causes. In the first place, her belief in the efficacy of miracles seriously discredited the movement in the eyes of the people. Secondly, the Theosophical movement in those days had to meet with serious opposition at the hands of the Christian Missionaries. The Christian Missionaries fifty years ago were quite different from what they are now. Products as they were of the West and the western civilization, they could not believe that greatness could exist anywhere else except in the West, while, as we have seen, the professed object of the Theosophical movement was to rouse the consciousness of India to her glorious past. No wonder then the Christian Missionaries cried down the Theosophists as humbugs and impostors. After the retirement of Madame Blavatsky, Col. Olcott became President of the Society, and under him, the Society, intead of holding fast to miracles, began to do some practical work in the direction of the elevation of the depressed classes. The Theosophical Society came to be organised henceforth more as a social mission.

On the death of Col. Olcott Dr. Besant was elected President. To the deep religious fervour of her two predecessors, the intrepid Irish lady united an eloquence all her own which she continues to possess even to this day in her ripe old age. Moreover, her association with Charles Bradlaugh whose struggles on behalf of India in the House of Commons are only too familiar to us, made her popular among the Indian people. Her eloquence carried away audiences and won her many devoted adherents. Her wonderful lore and her beautiful lectures on Hinduism set the Indians a-thinking upon their glorious heritage. Meanwhile the revelations made in the famous Leadbeater case brought into disrepute and ridicule Dr. Besant and her devoted band of Theosophists. The political situation in India, however, offered her an unique opportunity to redeem her movement from the disrepute into which it had fallen. She threw herself heart and soul in the cause of India's struggle for freedom and organised the Indian Home Rule League. The internment of Dr. Besant along with her two devoted lieutenants, Messrs B. P. Wadia and Arundale by the Government of Madras, marked the high water mark of her popularity which reached its culminating point with her election as President of the Indian National Congress, the highest gift in the power of the Indian people. And then came the Non-Co-operation movement which silenced her Home Rule movement once for all and threw the figure of Dr. Besant into comparative obscurity. Dr. Besant's days were over and Mahatma Gandhi's regime had begun. The vituperative campaign which she was daily conducting in her paper against Mahatma Gandhi and the Non-Co-operation movement was almost born of a personal antagonism between her and Mahatma Gandhi which continues even to this day, though to a lesser extent, in spite of a professed friendly exterior. This is not the place to enter into a detailed account of the work done by the Theosophical Society during the last fifty years of its existence. We shall indicate only a few points here. Fifty years ago, Christian peoples divided the world into Christian and heathen, with the assumption that no spiritual truth or culture of value was to be found outside the Christian tradition. Today, thanks to the labours of the Theosophical movement, cultured men and women in the West know and have come to appreciate the value to the world of that other half of humanity called the East. The Theosophical Society has shown to the world that Christianity is not the only divinely-revealed religion in the world and that Hinduism can claim to be equally so. It was the Theosophical movement that proclaimed for the first time that there is a hidden Divine Nature in the soul of every man, irrespective of caste, creed, race or religion. Again it is largely through the efforts of the Society that brotherhood which was little more than a sentiment fifty years ago, is now one of the most powerful ideals. And lastly it was the Theosophical movement that carried to the West the beautiful religious ideals of Hinduism and Buddhism. But the movement has not also been without its dark side. In its excessive admiration for India's past, it has condoned some abuses of Hindu society, and its attitude to such great social reformers as Raja Ram Mohan Roy and Ranade was not always commendable. But when all is said, we must admit that Dr. Besant has identified herself with the best interests of India as no other European has hitherto done.

EDUCATION OF THE DEPRESSED CLASSES IN COCHIN.

We have received a marked copy of a recent issue of the Cochinite, a tri-monthly newspaper published

from Trichur ( Cochin State ), which contains a representation addressed by Mr. V. R. Maman Chohan, B.A., L.L.B., to the Director of Public Instruction of Cochin, explaining at length the want of facilities for the education of the depressed classes and praying for starting additional schools for the special benefit of the community. Mr. Chohan pays a well-merited tribute to the liberal policy followed by the Dewan, Dewan Bahadur T. Vijayaraghava Charya, and says that as a result of cutting off of some of the facilities for the education of the depressed classes by Mr. Acharya's successor, Rao Bahadur P. Narayana Menon, the education of Pulayas, Parayas and other depressed classes has received a serious set-back. He observes :

The depressed classes, consisting of the members of Pulays, Paraya and other communities, number about one lakh of people, representing one-tenth of the population. The Educational Budget shows an annual expenditure of 12½ lakhs of Rupees for the benefit of 10 lakhs of people, of which one lakh and a quarter should legitimately go for the education of the Pulayas and other depressed classes. Only very few of their children are now receiving education. They therefore demand that their legitimate share of the educational allotment, viz , one lakh and a quarter of Rupees may be earmarked every year, and spent separately to put up school buildings in their midst, and provide special concessions and facilities for their children until they are brought within literacy in line with the predominant classes.

Mr. Chohan, while admitting that " schools started in the midst of caste-Hindus and Christians have been useful and popular ", says in the same breath that " it is no use saying that almost all the schools in the State are open to Pulaya children ; if you had taken care to enquire, you would have found that owing to various practical difficulties, they are not able to take advantage of the existing facilities." He, therefore, concludes that separate schools for the special benefit of the community should be started in Pulaya centres. In reviewing the Cochin administration Report, we referred to the retrogression in the policy of the Cochin Government in the matter of education of the depressed classes as a result of depriving the communities of the facilities which, according to the Report itself, they had largely availed of, and adversely commented on the policy followed by the Dewan, Mr. Narayana Menon. There is, however, no use in Mr. Chohan's criticising the Dewan's policy in a representation to the Director of Public Instruction who is but a subordinate of the Dewan. As for the demand that a proportionate amount should be devoted for the education of the depressed classes, it seems hardly practicable in view of the enormous expense which the State has to meet for Secondary and Collegiate education which is apparently included in the budget estimates referred to by Mr. Chohan. We cannot endorse the demand for separate schools for the children of the depressed classes in the absence of any restriction on their admission to the public schools of the State. We do not countenance the idea of denominational institutions as they stand in the way of children having opportunities to mix up freely and imbibing a spirit of friendship and brotherhood between the different communities. Unless there is serious difficulty for the children of the depressed classes in having access to public schools located at some particular places in the State—even in that case, it is the duty of the State and the workers for the elevation of the depressed classes to remove such difficulties—the demand for separate schools has hardly any justification. We trust that Mr. Chohan's representation regarding the cutting off of facilities by the late Dewan, Mr. Narayana Menon, will receive sympathetic consideration from the authorities and that they will see their way to restore such facilities as are essential for the improvement of the education of the depressed classes, and also see that the liberal policy of the State in having declared every school open to all classes is strictly observed in practice.

" FRIENDS BY THE MAMMON OF UNRIGHTEOUSNESS "

A Christian friend sends us the following extracts from a well-known book in response to our request for an explanation of what Christ meant when He told His disciples to make for themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness ;

Christ's coming was at a time of intense worldliness. Men were subordinating the eternal to the temporal, the claims of the future to the affairs of the present. They were mistaking phantoms for realities, and realities for phantoms. They did not by faith behold the unseen world. Satan presented before them the things of this life as all-attractive and all-absorbing, and they gave heed to his temptations.

Christ came to change this order of things. He sought to break the spell by which men were infatuated and ensnared. In His teaching He sought to adjust the claims of heaven and earth, to turn men's thoughts from the present to the future. From their pursuit of the things of time, He called them to make provision for eternity.

( Then follows an explanation of the parable of the unjust steward. )

Christ did not commend the unjust steward, but He made use of a well-known occurrence to illustrate the lesson He desired to teach. " Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness," He said, " that when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." Luke 16 : 9, Revised Version.

After relating the parable, Christ said : " The children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." That is, worldly-wise men display more wisdom and earnestness in serving themselves than do the professed children of God in their service to Him. So it was in Christ's day. So it is now. Look at the life of many who claim to be Christians. The Lord has endowed them with capabilities, and power, and influence ; He has entrusted them with money, that they may be co-workers with Him in the great redemption. All His gifts are to be used in blessing humanity ; in relieving the suffering and the needy. We are to feed the hungry, to clothe the naked, to care for the widow and the

fatherless, to minister to the distressed and down-trodden. God never meant that the wide-spread misery in the world should exist. He never meant that one man should have an abundance of the luxuries of life, while the children of others should cry for bread. The means over and above the actual necessities of life are entrusted to man to do good, to bless humanity. The Lord says : "Sell that ye have, and give alms." Be "ready to distribute, willing to communicate." "When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind." "Loose the bands of wickedness," "undo the heavy burdens," "let the oppressed to free," "break every yoke." "Deal thy bread to the hungry," "bring the poor that are cast out to thy house." "When thou seest the naked, . . . cover him." "Satisfy the afflicted soul." "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." These are the Lord's commands. Are the great body of professed Christians doing this work?

Alas, how many are appropriating to themselves the gifts of God! How many are adding house to house and land to land. How many are spending their money for pleasure, for the gratification of appetite, for extravagant houses, furniture, and dress. Their fellow-beings are left to misery and crime, to disease and death. Maltitudes are perishing without one pitying look, one word or deed of sympathy.

Men are guilty of robbery towards God. Their selfish use of means robs the Lord of the glory that should be reflected back to Him in the relief of suffering humanity and the salvation of souls. They are embezzling His entrusted goods. The Lord declares: "I will come near to you to judgment; and I will be a swift witness against . . . those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right." "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed Me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed Thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse; for ye have robbed Me, even this whole nation." "Go to now, ye rich men, . . . your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them shall be a witness against you . . . Ye have heaped treasure together for the last days." "Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton." "Behold, the hire of the labourers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth: and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

Everyone will be required to render up his entrusted gifts. In the day of final Judgment men's hoarded wealth will be worthless to them. They have nothing they can call their own.

Those who spend their lives in laying up worldly treasure, show less wisdom, less thought and care for their eternal well-being, than did the unjust steward for his earthly support. Less wise than the children of this world in their generation are these professed children of the light. These are they of whom the prophet declared, in his vision of the great Judgment-day: "A man shall cast the idols of his silver, and the idols of his gold; which they made each one for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats; to go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of His majesty, when He ariseth to shake terribly the earth."

"Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness," Christ says, "that when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." God and Christ and angels are all ministering to the afflicted, the suffering, and the sinful. Give yourself to God for this work, use His gifts for this purpose, and you enter into partnership with heavenly beings. Your heart will throb in sympathy with theirs. You will be assimilated to them in character. To you these dwellers in the eternal tabernacles will not be strangers. When earthly things shall have passed away, the watchers at heaven's gates will bid you welcome.

God desires us to choose the heavenly in place of the earthly. He opens before us the possibilities of heavenly investment. He would give encouragement to our loftiest aims, security to our choicest treasure. He declares: "I will make a man more precious than fine gold; even a man than the golden wedge of Ophir." When the riches that moth devours and rust corrupts shall be swept away, Christ's followers can rejoice in their heavenly treasure, the riches that are imperishable.

Better than all the friendship of the world is the friendship of Christ's redeemed. Better than a title to the noblest palace on earth is a title to the mansions our Lord has gone to prepare. And better than all the words of earthly praise, will be the Saviour's words to His faithful servants: "Come, ye blessed of My Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

To those who have squandered His goods, Christ still gives opportunity to secure lasting riches. He says: "Give, and it shall be given unto you." "Provide yourselves bags which wax not old, a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth neither moth corrupteth." "Charge them that are, rich in this world . . . that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life."

Then let your property go beforehand to heaven. Lay up your treasure beside the throne of God. Make sure your title to the unsearchable riches of Christ. "Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of unrighteousness, that when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles." —"Christ's Object Lessons," pp. 366—375.

SWARAJIST PROGRAMME.

Council of the Swaraj Party, call for serious reflection and comment. It would be doing injustice to these publicists if their action is regarded as the outcome of impulse, or of personal quarrel with Pandit Motilal Nehru. It is but fair to assume that their purpose is to purge the present programme or programmes of the Swaraj Party of all illogicalities. Their present position within the Swaraj Party is analogous to that of the Swarajists at the Gaya Congress. The divergence of opinion between the Responsive Co-operationists and the total obstructionists is as fundamental as the differences between the latter and the Liberals.

The logic of obstructionist tactics is not disputed by any thinking man; it is their practicability in the present circumstances that is questioned and with ample justification. Being opposed to the fundamental assumptions of the preamble to the Government of India Act of 1919, the Swarajists cannot agree to work a system which is a product of the Act: it is their clear duty to destroy the system by offering "uniform, continuous and consistent obstruction." Obstruction can succeed only if the obstructionists, either by themselves or in coalition with other groups or parties, command majorities in all the legislatures of the country.

The events of the past two years, however, have proved beyond doubt that obstruction is impossible. The Pandit has realised it. But he has not had the courage to say so publicly. He is very jealous of the prestige of his party. He is afraid of making a candid confession of failure lest it should bring the party down in the estimation of the electors. Hence it is that he has been following a policy of drift and improvisation with a view to find a halting place between obstruction and co-operation including acceptance of responsibility for administration. Poor man, he has not found it yet. It is quite certain that he is not going to find it. He is doomed to disappointment; for, there is no halting place between indiscriminate obstruction and contingent co-operation. Mr. M. R. Jayakar frankly recognises the futility of obstruction. He also recognises that there is no via media between obstruction and co-operation. He, therefore, demands a radical departure from the programme adumbrated at Allahabad. He is not a believer in the immutability of political programmes. And further he is honest enough to accept the challenge that he should get the electorate to endorse the policy of responsive co-operation including the acceptance of offices under the present system of Government. At this stage it is not possible to predict if he would succeed.

A great deal depends on the Cawnpore Congress. If it endorses the Patna decisions, then the responsive co-operationists will have to get out of the Congress; for, once the Patna decisions are approved of, the Congress will degenerate into an engine of (Swaraj) party propaganda. In other words, the Congress will be entirely under the control of Pandit Motilal Nehru. Has Mr. Jayakar the courage to take to the alternative of remaining within the Congress? If Maharashtra is determined on secession in the eventuality of the Congress endorsing the Patna decision, Mr. Jayakar cannot resist the tide. There is no reason to think that Maharashtra will any longer agree to make a fetish of even the Congress.

It is a matter for Pandit Motilal Nehru to consider. Can he afford to alienate Maharashtra? The answer would appear to be that he cannot and dare not. In this matter, the President-elect of the Congress does not appear to hold any definite views. She cannot do much to settle the dispute. She may not commit herself to any view in her address. She may remain neutral like Lala Lajpat Rai at the Calcutta Congress. The Mahatma has no concern with the dispute. He would stand by what the General Council of the Swaraj Party enunciates, irrespective of its merits. Nor would he arbitrate between the disputants; for he is yet a no-changer!

If, in the meantime, the General Council of the Swaraj Party reconsiders the position and forges an instrument of accord, a grave catastrophe can be averted. If the Pandit would not have it that way, a split is inevitable. A serious responsibility, therefore, rests on his shoulders. If he fails to rise to the occasion, he will earn the notoriety of having at one stroke destroyed all prospects of unity for some years to come.

BENGAL EPWORTH LEAGUE INSTITUTE.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

The gathering of 104 young men and women for a week of study and inspiration in the quiet sal groves of West Bengal attracted little attention in India when compared with the announcement of the new Viceroy, but as an index of social progress, it had infinitely more significance. The Bengal Epworth League Institute, held under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was an out-door camp lasting through the entire week of Nov. 2-8. Rev. P. G. Williams, Principal, Ashabaree Boys' School, Asansol, was director of the camp, and with the assistance of a number of American women, the week's activities were guided so that no untoward incident marred the joy of the campers.

The purpose of the camp was to provide an intensive course for the moral, intellectual, and physical development of Indian boys and girls. All of the delegates were students from mission schools in Bengal, but attendance was purely voluntary. In fact, most of the delegates paid their own expenses; the young people had been looking forward to the outing for weeks, and had worked at breaking brick for the school walks, sewing, gardening and cutting grass to earn their expenses.

The boys' section of the camp was separated from the girls' by a field more than two hundred yards in width; and each group had its own tanks for bathing. In all the activities of the camp, field sports, classes, devotional meetings, evening social gatherings, the boys and girls joined together for work and play. Classes assembled under the trees, with subjects such as Bible Study, Tree-Craft, Story Telling, Temperance, and Social Service in the curriculum. Afternoons were given over to sports, and the field lying between the boys' and girls' sections of the camp was the scene of happy exuberant competition between the various schools represented.

One of the most vital features of the camp was a class in applied social service under Rev. H. E. Dewey, of Suri. Groups of boys and girls were taken to a near-by village and taught how to be of help to uneducated villagers in solving health problems. The water in the village tanks was examined for malarial mosquitoes; drains were cleaned; and friendly advice was given to the villagers on matters of health and sanitation. This phase of the camp's activity was particularly significant because of the presence of Sudhakanta Roy Choudhury, a Hindu social worker, as assistant instructor to Rev. Dewey.

The roster of delegates, posted on the trunk of a mango tree, revealed the presence of three of India's major racial groups in this unique camp. Names such as Uttom Mondol, Tilak Sheikh and Daud Saren, plainly indicated the Bengali, Hindustani, and Santali origin of their owners; while Charlie Roy and Priscilla Kisku would reveal even to the uninitiated the presence of both sexes in the assembly. For a week these boys and girls forgot the immortal barriers which have held women of India in strict isolation, and shoulder to shoulder, as young men and young women of the same nation, they faced their common problems and gained new inspiration for their tasks in the service of India.

THE N. M. WADIA HOSPITAL, WAI.

The opening ceremony or the dedication of the new blocks to the N. M. Wadia Hospital of the American Marathi Mission at Wai was performed by Mr. G. K. Devadhar, Vice-President of the Servants of India Society on the 13th inst Most of the leading officials, local pleaders and merchants, the representatives of the various educational institutions, and several European Missionaries from Satara and the neighbouring places, were present at the meeting. Rev. Dr. R. A. Hume, M.A., D.D., Chairman of the meeting, opened the proceedings. In the course of his learned address, Mr. Devadhar, after expressing his gratefulness to the Christian Missions and their devoted band of strenuous workers for all the good work they have done to the country, said: On a solemn occasion like this, one in my position cannot resist the temptation of making a few observations at some length on the value of the great national and humanitarian service rendered by my Christian co-workers, I mean the Christian Missionaries, in the fields of education (including medical education) and Medical relief. European countries have sent to Eastern lands such as India, China and Japan, thousands of highly educated men and women to serve humanity and thus to serve their Master, Christ; and though their religious zeal stands prominently at the back of this colossal service, their real motive is love of and service to humanity, which is the corner-stone of Christianity and which glorifies their Master. While speaking about India, I believe, over 4,000 men and women of European extraction are serving in this great land of ours as missionaries, giving their best to our country with a rare spirit of devotion and sacrifice. They have trained for the furtherance of their work several thousands of men and women in our country, who, I am glad to notice, are now playing an important part in the ministration of the Christian Churches in this land, and who have come to recognise their own responsibility coming in the wake of freedom in this matter. The two main directions in which India is being served by them to build up its moral and spiritual strength and also its physical capacity, are the fields of education (including medical education) and medical relief and broad-based social service. I had had several special opportunities of studying the work of these friends all over India, pretty closely and minutely, and I have nothing but praise and admiration for all that is being done by them with the help of their own countrymen, who distinctly are actuated by the thought of service of humanity. In India the vast number of educational institutions, such as Schools and Colleges for boys and girls and Industrial and Mechanical Institutions, owe not only their existence to them but also to the very inspiration they receive from their Master, and thus they have contributed very extensively to the building up of the great educational edifice which would be a standing monument to the greatness and glory of Christ, who Has been one of the Greatest Teachers and Helpers of mankind. Their services to the country through the channel of medical relief have been equally conspicuous. We are familiar in this part of the country with the names of Dr. Wanles of Miraj, Dr. Beals of Wai, Dr. (Mrs,) Beals and Dr. Gohen of Vengurla, just to mention a few among the host of those whose services are equally distinguished and meritorious. There are at present in India over 300 missionary Surgeons and Physicians, both men and women, who are doing most excellent work for India's good and who are assisted in their art of healing by many scores of trained nurses and midwives.

Just to illustrate the value of their medical work, which is of a very high order, on this occasion, I will briefly refer to this Hospital at Wai which attracts many hundreds of suffering men, women and children from all over the Deccan and the Konkan districts. From the figures for the last three years, it would be possible for you to form a correct estimate of this great work. In 1922, the number of outpatients at the Outpatients Department of the Dispensary of this Hospital was 19,516 and that of those treated in the Inpatients Department of the Hospital stood at 803. During the following year, the numbers steadily grew, the attendance at the Outpatients Department being 22,431 while at the Inpatients Department it rose to 812. But last year i. e, in 1924, the Outpatients Department attracted 25,830 patients whereas the Indoor Department claimed 1,080 patients that came for such treatment. This Hospital with its humble beginning with a small band of devoted workers in December 1908, in a small house known as Kasar Modi, has now grown into a very big medical centre and has given medical relief to something like 2,46,501 outpatients alone. This is indeed a splendid record of medical service done during the last seventeen years by a small band of workers and, if you could judge correctly from the single instance, you will easily believe me when I say that through Christian Missions' Medical Institutions, several millions of poor people get a highly qualified medical treatment and medical service.

Those of you who care to understand the immensity of the problem of medical relief and the inadequacy of the provision thereof, have to study patiently figures relating to our population and the number of hospitals

SUPPLEMENT

TO

The Indian Social Reformer.

No. 9. BOMBAY—SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1925. Price One Anna.

BRITISH GUIANA EMIGRATION.

As was apprehended, the British Guiana Colonisation scheme which Sir Joseph Nunan and Luckoo brought to India in January last year and which the Standing Committee on Emigration of the Government of India and some members of the Indian Legislature so strongly supported against the considered advice of all independent and responsible people, outside politics, who could boast of an expert know ledge on the subject of Indians Abroad, has after all turned out to be not a genuine colonisation scheme as it was loudly trumpeted to be, but only a means to obtain cheap labour for the plantations, on the confession of Sir Joseph Nunan himself, the sponsor of the scheme. It may be remembered that the Committee of Enquiry headed by Dewan Bahadur P. Kesava Pillai which visited British Guiana in 1922, reported that immediate resumption of emigration was neither desired nor desirable. With the Kenya insult fresh on its mind and with the situation in South Africa growing worse day by day, Indian opinion represented by such eminent men as Mahatma Gandhi and Mr. C. F. Andrews than whom we cannot think of better and recognised authorities on overseas problems, definitely decided against emigration until India should obtain self-government. The weighiest objection that has been urged, and rightly, against emigration to British Guiana is that its sole object has only been that of securing a continuous supply of labour for the sugar plantations. Whether before or after the abolition of the indenture system, no inducements were offered to the Indians to colonise, and the result was that many returned after the expiry of their agreement. It is unfortunate that the clever bait which the Nunan scheme threw should have been caught by the Government as well as some members of the Indian Legislature. Mr. C. F. Andrews, writing in the columns of the Hindu, Madras, calls attention to the startling revelation that has been made by Sir Joseph Nunan in British Guiana. According to Mr. Madhoo Lal Bose, Editor of the Hindustanee magazine and the President of British Indian Association, George Town, British Guiana, it would appear that Sir Joseph Nunan, since his return to British Guiana from his second mission to India, has retired on pension and that his promises to the Legislators and people of India have been repudiated by the Government of which he was the accredited representative. Sir Joseph has, therefore, adopted the only honourable course in the situation by frankly admitting that the land colonisation idea was but secondary in his great scheme and that it was 'labour' first and last for the sugar estates which are in so great need of it. To have won the confidence of all parties by means of lavish dinners and luncheons and now to openly confess, what he stoutly denied in the presence of Mr. Andrews, that he was all the while only seeking cheap labour for the European plantations, speaks much indeed for the integrity of character and honesty of purpose of Sir Joseph Nunan. Mr. Bose also points out that the Government of British Guiana is without a policy in this matter of colonisation and that, until a policy is defined and all the necessary funds are available, it is idle to look to India or elsewhere for the necessary action. We wholeheartedly agree with Mr. Bose that the colonisation which would be asking the Indians to emigrate en masse, only to be sweated and cheated for the benefit of capitalists, is but heaping insults on the intelligence of Indians. Unless and until the conditions which Mr. Bose imposes on the British Guiana Government as a guaratee of its goods faith and intentions are fulfilled, there can be no talk of further emigration to British Guiana: 1. The steamer passage should be made quite healthy and decent for passengers. 2. A sustained effort should be made to encourage family life and improve the education of children upon the estates. 3. Indian settlements on the land should also be fostered. 4. The general average of wages should be raised in order to meet the existing high cost of living. 5. In new Indian settlements, temperance should be fostered by the refusal to grant rum licences for such settlements. 6. A purely voluntary system should be observed in obtaining recruits. To those who still entertain any hopes of re-opening the question of emigration to British Guiana, the following few points on the status and position of the Indian community in British Guiana which we take from a Review of the Immigration Report for the year 1923 contributed by Mr. Bose to the Indian press will, we trust, serve as an eye-opener: The total Indian population at the close of 1923 was given as 124,453, and despite the fact that the Indian community of British Guiana is now in the third generation, yet the entire community is classified as "immigrant" that is in keeping with the interpretation of the Immigration Ordinance, which defines the term "immigrant," as applying not only to those who emigrated as labourers from India, but also to the descendants of such as well. Hence under this classification, Indians in British Guiana will, for all time, carry this brand which evidently is intended to signify some racial inferiority. Under the Immigration Ordinance, Indians are made to suffer the many indignities which prevailed under indenture.

Unless previously certified by the Immigration Office, an Indian is hampered at every turn from exercising the rights and privileges of a free citizen. Like a criminal, his thumb impression must be obtained and filed for identification purposes. As regards the economic condition, the cost of living in 1923 compared with that of 1913, is practically 100 per cent higher. The combined weekly earnings of an adult male and female is found equal to fourteen shillings and the combined cost of living of the same couple is eighteen shillings and four pence. Thus the fact remains incontrovertible that the average working man and woman can ill-afford to maintain themselves on the wages paid at present by sugar estates in British Guiana, leaving out of consideration the cost of maintaining any dependents, whether these be children or aged persons. Hence the conclusion is abundantly justified that estate employment does not in the least conduce to family life.

INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

(By Mr. S. A. Waiz.)

General Smuts' warning that South Africa, by its anti-Asiatic legislations, was piling on its head the wrath of Asia, Lord Reading's apprehensions that the trend of events might react on Imperial relationship and Lord Birkenhead's appeal not to hurt the susceptibilities of the "ancient and dignified people of India", have all gone unheeded. The white settlers in South Africa, unmoved by any appeal or threat, are going on uninterrupted with their inhuman legislations. India depended on the partnership of the Empire and on the Christian conscience of South Africa. In the words of Harold Cox, "if the British Empire is to be held together, in anything like its present dimension, complete harmony between men of different races is essential". But Bishop Fisher who has recently returned from South Africa, says that the white settlers in South Africa have no interest in the Empire, and that it is useless to look to Christian Church for help. He has given a most vivid and heart-rending account of the disabilities to which Indians in South Africa are subjected. Their condition, says the Bishop, is worse than those of the Jews under the Old Russia of the Czars. But they are suffering with patience and in silence. The reply given to the deputation appointed by the Fifth South African Indian Congress which waited on Dr. Malan, the Minister of the Interior, who has now earned the notoriety of being the sponsor of the anti-Indian legislation which, as the Congress rightly described, aims at "compulsory segregation of Indians, deprivation of their proprietary rights and ultimate elimination of the Indian community," is most disappointing. The Minister said he was not prepared to deviate from the principle of the bill, altough he was willing to suggest that the bill be left over to a Select Committee, while the Indian community might make any constructive criticism. The Minister was not prepared to make any definite announcement with regard to a Round Table Conference as further correspondence between himself and the Indian Government was still in progress and he did not consider it etiquette to say anything more. However, he promised to make an early pronouncement possibly before Parliamnet meets in January.

The native Africans are in no way better. They are treated as undesirable "aliens." It will be interesting to mention here that the white settler calls the indigenous inhabitants "natives", obviously a term of slight, but more so because he calls himself "African." It is his country and not of the native Africans, and he means to maintain his supremacy. This fact is made perfectly clear by General Hertzog in a speech at Smithfield (Orange Free State) in the course of which he said that the native franchise in Cape Province would be entirely taken away and replaced by the rights given to all natives of the Union to elect seven European representatives to the Legislative Assembly, in addition to the quota provided by the Constitution. He added that granting to the Natives the right to vote with the Whites for a member of Parliament would mean the ruin of European civilisation. He pointed out that, within fifty years, Native voters in the Cape would outnumber the Whites. The policy of the South African Government is to establish the monopoly of the Whites in South Africa and the Government is only exploiting the ignorance and backwardness of the natives—the sons of the soil—in depriving them of their rights of citizenship.

Keeping these facts in mind, the only hope that is left, then, is that pressure might be brought to bear upon South Africa from without. The situation in South Africa is primarily an imperial problem, and His Majesty's Government ought to intervene now and decide the question once and for all. General Hertzog's speech at Zaestron emphasising the fact that the constitution of the Nationalist Party, of which he is the leader, included the right of secession from the Empire, cannot but be regarded as a threat and a warning to the British Government. No doubt he tempered his speech by adding that the right, however, would not be exercised until the sentiments of both the English and Dutch speaking inhabitants agreed on the matter. He went on to say that, although the Nationalists had won the right to secede, they knew that such a step would be fatal. South Africa, he concluded, would not exercise the right until it became apparent that it was not to her interest to remain in the Empire. The tone of the whole speech was to create bitter resentment in the minds of those who value the solidarity of the British Empire. General Hertzog's attitude towards the Indian question in South Africa is enough to show that the solidarity of the British Empire is a matter of secondary importance so far as the South African Whites are concerned, and at this juncture, the self-governing dominions who have the welfare of the Empire at heart, might lend their support to His Majesty's Government. I have repeatedly stated that the Government of India are helpless in the matter. They have done their best, but have failed. India cannot till eternity tolerate this humiliation. However I may hate to contemplate a picture of the dissolution of the Empire, if these racial discriminations are allowed to continue, I am afraid the time will soon come when South Africa will be the rock of grief of those who have the best interests of the Empire at heart. Human nature cannot put up with such nonsense for ever. We have before us the instance of the Russian Czar and his dynasty. Let those who are responsible for the stability of the British Commonwealth of Nations read the writing on the wall and act accordingly.

BISHOP FISHER ON INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Bishop Fredric Fisher of Calcutta, who some time ago left India for South Africa as an independent observer with a view to studying the condition of Indians there, returned to Bombay on the 31st October. Interviewed by a representative of the Indian Daily Mail, he said:

I was in South Africa for two months. I visited the whole of South Africa, Rhodesia and the Portuguese Territory, where I met all the Indian Associations in the various centres and interviewed the Mayors of the cities, councillors, certain members of Parliament and also certain Cabinet Ministers. I tried to ascertain the views of all the sections, the English European, the Dutch European, the Indian and the Native African without any bias. The situation is extremely critical. I discovered more race prejudice in South Africa—perhaps the worst kind of prejudice—than in any country I have ever visited in my life.

Conditions in Transvaal.

For instance, no Indian can board a train in the town of the Transvaal without a special license. That license is in the control of one White man. He can direct an Indian who has a shop in a given street, to close the shop and move to some other section. The Indians have no permanent tenure of property and that causes them a great difficulty because they have no permanent investments, or they might be asked to move at any moment. In the Transvaal, particularly, the Indian cannot own any property, not even a home and he is thus absolutely segregated. One particular plot in the slumps of the city has been set apart for Indians and all of them have to live in that section. But even in that section they have no permanent rights. Two years from now, if they have established their homes there, the Municipal Government might ask them to leave and go to some other section. So the Indians in the Transvaal are practically in the same condition in which the Jews were in the old Russia.

Amenities of City Life Denied.

Proceeding Bishop Fisher said: There are also certain restrictions imposed upon Indians travelling in the tram-cars. Only three rear seats upstairs are reserved for Indians. The Indian woman with children may climb the steps of a tram-car and if she does not find any room in the three rear seats, even though the rest of the car is empty, she must leave the tram. In fact all the Indians are called coolies; even in the school text-books it is mentioned that all Indians are coolies. An Indian Cambridge graduate getting into a tram will be pointed out by an ignorant White person as a coolie. Then again, the Indians are not allowed to attend the theatres, nor can they go into the public library to read a book or a newspaper, even though Indian citizens have contributed funds to the Library.

The schools that are provided for Indians are up to the fourth standard and therefore the only education that the community can get must be provided privately from their own funds.

Indians Humiliated.

The Indians cannot go into the hotels except as waiters. At the hotel where I stayed, Indian gentlemen, graduates of Indian or English Universities, driving in their own motor-cars, could not enter the drawing-room of the hotel to visit me. I had to go down to the foot-path in front of the hotel to greet them.

The Anti-Asiatic Bill.

With regard to the new Anti-Asiatic Bill, Bishop Fisher said: This Bill, which has passed the first reading, is intolerable. It proposes to apply the above rules to the whole of South Africa and to make conditions so intolerable for Indians that they would leave for India. The White people definitely state that they cannot compete with the Indian traders. They give two reasons: viz., (1) that the Indian has a superior brain and (2) that he lives on a lower standard than the White man's. The Whites, therefore, say that what they cannot accomplish through competition, they must accomplish through legislation. They look upon South Africa as the White man's country and they intend to maintain the White supremacy. The Indian is regarded as a very intelligent competitor and they think that he must therefore be crushed. In this sense, the Indian is regarded as a menace.

The Treatment of the Native.

There are two sections of the White population, viz., the British and the Dutch. The Dutch represent the Nationalist party now in power. This party feels no special interest in the Empire as a whole. The Bill from the standpoint of Imperial Citizenship is loyally claimed. The treatment of the Native (Bishop Fisher was very unwilling to use this word) is just as bad as the treatment of the Indians. All the complaints that the Indian has, the Native African has, the only difference being that the Native African has no civilisation behind him and therefore he has no voice. The Indian, coming from a country of high civilisation, has been trained as an agriculturist and a trader Hence, he enters into active competition and is more a target than the African. Hence the Anti-Asiatic feeling.

Indian Associations Active

The Indian Associations in South Africa are very active and they all propose a Round Table Conference in which they suggest, the Government of India, His Majesty's Government as well as the Government of South Africa should participate. They feel that that is the only hope for any just settlement of the problem.

There is no doubt that the White population in South Africa is united against the Indian with a few notable exceptions. Hence if left to the South African Party only, the proposed bill will be passed. Intervention on the part of London and Delhi and the presentation of some constructive programme might bring about an amicable settlement. The Anti Asiatic Bill is a bill which openly looks towards "persecution and extermination."

General Hertzog's Policy

Referring to Prime Minister, General Hertzog, Bishop Fisher said: He would quite welcome the participation of India and London in a Conference. He would, of course, welcome a liberal policy. He feels that White public opinion is so strong that no politician could remain in power without acceding to their demand.

Attitude of Christians

Asked as to what the attitude of Christians towards the proposed Bill was, Bishop Fisher said; We may look for no special help from the organised Christian Churches in South Africa, except that the Christian conscience may be influenced from without. Some great Christian leaders may rise to challenge the Churches. That is my hope.

"Another thing I want to emphasise is," said the Bishop in conclusion, "that there is not the unity among the Indians themselves which one might expect. This Bill is so bitter in its attack that it might unite the Indian forces, as they have been never united before. My judgment is that there should be a solid, united and conscientious stand taken by the Indians of South Africa, the Indians of India, the Christian Churches of India, the Hindus, the Parsis, the Mahomedans, the Imperial Government in London and the self-Governing Dominions of the Empire against the proposed Bill and in favour of a just and liberal solution of the problem. The Indians are not going to leave South Africa; they are there to stay just as much as the White men, and the more they (the Indians) are persecuted, the more they will, in my judgment, prosper."

South African Indian Congress: The fifth session of the South African Indian Congress was opened in Cape Town on the 9th instant with the object of considering the situation confronting the Indian community as a direct result of the Asiatic Bill introduced at the last session. Dr. Gool, in his presidential address said that in 1914, Indians looked hopefully to the South African party for fairplay. They were disappointed, however, when the Class Areas Bill came forward. Hope sprang anew with the advent of the Hertzog Government, but disappointment followed again with the iniquitous Bill He admitted that under certain conditions it was advisable to segregate primitive races ; but Indians were more than civilized men The only reasons why Indians were singled out was because they dared to compete in trade with Europeans. He denied that Indians were a menace to Natal, as there the Indian population was stationary, while the European population was increasing rapidly. There was no possibility of producing a white South Africa in the sense that every member of the country must be white. The only reasonable aim, as enunciated by General Smuts, could be a white civilized standard in which every race could take part. Dr. Gool expressed himself in favour of the suggestion for a Round Table Conference.

Mr. Andrews' Visit to South Africa: Mr. C. F. Andrews who left for South Africa on November 11th on behalf of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, interviewed, said his visit to South Africa was to advise and assist the Indian community in their present difficulties and in no way to enter upon any public speaking at the present time. He hoped also to meet in South Africa European friends who sympathised with the Indian cause and to learn from them the general views of the Europeans on the subject.

The Plight of Transvaal Indians: The Indian population in that Province (Transvaal), writes the Indian Opinion, Phenix, Natal, is but a handful in comparison with the vast white population, the former numbering not more than fifteen thousand at the most against five hundred thousand of the latter. Moreover, they have no vote nor have they the right to own landed property. The only right they do possess is the right to trade. Emigration into that Province is entirely closed excepting that six educated Indians may enter annually Thus there is not the slightest fear of that Province ever being flooded by Indians nor are Indians given the least chance to do so. And yet the anti-Asiatic cry in the Transvaal is just as acute if not more than in Natal. The Transvaal Provincial Council has recently passed the General Dealers (Control) Ordinance with the express purpose of curtailing the right of Indians to trade in that Province, which is the only means of their livelihood there. This Ordinance was rushed through the Council without any opportunity given to those concerned to even consider it or to lodge their protest against it; even the European Chamber of Commerce raised a protest against it on that ground, and the Governor-General-in-Council has been pleased to give his assent to it. Apart from this, we understand that although the Asiatic Bill has not yet been passed, some of its provisions are already being enforced. Those who have been given exemption certificates, we learn, are being re-examined by the Principal Immigration Officer, and the three year clause is being inserted in the Identity Certificates issued to those who go on a visit to India. The result of this will be that such Indians although holding their registration certificates will be deemed to be prohibited immigrants if they arrive here a little after the term of three years and they will have to prove their domicile before they can get the right to enter the province-and yet, the very officer examining them may have issued to them the certificate. What a farce? And all this for no other reason but to make it as difficult and as inconvenient as possible for the Indian to enter and to live in the Union, so that he may get thoroughly sick of it and choose to abandon it. Truly a British policy of the twentieth century!

Franchise Rights of Indians in Natal: The Government of India have been informed that the draft ordinance to amend and consolidate the law relating to townships in Natal is standing over until next year and that when it is proceeded with steps will be taken to ensure that the franchise rights of Indians at present on the voters' roll of township are adequately safeguarded.

THE "HINDU'S" COMMENTS.

Commenting on the above, the Hindu (Madras) writes :—The Government of India's communique on the Natal Townships Ordinance is by no means reassuring. The communique points out that two things have now been secured, of course due to the labours of the Government of India. One is that the proposed law is to be held in abeyance till next year—obviously too small a mercy to make us go into raptures over it. The second is that the Government have "adequately safeguarded" the rights of those Indians who are at present on the voters' list. The second "concession" can only be considered as an insult to this country. It is more in the nature of a bribe to the present generation of Natal Indians to betray its posterity and must as such be rejected with scorn. The Townships Ordinance, or the Huelett Ordinance, is a short piece of legislation. Its object is to enact that "no male person shall be placed on the Town Roll who is not entitled to be placed on the Parliamentary Voters' Roll." The Indians in Natal do not enjoy Parliamentary franchise and the Huelett measure thus aims at them exclusively. To allow the present voters to continue to exercise their franchise can be no consolation to Indians. By everything that is sacred, Indians are entitled to enjoy not only franchise, but also, as Mahatma Gandhi pointed out in his now famous letter to General Smuts forming part of what is known as the Smuts-Gandhi Pact, full civic rights. It will be no less than suicidal for the Indian community to accept the proferred concession foreshadowed in the Government of India communique. For, to accept it is to stray away from the road to full civic freedom and prefer and proceed along the slippery slope towards slavery. If the Indian community now resident in South Africa do not wish their children and children's children to become a community of slaves, they ought unhesitatingly to reject the dangerous bait which, we are afraid, the Government of India seem half inclined to swallow.

Kenya's New Governor: Judging from his first utterances, Sir Edward Grigg, the new Governor of Kenya is not in the least likely to inspire confidence in the people. He has nothing but praise for the white settlers, their enterprise and enthusiasm His plea for a common policy for the whole of South Africa, can be capable of only one interpretation—that the reactionary policy followed by the Hertzog government against Asiatics should be accepted in East Africa also in the racial and economic interests of the white settler. But His Excellency has to remember that Kenya is quite different from the Union. While the former is directly governed by England, the latter is the master of its own internal affairs. The inglorious White Paper of Kenya will for ever remain a blot on the Kenya administration, and Sir Edward Grigg's success will be gauged by the extent to which he modifies that settlement.

Indian Deputation from South Africa: A Reuter's message from Cape Town dated 18th November states that a deputation of six or seven members representing the South African Indian Congress is proceeding to India by the first available steamer from Durban. It includes Dr. Abdur Rahman, a member of the Cape Provincial Council, who stated in an interview that the main object of the deputation was to see if India could not use her powers through England to bring about a Round Table Conference with regard to the Asiatic Bill.

A Special Officer for Work in connection with South African Question: Mr G. F. Paddison, C. I. E., I. C S., Labour Commissioner to the Government of Madras, has been placed on special duty with the Government of India in connection with Indians in South Africa, and left Madras for Calcutta.

and dispensaries in our Presidency and the number of patients treated thereat. In our own Presidency, by the end of 1923, there were 735 hospitals and dispensaries maintained by various agencies, including the Governmental institutions. The number of patients treated during the year was 25,60,701 ; of these, 73,042 were indoor patients and 24,87,659 were outpatients. The total number of beds available was 6,590 and the daily average number of patients occupying them was 40,354. The average daily attendance of outpatients was 27,2752 and the total expenditure on this work amounted to Rs 50,10,883. There has been some steady improvement in this direction, no doubt ; but it is very meagre. You can easily imagine what a vast increase in the existing facilities for medical relief to the poor and the backward amongst us is needed by our countrymen in our Presidency with a population of nearly twenty millions of people or nearly two crores. Moreover, there is further need for measures and facilities on the preventive side of medical treatment which is now claiming more prominently the attention of the medical world. The world is gradually coming to believe that it is more economical and beneficial to endeavour to secure the prevention of sickness and sufferings rather than the cure of sickness and sufferings and I would, therefore, request all those who are interesting themselves in this vast and most urgent problem of medical ministration and service to direct their thought and attention to the supplying of trained agencies working in the direction of the prevention of disease in addition to its cure. This brings us face to face with the question of National Health, both personal and public, and I am an advocate of the latter though not at the cost of the former method of helping humanity. Mr. Disraeli, while speaking on one occasion, laid great stress on the interdependence of National Health and National prosperity. Judging from this point of view, we cannot but admire the great enthusiasm, nay, I would even characterize it as Christian Missionary zeal, of our present most popular Governor of Bombay—I mean His Excellency Sir Leslie Wilson. He has undertaken a very big scheme for the purpose of providing a large number of beds, more trained doctors and nurses and has been doing his utmost to put his scheme on a sound basis. I am glad to mention here the zeal and the vigour with which my friend Major Genl. A. Hooton, C I. E., Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay has been pushing on his scheme of village first-aiders.

All these attempts have touched in my humble opinion only the fringe of the problem. I know the instance of the district of Kolaba, where we are now conducting one of our three Maternity Hospitals and Nursing Homes on behalf of the Kolaba Maternity and Infant Welfare Association through the Seva Sadan Society. It provides medical relief to only 50,000 people in a population of 6,50,000 and thus a very small number get a chance of medical relief of an ordinary character. Private agencies ought to come forth to assist our people in this important direction to give the much-needed help and private charitable agencies or Trusts ought to take the lead in such beneficent work. While speaking on this aspect of the question, we cannot but be too grateful to the two charitable Trusts in Bombay, of a cosmopolitan character,—to mention prominently only two—I mean the Trust of the late Mr. N.M. Wadia and the Trust created by the late Sir Ratanji Tata. There ought to be many more such broad-based trusts and, let us hope in the near future, we may have our Indian Rockfellers and Carnegies—the two well-known non-sectarian trusts of the world But over and above these, is a great need for indigenous missionary bodies to take up such work. The Christian Missionaries have set to us a very glowing example of sacrifice, devotion, and true charity, and broad-minded Catholicity, and I am sure that now that we have in our midst organisations like the Servants of India Society and the Poona Seva Sadan Society with definite programmes of work —national service by training national missionaries—let us hope that such bodies will multiply and a vast amount of self-sacrificing patriotic service will result therefrom But the people have a very large amount of work to do in this matter. First, clouds of ignorance and prejudices against modern medicine and treatment must be dispelled and people must be told all about the laws of health, hygiene and sanitation, and people must learn to make regular contributions to such work and thus help in the rearing up of a vast and all-pervading system of medical relief—both of preventive and curative character—and to achieve which a great and good beginning will have to be made by a systematic education in Health Propaganda with the help of all—Government, the Missionaries, public bodies, private agencies—all working together to achieve the common goal, which is to make humanity healthy, happy and God-fearing.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Bombay Adult Educational Association : We are requested to announce for the information of those ladies and gentlemen interested in the work of Adult Educational Association that the Association would be prepared to organise study circles on Principles of Economics, Political Science, Elements of Psychology, History of Civilisation (special Epochs) and English Literature, if six to eight people offer themselves for each. The group will meet once a week for 8 to 10 weeks at times and places convenient for those who join. Suggestions for other subjects will also be considered. Those interested may apply for further particulars to the Hon. Secretary, Adult Educational Association, Hormuzd Villa, Malabar Hill, Bombay.

Kanya Gurukula, Delhi : We take the following from the Tribune of Lahore : The Kanya Gurukula, Daryagunge, Delhi, is now celebrating its second anniversary. It is a unique institution of its kind in the whole country comprising as it does a scheme of female education based on the ancient system. It constitutes a praiseworthy attempt to revive amongst Hindu women the Brahmacharya method of living during the tuition period of life. This institution during the short period of its existence has won the good will of all interested in the revival of ancient culture. We have no doubt that all such persons will contribute in a full measure towards making the anniversary a success.

Social Conference, Amraoti : We understand that a Social Conference will also be held along with the All-India Non-Brahmin Congress which is to hold its sessions shortly at Amraoti.

State Scholarship for Women Graduates: It is notified that the Government of the Central Provinces is prepared to consider applications for a State scholarship of the value of £300 a year, plus 15 or 7½ per cent. bonus, respectively, tenable in the United Kingdom or in foreign countries, from Indian or domiciled European or Anglo-Indian women graduates. The scholarship will be awarded for study of medicine or other educational or professional training, and will be tenable for a period of three years in the first instance with the possibility of extension in special circumstances and, in particular, in the case of medical students to four and five years, and will carry with it no conditions as to any subsequent career or service under Government and no expectation for such employment will be held out. The scholarship will be granted for three years unless the High Commissioner sees reason to terminate it sooner. It may be terminated at any time if the scholar fails in health or conduct. One important condition is that due notice should be given to the High Commissioner of any intention on the part of the woman scholar to marry, and the High Commissioner, in consultation with the local Government, reserves the right to terminate or suspend the scholarship if thought fit in the special circumstances of the case. Applications for nomination should be made to the Director of Public Instruction, Central Provinces, on or up to the 1st January, 1926.

Compulsory Education in Bihar: It has been notified with the sanction of the Government of Bihar and Orissa in the Ministry of Education, writes the Jamshedpur correspondent of the Hindustan Times, that the primary education of the children residing within the area of the Union Board of Maharajganj in Saran, shall be compulsory, with effect from January 1st 1926.

Punjab Jail Enquiry Committee: The Punjab Jail Enquiry Committee, the appointment of which was announced a few days ago, will enquire into the allegations of the existence of the practice of unauthorised punishments and unauthorised indulgence in the Punjab jails, and generally, into the state of discipline among the staff and inmates and adequacy and effectiveness of supervision over both, and propose the remedies for defects and means of stopping malpractices The Committee will consist of Mr Lumsden I C.S. (Retd.), Mr. Justice Jai Lal of the Lahore High Court and Naikh Abdul Quader, Minister of Education, Punjab. It will be remembered that the Committee is largely the result of the disclosures made in the Bandemataram libel case. The Committee will commence its proceedings on 23rd November, and will report its conclusions and recommendations to Government. The Committee will be prepared to consider information placed before it by private persons.

A Widow Remarriage at Ahmedabad: A remarriage took place last week between Mr. Nanubhai Natvarlal of Surat and Srimati Devkore of Shihore in the Arya Samaj, Ahmedabad, in the presence of a large number of distinguished Hindu ladies and gentlemen. The bride who was a virgin widow was given away in marriage by her own mother who was also a widow with the consent of her relatives. The bridegroom was a widower.

"Budddha Gaya for Buddhists.": Dr. C. A. Heivavitarne, the President of the Buddha Raksha Sabha (Ceylon Buddhist Organisation), and Honorary Secretary of the Matrabodhi Society of Ceylon, arrived in Madras recently en route to Colombo after a prolonged tour in India. He has been in India for the past month with a number of Buddhist monks on deputation on behalf of the Buddhists of Ceylon to place before the leaders of the Hindu Maha Sabha the Buddhist case with regard to Buddha Gaya and before Sir John Marshall of the Government of India Archaeological Department the question of building a Vihara at Sarnath. Interviewed by the Associated Press, he stated the case of the Buddhists for the control of Buddha Gaya and said that from the beginning of Buddhist history Buddhism had established its claim to Budda Gaya and that the Buddhists had been persistently agitating for its possession since 1891. He referred to interviews he had with Babu Rajendra Prasad and Sir Henry Wheeler, Governor of Bihar and Orissa, and stated that a solution of the Buddha Gaya question was still not near at hand. He concluded :—"I feel India needs Buddhism and my message to India is, Give Buddha Gaya back to the Buddhists."

Capital Punishment: "During more than half a century, we have been protesting against the continuance of the barbarous practice of capital punishment," writes the A. B. Patrika. "Many countries in the meantime have done away with the system. Australia abolished it in 1918, Italy in 1889, Holland in 1870, Sweden in 1902, Norway in 1921, Roumania in 1864 and some of the States in U. S. A. have also done the same. Even in England, public feeling has been systematically growing in volume against this mode of punishment for some time resulting in the introduction of a Bill to abolish capital punishment. We understand an M.L.C. intends to introduce a Bill for the abolition of capital sentence".

Abolition vs Regulation of Brothels: The publication of the Bombay Prostitution Committee's Report was followed by a controversy about the nature of the legislation required to suppress the evils of the brothel system. Some strongly advocated regulation of brothels, while others, including ourselves, held that any legislation in that direction should aim at the abolition of the brothel system. The experience of observers in countries where a sort of 'regulation' exists, shows that we were right in our view. Writing in a recent issue of the Guardian (London) about the humanitarian activities of the League of Nations, Commandant Allen observes:—"In Cologne I had for purposes of information to visit many of the controlled houses and I feel sure that anyone who has this experience would never rest until such places are outside the sanction of the State or the police authorities. While they have this sanction, both sexes refuse to consider the wrong as existing at all." The italics are ours. This is precisely what we have often repeated in these columns.

Buddhist onk in England: Anagarika Dharmpala, the well-known Buddhist monk, who has gone to England in order to spread the gospal of Lord Buddha in London, made his first appearance recently at a meeting of the Buddhist Lodge of the Theosophical Society of the Belford Square. Anagarika who has been in London before and has travelled over the greater part of the world in the interest of Budchism, told a Morning Post representative before the proceedings commenced that he was going to devote two years of his life to spreading the doctrine of Buddha in England and teaching his gospel of love.

Karachi Brahmo Samaj and the Depressed Classes: We are glad to note from the communication of the Hon Secretary of the Karachi Brahmo Samaj appearing in the Sind Observer that the members of the Karachi Brahmo Samaj, Rambagh Road, have started depressed class work. It is stated that recently a party consisting of Rev. Bhai Bannerji, Mr. P. L Vaswani, Mr Virumal and others went to a quarter, sang a few bhajans and spoke a few words of wholesome advice. They were very well received by the Bhangis of the place. The party dispersed with the cry of "Maharáj Sri Ramki Jai." At the special invitation of the Bhangis the same party went to their quarter the next day when the Bhangis themselves also sang to the accompaniment of their musical instruments with great fervour and devotion. Members of the Brahmo Samaj party also sang and spoke some words of wholesome advice to them. The party then distributed patashas among those assembled and returned home at 11-30 p. m. The party intend to go out every Sunday evening. Any member of the public can accompany them in their work.

The Hindu Samaj, Madras: We understand that a Hindu Samaj has been recently established in Madras under the leadership of Sir Sadasiva Iyer. Its objects are: the revival and consolidation of Hinduism through (1) the removal of untouchability, (2) the propagation of perfect social and religious equality of all castes and communities in Hinduism, (3) the propagation of the spiritual ideals of Hinduism One special feature of the Samaj is that ladies as well as gentlemen are eligible for membership. We need hardly say that in such a place as Madras where communal and caste differences are at their highest and where untouchability is present in its worst form, the Samaj would be of much use in bringing about better understanding between the various communities and in purging Hinduism of some of the evils from which it is now suffering.

Tutankhamen's Tomb: It will be remembered that one of the first acts of the Egyptian National Government was to stop the sacrilege perpetrated by English explorers in breaking open the tomb of Tutankhamen who is supposed to be the nephew of Pharaoh. But in spite of the resentment of the Egyptian Nationalists, the explorers managed to obtain a special permit and the process of exploring the tomb continued. Reuter's messages from Luxor and Cairo dated the 13th and 14th November show that the last doubts as to the contents of the sarcofagus have been dissipated. When Tutankhamen's mummy was taken out of its wrappings, the body was found covered with gold and with golden stars on the heart and lung. A large golden dagger accompanied the body. It is also stated that the feet of Tutankhamen, which were first to be uncovered, are reported to confirm previous theories that the King was no more than fifteen years of age when he died. A most wonderful discovery is a great gilded or gold crown still on the head, but it has not yet been fully unwrapped. Scanty details suggest that it is actually the double crown of the two lands, the north and the south.

Progress With a Vengeance: The Indian Witness has the following under 'current topics' over the initials of R. C. B :—Ghazi Mustafa Kemal Pasha is finding it easier to reform people's dress than to reform their social life. He started bravely to improve all the laws relating to marriage, divorce and the position of women; but had to put away his wife as a gesture of renunciation of that attempt. In the past few weeks he has been busy with the modernisation of dress. Men are required to wear a hat or cap of western pattern, and a learned commission is exploring the problem of suitable attire for women. The President himself last week wore "full evening dress and a top hat" when he went in state to open the Assembly. This new policy will probably win favour with the governments of Europe beyond anything else that the Turkish Republic has undertaken; it will at least open a new market for certain kinds of manufactured goods at a time when the Pan-Asiatic movement seems to be diminishing the demand for them in other parts of the East. But Mustafa Kemal will find that some of his reforms are more far-reaching than he supposes For, if you change a man's mode of dress you have to change a lot of other things too. If he is to keep his trousers neatly creased he must not sit cross-legged; and if he is to wear them fashionably tight he will have to give up squatting on his heels. In all seriousness, you will either make him a different man by getting him accustomed to other dress, or you will make him slavishly obey an order which seems to him both ridiculous and offensive. It is reported from Constantinople that there is a great rush for the prescribed articles of dress and that the shops are all sold out;—but there is no news to that effect from any place except the former capital, where, probably, thousands of men have all along been wishing to make the change but have not been willing to face public ridicule until they had the moral backing of authority. It is very likely that the dress reform, like the earlier social reform, will be confined to one or two cities and that the great mass of the Anatolian peasantry will be as little affected by the one as by the other. If the thousands of "spurious clergy," as one correspondent calls them, take it into their heads to back their distinctive religious dress by stirring the populace against the whole reform, next summer may see the President discarding his top hat, as he has already discarded his "emancipated" wife, and going back to something that does not offend.

NOTES

The Death of the Queen-Mother: The death of the Queen-Mother Alexandra at the age of 81 on Friday the 20th instant, has evoked universal sympathy with His Majesty the King-Emperor and the royal family. Her Majesty, according to all accounts, was far from being a masterful type of woman like Queen Victoria. She had wide sympathies, and her unostentatious activities in relieving suffering won for her the deep affection of the people.

The Council of State Elections: Except for the addition of one more Swarajist from Madras, the results of the Council of State elections both in Bombay and Madras that were announced recently, are not calculated to change materially the complexion of the Upper House. In Bombay, in addition to the sitting members, the Hon. Messrs. P. C. Sethna and Manmohandas Ramji, Mr. Nattansey Morarji, another leading citizen of Bombay, has been elected. While personally the choice in each case is unexceptionable, it is hardly proper that there should not be a single non-Mahomedan member to represent the districts in the Council of State. In Madras, in addition to Mr. V. Ramdas and Sir Annamalai Chetty, the two new members elected are Dr. U. Rama Rao and Sir C. Sankaran Nair, the one a Swarajist and the other, a prominent and well-known Indian publicist. We welcome Sir Sankaran Nair back to public life. Ever since his resignation of the Imperial Executive Council Membership, Sir Sankaran has retired from public life, and we daresay his wide and varied experience of men and affairs will prove of much help to the Council. It remains to be seen whether the second Council after the Reforms will persevere on in its usual career of reaction or whether it will turn out to be an Upper Chamber in the true sense of the word. The sensation of the elections has been furnished by the Central Provinces where Sir Maneckjee Dadabhai—more royalist than the King—has been unseated by a Swarajist candidate.

Government Deputation to South Africa: Every Indian publicist knows the limitations of the Government of India in dealing with the situation with which Indians are confronted in a self-governing colony like South Africa, the spokesman of whose Government recently reiterated the right of South Africa to secede from the Empire if it was found to her advantage. But it was certainly within the power of the Government of India to satisfy Indian public opinion which, with one voice, had requested them to defer sending the deputation headed by Mr. Paddison to South Africa, in view especially of the impending arrival of the deputation of the South African Indian Congress which is already on its way to this country. The Government's communique expressing their inability to delay their deputation to South Africa in view of the short time available before the Asiatic legislation again comes before the Union Legislature, is in utter defiance of Indian public opinion, and we are not surprised that the public are not disposed to repose much confidence in the deputation. Lord Winterton's reply to Col. Wedgewood in the House of Commons that South Africa had the absolute right to pass any such legislation and that it would be unconstitutional for him to give any assurance that communications between the Government of India and the Union Government would be laid on the table, does not give any room for an optimistic view of the situation.

The Mill Strike: Except for a few handful of men who are now and then offering themselves for work, the mill strike situation continues the same. Most of the labourers have returned to their villages and to the small number that remain here, relief is being administered through local contributions as well as from those received from the British Labour Party and the International Federation of Amsterdam. The Municipal Commissioner also, in accordance with the Corporation resolution, has advertised the starting of relief works in the shape of excavating and filling in low-lying lands at the rate of eight annas per day for the male labourer and six annas for the woman worker. In view of the inadequacy of these low wages, it is to be hoped that they will be increased to an appreciably higher rate. Meanwhile, there is a silver lining in the dark clouds. It may be remembered that the Bombay Corporation, sometime back appointed a Committee to enquire into the strike situation. The Committee has sent round a letter both to the strikers and the mill-owners asking them to meet at a Round Table Conference. Though the majority of the mill workers will not accept anything but the restoration of the old wages or shorter hours of work, a certain section seems to be inclined to resume work on certain conditions. The difficulty seems to be that the piece-worker apprehends that, in addition to reduced wages, shorter hours will also be resorted to. Many mill-owners also seem to be anxious to meet the workers' representatives. It is to be hoped that at the Conference that is to take place today, the position will be clarified and a beginning made in the process of putting an end to the present deadlock that is detrimental to the interests of both the labourers and the mill-owners.

Namboodiris and Social Reform: There is hardly any community in the Hindu fold which is more conservative than the Namboodiris, the aristocratic Brahmins of Malabar. That the spirit of social reform has permeated that community is indeed a significant sign of the times. The resolutions passed at the recent annual session of the Namboodiri Yogaksheman Sabha, show that the community has awakened to the necessity of introducing radical reforms in its social system to bring it into a line with the other progressive communities. The community which once used to regard English education as a sin, has been for some time past taking much interest in promoting education on modern lines among the younger generation as a result of which a section has sprung up which was impatient to introduce social reforms in the community. The struggle between the old school and the reformers has been going on for some years, and it is gratifying to see that the reformers have been able to induce the Yogakshe-man Sabha to agree to certain resolutions which, if given effect to, are calculated to revolutionise the Namboodiri community. For instance, one of the resolutions requests the Namboodiri members of the Madras, Cochin and Travancore Legislative Councils to introduce a Bill in the respective Councils regarding the marriage, management of Tarwad affairs and inheritance of the Namboodiris and get the same passed. It is also stated that the measure should be in conformity with the following principles, viz, that marriage from one's own community should become universal among the community, that every member of a family should have a hand in the management of the family affairs, that the power of the Karnavans should be defined and restricted, and that every member should have the right of getting a share from the family income in proportion to the total income. The earnestness of the community to get these reforms introduced is evident from the draft Bill called the Namboodiri Family Bill which the Sabha considered and resolved to circulate among the members of the Madras, Travancore and Cochin Legislative Councils. The passing of the Nair Regulation in Travancore and Cochin has completely put a stop to the possibility of the Numboodiris contracting unholy and irresponsible alliances with Nair women, and the impatience of the younger members of the community who are not allowed to marry women of their own community is, therefore, perfectly intelligible. We wish all success to the Namboodiri reformers.

Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association: The annual report of the Bombay Presidency Social Reform Association for the year 1924 shows that the Association, with its limited resources, had been doing much useful work. The Hindu Widows' Home and the Hindu Ladies' Hostel conducted by the Association had caused severe strain on its limited finances. As the number of widows in the Home was found to be too small to justify an independent accommodation for the Home, suitable arrangements were made to accommodate the two inmates elsewhere through the kindness of Mrs. Shantabai Kashalkar, one of the Secretaries of the Association, who was looking after the affairs of the Widows' Home. The Hindu Ladies' Hostel which was started in 1918 has a splendid record of useful service in as much as this is the only Home which affords Hindu lady-students from the moffusil facilities for boarding and lodging under strict supervision of an experienced lady Superintendent. The charge levied per head for boarding and lodging is only Rs. 25 while the total expenses work out at Rs. 40 a month, thus creating a huge deficit. Of all the activities of the Association, the Hostel for young lady-students is the one which specially deserves to be supported by liberal contributions from philanthropic Hindus. The Association also held meetings to consider important social legislations to express its considered views on questions affecting social reform. An elocution competition is held every year with a view to encourage Hindu ladies to speak in public, and prizes are awarded to successful speakers. With the help of lady volunteers, collections are made during the Divali in aid of the Female Education Fund and in 1924 the Association realised a sum of Rs. 637-6-0. Mrs. Shantabai Kashalkar, B. A., one of the Secretaries of the Association, to whose zeal and enthusiasm reference is made more than once in the report, deserves the credit for organising the Divali collections. The report concludes with an appeal for funds to enable the Association to extend its activities, and we trust that it will meet with a generous response from the public, especially from Hindu philanthropists.

The Youth Week: Bombay celebrated during the last few days the Youth Week which has for its object the awakening of a new social consciousness among the young men and women all over the world with a view to promote cultural and intellectual sympathy among the nations of the world. The Bombay meetings were well-attended and well-organised. The resolutions passed at the public Conference, breathed a broad spirit of enlightenment. There has been some danger that we in India might be too much absorbed in the spirit of narrow Nationalism, but movements like the Youth Week are well-calculated to correct any such tendency towards isolation and to bring Indian Nationalism in organic relation to international progress. We wish the movement every success.

Abolition of Slavery in Nepal: Nepal is almost nearing complete abolition of slavery. It is gratifying to see that the Maharajah has met with a good response to his appeal to the 15,000 slave-owners to set free their slaves who number nearly 53,000. In November last year the Maharajah declared that he had dedicated a sum of 14 lakhs of rupees for buying back the freedom of slaves and that he would try to get more money for the purpose. Subsequent events, however, have proved that a much larger sum of money would be required for compensating the owners than was originally anticipated. Uptodate, 50 lakhs of rupees have been spent in compensation, the major part of which has been the personal gift of the Maharajah himself. The Maharajah has indeed set a noble example in the cause of suffering humanity.

A Noted Lady Worker: We deeply regret to record the death of the lady Dilshad Begum at the comparatively early age of 46 at Bangalore on Friday the 20th instant. She was one of our prominent lady workers, and her social and educational activities in Bombay are well-known. She was the lecture Secretary of the Bombay Ladies' Branch of the National Indian Association and the Secretary of the Bombay Ladies' Gymkhana. She was actively interested in the Bombay Baby Week celebrations. Besides, she was connected with many other institutions. We offer our sincere condolences to the bereaved family.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

THE INDIAN OUTLOOK.

The present-day observer of public activities in India, cannot but be somewhat bewildered by their multiplicity and apparent lack of coherence with one another. The first organised movement in modern times in India was the Brahmo Samaj, a movement started about a century ago by Raja Ram Mohan Roy. This was followed by several social reform movements which, however, did not have any all-India organisation till about forty years ago. The Indian National Congress may be said to be the first movement which had for its object the improvement of the conditions of the people of India as a whole. Two years later, the Indian National Social Conference was started, and it devoted itself to the reformation of social customs which were detrimental to the health and well-being of men and women. For many years, these two movements continued to work harmoniously side by side. Later on, the Indian leaders woke up to the industrial backwardness of the country, and the Industrial Conference was started to pay special attention to that department of life. These national movements were all non-communal. Meanwhile, however, there was, what may be called, a narrower nationalistic tendency slowly gaining ground in the country. The Arya Samaj movement may be said to have been the pioneer in this direction. In place of the broad eclectism of the Brahmo Samaj which aimed at reconciling the different faiths in the country in a universal Theism, the Arya Samaj was from the first an aggressively Hindu communal movement fighting, on the one hand, orthodox Hinduism and, on the other, Christianity and Mahomedanism which were working hard to make proselytes from Hinduism. The method of the Brahmo Samaj was synthetic and peaceful; the method of the Arya Samaj, on the other hand, was exclusive and militant. The Arya Samaj made much progress chiefly in the Punjab and the United Provinces, but it failed to obtain a footing in the rest of India.

Just as the Arya Samaj in the field of religion, so was the nationalistic political movement in Maharashtra of which the late Mr. Tilak may be said to have been the founder. The nationalism of men like Dadabhai Naoroji, Ranade, Sir Pherozeshah Mehta, Chandavarkar and Gokhale, clashed with the nationalistic temper of Mr. Tilak's movement. The chief feature of this nationalistic Maharashtra movement was the emphasis laid upon the foreign character of British rule, while the national movement accepted British rule as a providential dispensation and strove to utilise the freedom from foreign invasions and internal commotions, which it afforded, for promoting the economic, social and political conditions of the country. The cry against foreign rule more readily appealed to the masses than the constructive policy of the upholders of the national movement. Although at Surat, Mr. Tilak and his friends were thwarted in their purpose to capture the Congress, in a few years, they succeeded in overwhelming the national party which had been sadly depleted by the death or disability of its ablest leaders. What Mr. Tilak would have made of the Congress and the Indian political movement, if he had had a free course, is a matter of speculation. In all probability, he would have followed what has now come to be known as responsive co-operation, which is practically the same as the policy followed by the old Liberals.

But just at the psychological moment, Mahatma Gandhi stepped on the scene and Mr. Tilak, weakened in his health by his long political struggles, died. We do not want to rake up the controversy whether or not Mr. Tilak, if he had been alive, would have supported the Non-Co-operation movement. Mahatma Gandhi was practically left in sole control of the situation, and he committed the Congress and a large section of the people of the country to his policy. The sequel to that movement is a matter of recent history. The Swaraj Party broke out in revolt against the boycott of councils and Mahatma Gandhi was powerless to stem the tide, and he has, therefore, completely handed over the control of the Congress to the Swaraj Party. A party within the Swaraj Party itself has now sprung up. It holds that merely entering into the portals of the Councils and fighting against Government is no good, and that the party should, wherever possible, accept office in the Government, and should actively mould the policy of the administration. This principle, so far as Municipalities and the Local Boards are concerned, has already been accepted by Congressmen and been given effect to. But Pandit Motilal Nehru, the present Swarajist leader, somehow took it into his head that this was an act of rebellion on the part of the Swarajist dissenters and threatened them with disciplinary action and expulsion from the Party. It is now clear from the increasing number of those who have openly come forward to the support of the dissentients, that the Pandit did not quite realise the strength of feeling in its favour, and we think there is no alternative for him but to accept the policy of responsive co-operation, as Mahatma Gandhi had to accept the policy of council-entry. As we said, however, the policy of responsive co-operation is not far removed from the policy of the Liberals, and we have every hope that, after a short struggle, the country will once again settle down to the old and sane policy of constitutional political agitation. We are anxious to see this process accelerated, because there can be no doubt that the unsettlement of the political mind of the country bars the way to reform in every other direction. A great responsibility rests upon the British Government. The present system is unsatisfactory and there can be no peaceful progress until it is radically modified. Government may be able to crush any opposition, but it cannot make headway against the sullen discontent which pervades all classes of the population. It behoves it, therefore, to step boldly out of the bureaucratic groove and offer the country an early opportunity of revising the political system, in accord with the sentiments and needs of the present time.

THE TAMIL NADU CONFERENCE.

(Contributed.)

The stunt of preparing the country for civil disobedience and non-payment of taxes, which Pandit Motilal Nehru started, is evidently going the round of the country. The latest is from the President of the 31st session of the Tamil Nadu Conference held recently at Conjeevaram. In despair Mr. T. V. Kalyanasundaram Mudaliar declared: "so, there is only one possible course open for us, civil disobedience and non-payment of taxes." In the case of Mr. Mudaliar, however, this is not to be wondered at, inasmuch as he is one of those who still loyally cling to the undiluted and unadulterated original non-violent non-co-operation as adumbrated by Mahatma Gandhi. To all except to Mr. Mudaliar and a few of his way of thinking, however, the last few years convey the very contrary lesson. If there is any time when the country is least prepared for civil disobedience, it is now. Mahatma Gandhi himself, the author of this ideal, with the true prophetic vision of a seer, has confessed that he cannot see any hopes of launching mass civil disobedience in the country in any measurable distance of time. The reasons are only obvious. The Hindu-Muslim dissensions in the North and the Brahmin-Non-Brahmin quarrels in the South, have assumed greater proportions. In the Swaraj Party itself which is the dominant Party in the Congress, disintegration and demoralisation have set in. We have now the orthodox Swarajists and the responsive co-operators. Under the circumstances, the talk of civil disobedience is only a myth. Mr. Mudaliar, however, was not consistent in his views. In one part of his address, he denounced co-operation as useless and advised Congressmen to go back to the original N. C. O., while in another place, he acquiesced in the existence of the Swaraj Party, when he insisted upon a stiffening up of its programme by the non-acceptance of any offices. As the New India, Madras, says: Mr. Mudaliar "wavers between allegiance to N. C. O., and submission to Swarajism". This shows where the No-Changers stand. They ought either to enter the Swaraj Party or completely retire from the Congress. Again, Mr. Mudaliar indulged in the futile talk of civil disobedience and yet, he wished the Independents and Liberals, who are constitutionalists to the core, to join the Congress. We do not see how on earth there can be a combination between two such opposing political creeds. We are glad, however, that the Tamil Nadu Conference, unlike the Andhra Provincial Conference, has not pinned its faith to civil disobedience, non-payment of taxes and other impracticable hair-brained schemes, which are now in the air, and which its President so eloquently advocated.

All that the Conference has done is to reiterate the Patna resolution of the All-India Congress Committee, with this difference, that the Conference demanded that khaddar should be worn not only on Congress and ceremonial occasions, but on all occasions. It remains to be seen how far this pious resolution will be translated into practice. The proceedings of the Conference however, are not without interest. The clever attempt of Messrs. S. Srinivasa Iyengar and S. Satyamurthy to merge the Swaraj Party in the Congress, was only foiled. Mr. S. Srinivasa Iyengar moved a resolution recommending that the Congress should conduct political work more vigorously than the Swarajya Party had hitherto done, and should also carry on the campaign of capturing the Councils, and that the existence of the Swarajya Party as a separate party was unnecessary in future, but he had to drop it owing to the vigorous protests it aroused from many quarters. This strikingly shows more than anything else, that the Swarajya Party has still to prove its credentials of speaking on behalf of the whole of the Congress in that part of the country. The ugly Brahmin-Non-Brahmin bickerings in the Southern Presidency also came to the surface in the course of the proceedings. In one form or another, communalism has been the bane of India. In the North, it is the Hindu-Muslim troubles; in the South, it is the Brahmin-Non-Brahmin quarrels. "The one impediment that has stood in the way of Congress work in this province is the Justice party. In truth it is not a party all. The principles which animate this party and the opinions which it holds do not find any echo in the hearts of the masses. Persons banded together in seeking offices and jobs much above their deserts, co-operating with Government, and acting against the interests of the people, constitute the entire Justice Party": so spoke Mr. C. N. Muthuranga Mudaliar, Chairman of the Reception Committee. There can be no more scathing condemnation by a non-Brahmin Congressman of a non-Brahmin organisation. What surprises one is that the Justice party men should have cried down the Congress as an exclusively Brahmin organisation. This hatred of Brahmins has not stopped with the loaves and fishes of office alone It has also extended to the sphere of languages. Poor Sanskrit has been condemned on the ground that it is the language of the foreign Aryans who, by the way, are identified with Brahmins, while Tamil has been extolled correspondingly to the skies as the language of the indigenous Dravidians. It was against this that the Right Hon. Sastry recently protested in a speech delivered at the Mylapore Sanskrit College.

We had expected the Non-Brahmin movement to die of inanition, as all sectional and communal movements are bound to do. And indeed it met with such a death when the truest elements of the Party left it. The recent defeat of the Justice Party candidates at the Municipal elections, gave a further blow to the prestige of the Party. But, now and then, attempts are being made to revive its lost vigour. It was only recently that a learned worthy from Nagpur entertained a large and overflowing audience at the Gokhale Hall with foul abuse of Brahmins upon whose devoted heads he poured forth all the vials of his wrath and hatred. It is a pity that Non-Brahmin Congressmen should also have been infected with this communal spirit, for it was this which introduced a disrupting and disturbing

factor into an otherwise peaceful gathering. Among the resolutions that were to be moved before the open Conference was one asking for representation in Legislative Councils and other bodies according to the population strength of Brahmins, Non-Brahmins and Depressed Classes. The President, however, for good reasons, ruled it out of order. Thereupon the discontented elements, under the leadership of Mr. E. V. Ramaswamy Naicker, left the Conference, convened straightway a Non-Brahmin Conference in the very same pandal and, in spite of the sage counsels of Messrs. O. Kandaswamy Chetty, Varadarajalu Naidu and C. H. Reddy, adopted a resolution recommending the Cawnpore Congress to put up for Council elections at least 90 per cent. of the Non-Brahmin candidates, 33⅓ per cent. out of 90 seats allotted to the Non-Brahmins to be reserved for the Depressed Classes. Everyone is only familiar with the evils that have followed the adoption of the Lucknow Pact. The new Lucknow Pact between Brahmins and Non-Brahmins, which the Madras Non-Brahmins clamour for, though only a temporary measure, will only share a similar fate, and instead of easing the communal tension, will only intensify it, as experience has sufficiently proved. It is to be hoped the Cawnpore Congress will not let this monster of communal representation rear its head again. We cannot close this better than with the exhortation which Mr. O. Kandaswamy Chetty, the eminent publicist and social reformer of Madras, made to his caste-men:

"It was fatal and mischievous to introduce a distinction between Brahmin and non-Brahmin in the political field and to base distinctive political claims thereon, while oppression of the panchamas by the caste-Hindus continued and their indifference to Christians and Mahomedans was a standing fact. So long as notions of superiority and inferiority based on birth and religion continued, the communal troubles would continue. To redress one community's wrongs while leaving the grievances of other communities unredressed, would only increase its power to do harm. If caste-Hindus would move in equal footing with the Adi-Dravidas instead of fighting with Brahmins for equal treatment for themselves, Brahmins would realise the folly of practising social exclusiveness in institutions intended to pave the way to Swaraj."

THE LOCARNO PACT AND EUROPEAN PEACE.

The Locarno Pact was hailed by the European press in general as a great step towards the establishment of peace in Europe. But, in spite of the encomiums showered upon it and its authors, peace appears to be as distant as ever. The Pact is claimed to have eliminated the possibilities of war; but the hesitation of the parties to the Pact even to approach the question of disarmament exposes the utter hollowness of that claim. The plain fact, however unpleasant it may be, is that mutual distrust and suspicion among the European powers are as rampant to-day as they were in 1918. The disease is deep-rooted and calls for more radical remedies than the Locarno Pact. The Pact, which is but another term for patch, has nowhere succeeded in bringing about a permanent settlement and it is no wonder that Locarno has failed to lay the foundation of peace in Europe.

While in the British Parliament, Messrs. Chamberlain and Lloyd George are waxing eloquent over the Pact, the coal dispute is heading to a crisis. To-day it is coal, to-morrow it will be something else. All the while the struggle between Capital and Labour is getting thicker. Unemployment is steadily on the increase. The Government has no solution to offer. There is thus a good deal of discontent in England. The Pact which is supposed to have brought security to Europe has made matters in Germany very insecure. The Nationalists are vehement in their denunciation of the Pact. Another period of party warfare which seemed to have subsided with the election of Hindenberg as President is now imminent. Russia apparently considers the Pact as aimed at her and is looking eastwards for a counter-blast. If the Western Powers will have nothing to do with her, she is sure to make alliances elsewhere, and yet defy Europe. This perhaps is the most disastrous outcome of the Locarno Pact. The suspicion that the Pact is a move against Russia and conceived to crush Bolshevism which seems to have come to stay is not confined to her. It is being freely stated in other countries also that the European statesmen assembled at Locarno have come to a secret arrangement for making a joint onslaught on Russia at the earliest opportunity. In France things are in such a hopeless mess that no Government can live for a month. The economic bankruptcy which is at the root of the confusion in France has defied solution. They have no money to meet external obligations and internal demands. To add to her troubles she has embroiled herself in a war or two. The requirements of war will make the face after the dear franc all the more desperate. But imperialism is blind. In Italy Mussolini is threatening the nations of the world with dire consequences if they refer to Fascism in anything but adulative terms. "Black Shirts" have made life intolerable to those under them who believe in more honest methods. Nevertheless its popularity is on the increase and Italians, wherever they are, are enamoured of it, as is evident from the formation of a Fascist Association in Bombay. In short, Europe is in agony and Locarno has not mitigated it to any extent. The disease is the outcome of the European theory of society and Government. The war feeling persists in growing and the disinclination of the parties to the Pact even to listen to any suggestion of disarmament is distinctly discouraging.

With her present condition of Government and society, Europe cannot be expected to give a better account of herself, and we for our part are not surprised at it. The European nations have to live out the consequences of the selfish and aggressive policy they have been pursuing for centuries. The present economic tangle and international jealousies are the direct outcome of that policy which has been a negation of international fellowship and are least conducive to the development of mutual trust and co-operation. Live and let live, is a wonderful maxim, but unfortunately it had no place in the code of European diplomacy of the last two hundred years. Centuries of social and political existence utterly divorced from proper ethical standards and God, cannot but bring about a state of affairs with which Europe is faced to-day. The remedy lies not in the direction of insincere pacts, but in turning the light inwards and in each nation taking a resolve to shape its future actions in a way which, while ensuring maximum good to itself, will cause minimum harm to others. With the birth of this resolve the war idea will die out and the enormous sums now being spent on armaments can be directed towards the much-needed economic rehabilitation of the people. The exploitation of the weaker nations under the guise of protection and mandates will cease, and each nation will be left to develop its own individuality and resources for the general good. That way lies peace.

OUR TRAVANCORE LETTER.

The Problem of Untouchability.

This problem of problems has reached a new stage and the gradual evolution it has been undergoing in its varied and various phases during the past one and a half years is an interesting study in itself. Every one knew the danger ahead if the old groove of orthodoxy and conservatism was to be trodden and everyone seemed convinced of the need—the supreme need—for a change in the social readjustment of the different communities. While the extremists among the social reformers thought that the State must move and take the initiative in the matter even by rushing headlong and forcing down the throats of the unwilling section social reforms by compulsory legislation, there were others who rightly held that the most unshakable and sound foundation is laid when the State assumes a position of benevolent neutrality and when the people themselves move in the matter. This was the feeling in the country when Satyagraha was started at Vaikom by a band of workers who had no vested interests in the State. Whatever may be said about their honesty of purpose or uprightness of their character, the fact cannot be gainsaid that they spoiled their cause by their fissiparous writings and speeches and completely estranged the sympathy even of the educated classes of high-caste Hindus whose co-operation was such an asset to the cause of the uplift of the depressed classes. The Government of the time did not muster sufficient courage to stop even certain undesirable and unwelcome forms of activities. It was on account of these that there was considerable hesitancy on the part of the constituted authorities to proceed on the lines chalked out by the more forward of the Press. The situation was acute when the present European Dewan assumed charge of the administration. The opinion went round that there would be a complete and immediate quietus given to the agitation by throwing open all the public roads and other high ways for the free and unrestricted use of those of the depressed classes who have been asking for it. It was further said that an effective end would be put to this intolerable state of affairs. When, however, Mr. Watts, soon after being installed on his Dewanate gadi, announced that he would not introduce any violent innovations or changes which would go against the cherished desires or sentiments of the major communities, especially on questions connected with religion, and that he was prepared even to respect honest convictions and age-long customs and usages of the people, the go-ahead among the communities were disappointed. But Mr. Watts, having been born and bred up in Travancore, knew what he should do to maintain communal peace, amity and concord and at the same time to so shape the turn of affairs as to bring about a change in the mental vision and outlook of the people who have been such persistest obstructionists to all-round progress and enlightenment. What he did was to strike a golden mean which is always the wisest course. It was on account of this attitude of the Dewan and of his unostentatious and unobtrusive methods that Satyagraha itself fizzled out in certain other places and more peaceful ways were successful. A word of thanks is due to the officiating Dewan for what he had done to ease the situation. The fact that Mr. Watts belonged to no section of the Hindu community was in his favour, and he kept his head cool and took courage in both hands to tackle a problem which had brought such an amount of unmerited opprobrium on the State. The statesman-like sympathy and the practical foresight of Mr. Watts largely contributed to the peaceful end of the trouble raised in such places as Haripad, Ambulupuzha and Thiruvarppu. There is a difference of opinion as to the procedure adopted in Parur to satisfy the forward party and the general impression is that the agitators need not have been so strong and insistent in securing the use of a road which might have been left alone, as it lies between two lines of Brahmin houses and as it led nowhere except to the temple itself. There was again the temple tank used by Brahmins, Nairs and other high-caste Hindus. As, however, this question is being fought out in a civil court, it is better to leave the matter alone and wait the court's decree. Official attitude having deliberately changed, it would have been a wiser course for the reformers to mark time and proceed. I am sure that the liberal outlook which now guides the main springs of all official activities, social and political, will yet achieve things to effect greater solidarity and cohesion among the different communities in the State. This hope is induced by the careful and firm manner in which communal strife is being dealt with by the Dewan. This canker has been eating into the vitals of the State and had grown to dangerous proportions both in the press and on the platforms. But the tact, firmess and consideration with which the problem was handled during the past few months, have evidently created a better atmosphere, as any one who has been following the debates in the Legislative Council during the last two sessions could see. Interpellations and supplementary questions and innuendos tending to cleavages have been carefully kept out, and the level of discussion in this matter is decidedly free from irritating speeches and observations which have been indulged in with impunity and to the distinct disservice to the country as a whole Unnecessary caste and sect war and statements of appointments which would needlessly fan the flame of communal strife have been sternly ruled out of order; at the same time, the requests for such information are being carefully considered and complied with as far as circumstances would permit, and there are, both in the Legislative Council and in the press, definite indications of this strife waning. If this policy is pursued and if the representatives of the people in the popular institutions of the State continue to realize and evaluate the new angle of vision of Government, this menace which has been threatening the very life of the entity of the State could be completely stamped out. The Press also has a distinct duty to perform and thus co-operate with the honest and patriotic endeavours made by the head of the administration who seems to be fired by the inspiring and elevating influence of a Maharani who has already enthroned herself in the hearts of her people by her wise statesmanship and clever political craft worthy of all praise.

SOCIAL REFORMERS AND DEPRESSED CLASSES.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Lt. Col. H. Steen of Kirkee has published two rather trenchant letters in the Indian Social Reformer of Bombay, of 31st October 1925 and 14th November 1925 respectively under the above caption and referred therein to our Depressed Classes Mission of Poona. Being nettled the Editor of the paper has put in a brief comment which is however not better informed and is certainly more irrelevant than the text. I feel it my official duty to make a statement so far as our Mission is concerned.

When Rev. Shinde organized this Branch of his All-India Depressed Classes Mission in June 1908, he left it to be managed by a local Committee of which Mr. A. K. Mudliar was the Hon. Secretary and Dr. H. H. Mann was the President. This Committee on several occasions and for several reasons came into conflict with the late lamented Sir R. G. Bhandarkar, of which the one mentioned by Col. Steen may have been true. In 1913 Mr. Shinde fixed his head-quarters at Poona and organized the first Anti-Untouchability Conference in Poona under the presidentship of Sir R. G Bhandarkar. Since then, and not before, we find Sir R. G. Bhandarkar's name on our subscribers' list, paying rupees twelve per year, till April last when his name had to be removed for his subscription falling in arrears. Col. Steen who mainly insists on practical sympathy, has been our most consistent and highest subscriber paying Rs. 120 per year since the year 1911. For the last three years he has been paying Rs. 150 per annum. As to Sir N. G. Chandavarkar, who was one of the founders of the Parent Mission at Bombay and for some time its President, he had been paying Rs. 100 every year from the beginning till 1920. Though he had no direct connection with this Poona Mission, it is not fair to say that he ever severed his indirect connection or real sympathy towards us, as the Editor of the Indian Social Reformer would have us believe for, I remember, he presided over one of our public meetings in Poona in 1923 and had always a kind word for us till his very last. I mention these personal details with a view to correct the wrong impressions likely to be created by Col. Steen's letter and by the still less unjustifiable remarks of the Editor.

Though I was not personally connected with this Mission in Poona from the beginning, I can very well gather from all its printed reports and statements of accounts concerned, that neither the Parent Mission nor any of its branches was ever a part and parcel of any of the activities, social or spiritual, of any of the Prarthana or Brahma Samajes in Western India or elsewhere. From the beginning the entire movement has had its own independent foundation. The Poona Prarthana Samaj handed over its only night school at Mangalwar Peth to this Mission in 1909 which was however soon closed, as that Samaj ceased to support it. This solitary fact does not justify the Editor of the Indian Social Reformer to refer to it as a "breaking-up with the Prarthana Samaj."

Though, as I stated above, it is a fact that this noble movement is not in any way organically connected with any Prarthana or Brahmo Samaj, its whole inspiration is due to the Theistic Church in India. I have heard Mr. Shinde, the father of the whole movement, say so repeatedly and authoritatively. Nor are the members of the Depressed Classes to whom he has handed over this Mission in Poona as their own for the last nearly three years in the least indifferent to the influences of Brahmo Samaj. In fact all religious work organized in this Mission by Rev. Mr. Shinde who is still working as an All-India Brahmo Missionary is on the line of the Brahmo Samaj which they have still been faithfully carrying on in their own humble way. They are also still grateful to the other worthies of the Samaj mentioned above for whatever they have done for us.

One point which however I have to bring out in this statement, is that the remarks of our highest permanent subscriber, Col. Steen, are mainly if not wholly true and pertinent and no Editor will be doing us any the least service by clouding their real significance. But yet the real blame, to give out a long suppressed secret, lies somewhat otherwise. Since this Mission was reorganized in Poona three years ago there has been an unhappy disagreement between us and the parent Body in Bombay. In these hard days while that Body has chosen to wind up some of its main branches, we have been holding our own. God alone is a witness to our labours and difficulties! While the fact stands out that the Parent Mission, instead of returning to us the cash debt of about Rs. 3000 besides the interest on our Trust Fund in its possession of Rs 5,000 (which it is still generous enough to acknowledge), has been wasting its hard earned funds in undue law suits in spite of his (Mr Shinde's) advice to the contrary and even protests. We have hardly any desire for a newspaper controversy as to whether the so-called social reformers outside the Mission are sincere towards us or not. While a mother at home is harsh, heedless and unjust, of what avail is it to the child to cry for the moon shine of the social reformer in India? While debts are delayed by the very people who ought to have given freely and promptly, why blame others for lack of extra sympathy?

Poona,
18th November, 1925.

Yours etc,
K. G. P,
General Secretary,
Poona D. C. M. Society.

[We have allowed our correspondent to discharge his "official duty." For our part, we agree with the wise remark of the Subodh Patrika that "since the Committee has no first-hand knowledge of why many founders and workers of the Mission left that body, it would be in the interest of all concerned to keep silent over that question".—Ed., I. S. R.]

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Highly gratifying as it is to see that the Depressed Classes have secured such a spokesman as Col. H. Steen, it is one way unfortunate that in his zeal for their welfare, he should have waded beyond his depth by his criticism of the late Sir R. G. Bhandarkar as a great social reformer. One can but smile at such attempts to belittle the work of the great man, and excuse the critic most frankly, since from the nature of his being a stranger, he cannot be expected to enter into the spirit of the priceless spade-work done by people like Dr. Bhandarkar in the field of social reform. Col. H. Steen's letter published in your last issue betrays ignorance of facts; his knowledge of Dr. Bhandarkar seems to have been based on hearsay; whatever his source of information, it is certain that he has been allowed a glimpse at a part and not a whole.

An analysis of his letter shows that Col. H. Steen maintains the following points:—

(i) Dr. Bhandarkar was apathetic to the Depressed Classes in as much as he declined monetary help to the D. C. Mission. (ii) Whatever Dr. Bhandarkar's work in other branches of social reform, since he did nothing for the Depressed Classes—as Col. H. Steen supposes—he is not entitled to the honour of a great social reformer; to deserve the name, he ought to have worked in each and every branch of social reform, none excluded. (iii) A person who contributed his mite, howsoever small, to the Depressed Classes ought to weigh more in public estimation than Dr. Bhandarkar who did nothing of the kind. (iv) The activities of Dr. Bhandarkar were restricted by social barriers and therefore he forfeits the reverence of the rest of the world.

It is not for me to say how sound the logic of the above contention is. Let me, therefore, leave it to your readers to judge it in the way they think best. But one thing is plain: however people like Col. Steen may deride the idea of Dr. Bhandarkar being a great social reformer, the society for which he wrought knows his work in all avenues of social reform too well to be fooled by such ungenerous criticism as that of Col. Steen. Yet for the benefit of Col. Steen and others, I may be allowed to cite a small incident of great import in the life of Dr. Bhandarkar. It is authentically known that once Dr. Bhandarkar had the courage to arrange a religious sermon by a preacher from the Depressed Classes under his own roof in a city which was then a stronghold of orthodoxy! Col. Steen may not understand the significance of this; yet the Depressed classes will no doubt realize from this incident—which is one from amongst the many that can be quoted—whether Dr. Bhandarkar must have done anything for them, and whether they have any reason to mourn the loss of the great social reformer.

17th November, 1925, Belgaum. Yours etc., G. H. J.

THE QUESTION OF UNTOUCHABILITY AND THE COCHIN LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

It is not a long time now, since the press and platform of the State and outside recorded their greatest dissatisfaction at the undesirable and unjust attitude shown by the Government of Cochin in rejecting a resolution sent by Mr. K. T. Mathew of the Council demanding to throw open all the public roads of the State for the use of all subjects irrespective of caste, creed or colour. The Cochin State is in no way behind any in the matter of education and culture. The establishment of a representative Legislative Council is indicative of the advancement in the matter of administration. Besides the general public, most of the members of the royal family including princesses are with academic qualifications and distinctions. These things bear witness to the advanced educational attainment of the State. In spite of all these, there is a large section of the people, called the non-caste Hindus, who are sufficiently well-advanced in the matter of education and civilisation, but who are denied even the elementary rights of citizenship. It is needless to say how far this state of affairs wounds their feelings of self-respect and honour. There are many public roads in various parts of the State still closed against the traffic of non-caste Hindus. Such being the case it was only pertinent on the part of Mr. Mathew to send such a resolution to the Government to get permission for discussing the matter in the Council. But the fate it met with was indeed shameful.

As to the legal propriety of such a resolution there can be no room for any doubt, for Mr. Mathew sought legal advice from Messrs. S. Srinivasa Iyengar and S. Satyamurti, two eminent men of law in South India. All these were of no avail practically. The Dewan of the State paid no heed at all to the matter. He wanted perhaps to handle the machinery of administration only in the fashion in which it was handled in the past. He is not perhaps aware of the fact that the old order changeth yielding place to new. With that permission, the matter will come before the members of the Council for discussion. Thereby a chance is given for the selected men of the State to consider over the matter seriously. If it is passed there it can be due to the uniformity of opinions of the majority of members. If the majority of the members are not for it the motion will be lost. In either case there will be no room for a serious complaint against the Government.

It is indeed unjustifiable if the Government are not prepared to pay any attention to the matter. In such circumstances it is only natural on the part of the suffering section of the people to resort to measures which will remove such disabilities. Cochin State a few months ago showed ample signs of agitation among the suffering section of the people. But all such actions were suppressed by the leaders of the people who wanted to see whether the same experience will repeat itself again at the hands of the authorities concerned. In these days of tremendous agitation for the equality of rights it is very curious to see the safe prevalence of such a conservative policy in all strength and vigour in Cochin.

Now Mr. M K. Raman, M.A., B.L., M.L.C., has sent a similar resolution, perhaps a bit broader, in that it demands to throw open all the lanes and roads of the State for the use of all people. The resolution has already reached the Government. The Government had sufficient time to think well over the matter. Possibly they could have felt in the course of this interva

the unfairness of the unjust rejection of the matter last time. The Government have now got an opportunity to show their duty towards the question. It is expected that the Government will allow the matter to be discussed in the Council.*

In fact, the main share of the work, if not the whole, rests on the members of the Council. The resolution will have any effect produced only if it is passed in the Council. The Council is composed of the educated, experienced and selected men of the State and as such naturally there is great room for hope. The question is one which, from the very nature of it, should necessarily win the sympathy of the enlightened members of the Council and hence the people can most reasonably expect a fair and favourable handling of it.

Quilon, Yours etc.,
15th Nov. '25. KESAVAN CHIRAYIL.

*From our news columns it will be seen that Mr. Raman's resolution was amended by Government and that he has refused to move it in the amended form.

A MISCHIEVOUS CANARD.

Mrs. Sarojini Naidu writes to the Press as follows:—

During the past few weeks while I have been too deeply occupied with urgent national issues to leave much leisure for more personal matters, I find that a most unseemly and lamentable controversy has been raging not only in the columns of the more reactionary but, alas, also of the more rational Indian Press, arising out of a wholly fictitious statement in the "Muslim Outlook" supported, I am told, by equally imaginative sensation-mongers of vernacular Press to the effect that one of my sons has embraced Islam with my express knowledge and consent.

Holding all creeds in equal reverence and believing a man's faith to be entirely his own intimate private concern, I cannot conceive why even were the allegation of my son's supposed change of religion true, he should not be free to follow his own spiritual preferences without seeking preliminary sanction of being exposed to a fantastic and unmannerly inquisition by the public more especially that section of the public which in my opinion so rightly demands a measure of religious toleration and a fuller measure of liberty to prosecute its own ancient worship unmolested and unchallenged in accordance with its own particular view.

I have so far resolutely refrained from any comment or criticism on this profitless and foolish controversy, but I am convinced that longer silence on my part is likely to be still further exploited by unscrupulous and mischievous persons and papers of both communities to foster their pet-propaganda of Hindu-Muslim hostility and bitterness.

Therefore, at the instance of valued friends whose earnest wishes I cannot ignore, I desire to state on the indisputable assurance and authority of no less a person than my son that profoundly interested as he always has been in his studies of Islamic philosophy, literature and history, at no time has he undergone or contemplated undergoing any form of conversion to Islam. No one is more astonished or indignant that he is to find himself the unwitting cause and centre of such a tissue of malicious and baseless rumours emanating from the minds of hysterical fanatics on both sides.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Pandit Motilal to resign from the Skeen Committee?: The Bombay correspondent of the Hindu is responsible for the news which, he says, he learnt from a reliable source, that Pandit Motilal Nehru will soon resign his membership of the Skeen Committee, one of the reasons being the over-whelming opinion against his acceptance of membership, which is within the gift of the Government, and wherein he is not expected to do much national service, being in a minority. An authentic public announcement, he adds, is soon expected to be made.

Currency Commission Questionnaire:—The following memorandum indicating the main questions which will come under the consideration of the Royal Commission on Indian Currency and Finance under its terms of reference is published in order to assist intending witnesses in the preparation of their evidence. It is not to be regarded as exhaustive, nor is it desired that each witness should necessarily attempt to deal with all questions raised. (1) Is it time for a solution of the problems of Indian Currency and Exchange by measures for the stabilisation of the rupee or otherwise? What is the comparative importance of stability in internal prices? In foreign exchanges, what are the effects of a rising and a falling rupee and of a stability of high or low rupee on trade and industry including agriculture and on national finance? (2) In relation to what standard and at what rate should the rupee be stabilised if at all? When should any decision as to stabilisation take effect? (3) If the rate selected differs materially from the present rate, how should the transition be achieved? (4) What measures should be adopted to maintain the rupee at the rate selected should the gold exchange standard system in force before the war be continued, and with what modifications, if any? What should be the composition, size, location and employment of the Gold Standard Reserve? (5) Who should be charged with the control of the Note issue and on what principles should the control or managment be transferred to the Imperial Bank of India and, if so, what should be the general terms of the transfer? What provisions should be made as to the backing of the note issue? What should be the facilities for the encashment of notes? What should be the policy as to the minting of gold in India and the use of gold as currency? Should the obligation be undertaken to give gold for rupees? (7) By what method should the remittance operations of the Government of India be conducted? Should they be managed by the Imperial Bank? (8) Are any, and if so what measures desirable to secure greater elasticity in meeting seasonal demands for currency? Should any and if so what conditions be prescribed with regard to the issue of currency against hundis? Should any change be made in the existing methods for the purchase of silver?

A Reform Marriage in Bombay : A correspondent writes :—On Wednesday the 18th instant the marriage of Dr. Ramprasad with Miss Manik Kossambi was celebrated in Mr. Mudgavker's residence, New Queen's Road, Bombay. Dr. Prasad is a Shri-Vaishnava Brahmin belonging to the Hebbar Iyengar community of Mysore, and the bride is a Gowd Saraswat Brahmin hailing from Goa. She is the eldest daughter of Professor Dharmananda Kossambi, the great Pali scholar and an authority on Buddhistic literature, and she is a graduate of the Harward University, U. S. A., whither she accompanied her father when he went out as the Pali Professor of the same University. Dr. Prasad is an M.A. and M.Sc. of an American University, and is the eldest surviving son of Mr. B. S. Krishnaswami Iyengar, B A. B L., retired Dist. Judge and Advocate, Bangalore city. While in America he held a Mysore Government Scholarship, and has specialised in Industrial Chemistry, having spent nearly 7 years in the West. He hopes to be employed on a decent salary in the Mysore State. Miss Manik Kossambi for some time served in the educational department of Indore, and is now a tutoress to one of the Princesses of Baroda. A large number of ladies and gentlemen turned up to bless the couple, who were further greeted with several congratulatory telegrams and valuable presents.

Accommodation for Delegates to Cawnpore Congress : Mr. S. K. Dutt Paliwal, M. A., M.L.C., Publicity Commissioner, Congress Camp, Cawnpore, wrties : Delegates and people desirous of attending the Congress session shall kindly communicate to us the sort of arrangement they want for their accommodation, etc., whether they want to put up in the delegates' camp, or in family quarters or in separate bungallows, by the 30th of November, 1925. Delay in this information is likely to result in inconvenience to all concerned.

All-India Swadeshi Exhibition, Cawnpore : An All-India Swadeshi Exhibition of Arts and Crafts will be held at Cawnpore in December during the sittings of the Indian National Congress. It will be a unique opportunity for the exhibition of Swadeshi goods. An exhibition will not only do good business on the spot, but will also gain a tremendous advertisement for one's wares. Among the goods exhibited will be all kinds of khadi cloths, Kashmir pattis, maleedas and other woollen goods, Indian silks, ivory ware, brass ware, wood carving, and a large number of other things made in the towns and villages of India. Stalls for the sale of Swadeshi goods will be provided within the exhibition enclosure. Intending exhibitors and those desiring to reserve stalls should communicate early with the Secretary, Exhibition Committee, Generalganj, Cawnpore.

The "People," Lahore : We are requested to announce that the annual subscription for the People of Lahore, the well-known weekly edited by Lala Lajpat Rai, which we noticed in our issue of July 11th and to which we have frequently referred in these columns, has been reduced from Rs. 8 to 6-8-0. The price of a single copy has also been reduced from 3 annas to 2 annas, while the number of pages has been increased from 16 to 20. Lalaji is a well-known publicist and it is not surprising that, during the short period of 4 months of its existence, the People has secured an enviable place among Indian weeklies.

Propaganda against Races in Madras : The Madras District Congress Committee held a meeting at the Mahajana Sabha Hall on November 18th to take steps to carry on a vigorous propaganda against the coming races at Guindy and appointed a committee for the purpose with power to collect funds to carry on the work. The meeting also protested against the growth of bucket shops in the city leading to spread of gambling.

Lala Lajpat Rai's Candidature : We are glad to see that the news that Lala Lajpat Rai is standing for the Assembly is welcomed by all newspapers in the Punjab, not excluding Mahomedan newspapers, which have not, as a rule, been overfriendly to Lala Lajpat Rai. Writing in the Observer of Lahore, which claims to be "a representative organ of the Muslim community in the Punjab," "Politicus" writes :—Lala Lajpat Rai's presence in the Assembly shall undoubtedly add to the power and prestige of the Nationalists. I think his health would not permit him to undergo the stress and labour involved in making a new party. Independent party he would perhaps consider as too lukewarm for his purpose, while Swarajists of the pure obstruction school led by the stern schoolmaster Pandit Nehru would be too uncompromising for his political creed. He has much in common with the Tilakite leader, Mr. Kelkar. It stands to reason, therefore, that he will strengthen the forces of responsive co-operation.

Maulana Mahomed Ali and the Swaraj Party : We fail to understand, writes the Mussalman of Calcutta, how Maulana Mohamed Ali of all persons comes forward to criticise the Swarajya Party and its policy and tactics. It is he, assisted subsequently by Mahatma Gandhi, who gave a carte blanche to the Swarajya party and has thus strangled the non-co-operation movement to death. How does it lie in his mouth to find fault with the party which has derived its power and influence from his manipulation of Congress affairs at the Special Congress at Delhi? To us Maulana Mohamed Ali has become absolutely unintelligible.

The Late Queen Alexandra : The sudden death by heart collapse of Queen Alexandra at half past five on Friday the 20th instant in her ripe old age of 81, will be widely lamented all over. Following is a brief sketch of her life. Queen Alexandra, the eldest daughter of King Christiana IX of Denmark, was born on the 1st of December 1844. She was married to King Edward VII on March 10, 1863 in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, when King Edward was the Prince of Wales. On King Edward's succession to the throne in 1902, she was crowned with him in Westminster Abbey On the death of King Edward in 1912, Queen Alexandra for a time retired from all public activities and spent her days in quiet retirement. Queen Alexandra's appearance in public again after ten years of retirement was an occasion for public rejoicings. Queen Alexandra took an active interest in all the movements calculated to relieve the sufferings of the sick and the distressed. She was the President of the London Hospital. She has given innumerable proofs of her interest and pity for sorrowing and suffering humanity. During the war she threw herself heart and soul into the relief work for the disabled and the distressed, she visited many hospitals and institutions as they were being organised to deal with the war victims in 1915; and she was among those who took the keenest interest in the work of the Red Cross Society. The philanthropic fund founded in her honour—the Queen Alexandra Day Fund.—has been a grand success. The "Rose Day" in June, celebrated in her honour, when funds are collected for the Queen Alexandra Fund always proved a success. In January 1918, Queen Alexandra was appointed, in appreciation of her services, a Dame Grand Cross of the order of the British Empire.

Hospital Accommodation in Bombay : Special efforts are being made for increasing hospital accommodation in Bombay city, which at present is in the ratio of two per thousand of the classes unable to pay for medical treatment The programme of extension recommended by the Medical Relief Committee is comprehensive including asylums for incurables and an infirmary for beggars. The scheme is estimated to cost rupees seventy-one lakhs. A public meeting will be held in early December, at which the Governor will appeal for funds.

Ban on Public Roads in Cochin: The Cochin correspondent of the Hindu, Madras, writes to that paper under date Cochin, Nov. 18.—Mr. M. K. Raman, M.L.C., who represents the Southern Ezhava constituency had sent in a resolution to be moved at the next session of the Legislative Council urging the removal of all barriers in the use of public roads, thoroughfares, wells or institutions by reason of one's caste or religion. The Dewan amended the resolution so as to run as follows:—"That this Council recommends that the Government should take such steps as to ensure that no person is barred from the use of any public road, thoroughfare, well, or institution which does not belong to the Government Devasvoms, or Devasvoms under the control of the Government". Mr. Raman has declined to accept the alteration as the saving clause practically defeats the very purpose of the resolution.

Sir Joyson-Hicks' Plain-speaking:—Sir W. Joyson-Hicks who is a member of the present Cabinet, addressing a meeting in Lancashire sometime ago, said:—"We did not conquer India for the benefit of the Indians. I know it is said at missionary meetings that we conquered India to raise the level of the Indians. That is cant. We conquered India as the outlet for the goods of Great Britain. We conquered India by the sword and by the sword we should hold it, ("Shame.") Call same if you like. I am stating facts. I am interested in missionary work in India, and have done much work of that kind, but I am not such a hypocrite as to say we hold India for the Indians. We hold it as the finest outlet for British goods in general and Lancashire cotton goods in particular".

End of Satyagraha at Vaikom An Associated Press message dated Madras, November 20, runs thus:—A Cochin message says that the Kerala Untouchability Committee has resolved to withdraw satyagrahis from Vaikom and put a stop to the picketing campaign there, the Government having thrown open all the four temple roads to all classes with the exception of such portions as are contiguous to the temple. These portions are being walled round and converted into temple property and admission thereto will be allowed only to those classes that already enjoy the right of entry to the temples. The Untouchability Committee has resolved to take up the question of entry into temples for non-caste Hindus.

All-India Kalwar Conference, Cawnpore: The third session of the All-India Kalwar Conference will be held at Cawnpore on 23rd, 24th and 25th December 1925, during the Christmas week. All caste-brethren are requested to attend the Mahasabha and make it successful.

Japan's Crusade against "White Slavery": We take the following from the Hindustan Times:—"Japanese reformers have started a movement to fight the Yoshiwara, the centre of "White Slavery" in the Orient. More than 150 social organizations are taking part in this campaign, which will be in full swing during this month and which aims at the gradual elimination of the traffic in women and children for immoral purposes. Hitherto the Japanese have not looked upon this traffic as it is looked upon in the west. It has been regarded as business transaction, and nothing was thought when a Japanese mother sold her daughter into a house of the Yoshiwara. The girl could later abandon the life and leave the notorious district, having amassed a comfortable income, and no one looked upon her as a disgraced women. The adhesion of Japan to the League of Nations, however, and the gradual absorption of Western ideals has changed this view, and certain members of the Privy Council, approached by the reform leaders, have agreed to support the campaign along the lines laid down by the League of Nations. Dr. Baron Yamakawa advocates the complete abolition of "the terrible national disgrace of the Yoshiwara."

The Punjab Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha: The Secretary writes:—Reports of 333 widow marriages have been received from the different branches and co-workers of the Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha, Lahore (Panjab) throughout India during the month of October 1925. The total number of marriages held in the current year, i. e, from 1st January 1925 to the end of October 1925 has reached 2,203 as detailed below: I. According to caste: Brahmins 373, Khatris 457, Arora 463, Aggarwal 147, Kaisth, 58, Rajput 152, Sikh 198, Miscell. 355, Total 2203. II According to Provinces: Panjab & N. W. F. P., 1693, Sind 36, Delhi 38, U. P. 305, Bengal 46, Madras 20, Bombay 10, C. P. 7, Rajputana 13, Hyderabad (Deccan) 5, Assam 30, Total 2203. III. Voluntary donation received during the month is Rs. 7 and total during the year Rs. 1367-14-0.

Mahatma Gandhi's Fast for 7 days: Mahatma Gandhi is fasting for one week from the 24th instant. The exact cause of his fast is not, however, ascertained. It is understood that it is due to some incident that occurred at his Ashram.

NOTES

Suspension of the Cotton Excise Duty: After all, a historic wrong has been redressed. The Cotton Excise Duty which, since 1896, has been throttling the largest and most important indigenous industry in the country, has been suspended from December 1st, and we have it, on the authority of the Viceroy's Ordinance, that it will be abolished next March unless unforeseen circumstances intervene in the middle. This closes a dark chapter in the history of the economic relations between Great Britain and India. The Excise Duty was first imposed as a countervailing duty on mill-made goods in order to placate Lancashire, and in spite of persistent protests and universal condemnation, successive Finance Members were giving some reason or other for the retention of the duty. It was only in 1916 that Lord Hardinge admitted the iniquity and injustice of the duty and pledged the Government of India to its early abolition, and it was reserved for Lord Reading to undo a wrong of thirty years. The mill-owners, in accordance with the pledge given by them, have restored the 11½ per cent cut in the wages, and the mill-strike practically comes to a close, though the mills have not yet begun working. When last Saturday the Conference between the representatives of the mill-owners and mill-hands proved abortive, it was apprehended that the strike would continue indefinitely, and the Government of India ought to be congratulated on the timely action they have taken. It should be said to the credit of Sir Leslie Wilson and his Government that it is their persistent protests that have brought about the desired result. Judging from the comments of the Manchester Guardian and the declaration of the Lancashire members of Parliament, that the suspension of the duty constituted India's blow on Manchester, it would appear that Mr. N. N Wadia's mission to England and his threat to the Government of India to bring pressure upon them from Manchester have not been a success. Meanwhile, some of the Manchester Trade Guilds who have reconciled themselves to the suspension of the duty, are clamouring for a reduction in their import duties as a concession to them. The suspension of the excise duty is but a bare act of justice to India's cotton trade and Lancashire is not entitled to any compensation at all. We hope the Government of India will not yield to the blandishments of Lancashire. If they do so, they will only be taking away with one hand what they have given with the other.

Medical Relief in Bombay: On Wednesday next His Excellency Sir Leslie Wilson will launch the appeal for medical relief in this city. A comparative study of figures for some of the important cities in India, will reveal how hopelessly inadequate hospital accommodation is in Bombay. Madras provides the largest number of beds, viz., 4·2 per 1,000, while the ratio of 2·2 per 1,000 which Bombay provides is perhaps the lowest in the whole of India. The Medical Relief Committee which was appointed last October computed that, excluding the number of persons in this city for whom accommodation is available in special hospitals, only 2,056 beds are available in public hospitals for the general population which cannot afford private treatment. It was largely due to the efforts of Sir Leslie Wilson, who has been evincing much interest in the question of medical relief, that the Medical Relief Committee was appointed. The Committee, besides stressing the necessity for awakening public interest in the problem of medical relief, recommended the addition of 2,000 beds to the Government and Municipal Hospitals. Government, however, in view of the difficulty of finding adequate funds, proposes only an addition of 850 beds, 300 to Government hospitals and 550 to the Municipal hospitals. The total cost is estimated at 71 lakhs which it is proposed to meet, 25 per cent. by Government, 25 per cent. by the Corporation, and 50 per cent. by public assistance. We hope the philanthropic public of Bombay will make a liberal response worthy of the occasion.

The Kolaba Maternity Hospital: The Kolaba Maternity Hospital which His Excellency the Governor formally opened on the 30th November, owes its origin to the labours and efforts of the Kolaba Maternity and Infant Welfare Association working in conjunction with the Poona Seva Sadan Society under the able direction of that indefatigable worker, Mr. Devadhar. Till but a few months ago a small dispensary, it has been found possible to convert it into a hospital by public contributions, and it is a matter for gratification that the public of the Kolaba district, the rich and the poor, have liberally contributed towards its funds. As His Excellency observed, an institution such as this must be of inestimable value to those communities whose ladies have not yet become accustomed to treatment at the hands of a male doctor. The Association has done well in entrusting the technical management of the Hospital to the Poona Seva Sadan, which alone, through its trained band of women-workers and nurses, can make the institution a success.

Sind Students' Conference : The second session of the Sind Students' Conference which was held on the 28th and 29th November under the presidentship of Prof. Jitendralal Banerji was from all accounts a successful one. One noteworthy feature of the Conference was the election of Miss Dotiwala, B.A., as the Chairman of the Reception Committee. Both Miss Dotiwala and Prof. Jitendralal Banerji laid special emphasis, in the course of their speeches, on the need for infusing the spirit of social service into the minds of the students. Miss Dotiwala dwelt, among other things, on the necessity of devising and adopting effective measures for uprooting the prevailing evils in the social life in Sind among which she made special mention of the curse of the dowry system. She demanded a separate college for women, and welcomed the idea of compulsory military training for boys. She deplored that nowhere in our educational system was there a place found for teaching the art of living. The President, Prof. Jitendralal Banerji exhorted the students to have courage and the spirit of service, and wandered a little to the field of politics. He was not apparently pleased with the statement of the General Secretary that politics had been banned from the Conference, and dwelt upon the necessity of carrying on the war of freedom that was begun in 1920 until the liberty of the land was realised. We hope he did not mean students should non-co-operate from the Government and aided schools. The very fact that the Conference, according to the statement of the General Secretary, had to abandon politics and restrict itself to educational and social spheres, ceasing its connection with the Non-co-operation movement to which it was yoked for four years, shows that experience has made the organisers of the Conference wiser, and it was unfortunate that the President should have thought it a proper occasion to express his political views.

Reaction in Turkey : In noticing Kemal Pasha's attempts at social reform in Turkey by means of coercive legislation, we expressed our apprehension that his passion for Europeanisation would result in a revolt of the conservatives in Turkey. Recent events culminating in the proclamation of martial law in Erzerum where it was alleged "fanatical reactionaries" attempted to organise demonstrations against Kemal Pasha's measures of modernisation, amply bear out our contention that short-cuts in matters of social reform are calculated to defeat the object of the reformers. To seek the aid of Government machinery to effect any reform in the existing order of society without first preparing the ground for it by educating the public is the greatest blunder which inexperienced and hasty reformers are likely to commit. We have been made the target of strong criticism for not having been able to approve of methods like Satyagraha or mass conversion for the removal of the disabilities of the depressed classes, and we hope the lesson of the results of the Kemal's anxiety to see Turkey march at break-neck speed towards Europeanisation—is it, after all, social reform ?—will not be lost upon the impatient reformers in this country.

The Deputation to the Andamans : We regret that, by the exclusion of the Moplah representatives from the deputation to the Andamans which sailed from Calcutta on the 1st instant, the Madras Government has utterly failed to satisfy the demand of the Madras Legislative Council as embodied in the resolution which it carried in August last. Mr. Mahomed Schammad, who is the only member of the deputation who has some knowledge of Malayalam, is reported to have expressed, in an interview, to a representative of the Swarajya of Madras, his dissatisfaction with the personnel of the deputation. The way in which the Madras Government has dealt with the question is utterly unsatisfactory. The deputation, according to the Swarajya, has not been provided with the terms of reference and not even a Secretary has been allowed. The deputation is to investigate the suitability of colonising the island with Moplah families, and it is, therefore necessary that the members thereof must have an intimate knowledge of the social life of the Moplahs. The exclusion of the Moplah members was the worst that the Madras Government could have done, and we shall not be surprised if the recommendations of the deputation utterly fail to carry conviction in the general public and the Moplah community in particular.

The Fergusson College Affair : Quite a sensation has been created in Poona by the high-handed action of the Principal of the Fergusson College in dismissing one girl-student from the College residency and another from the College roll. It seems that certain of the College students boycotted the College social gathering as a protest against the Principal thrusting upon them a President to preside over the function quite against their wishes, and the two girl students in question seem to have vigorously advocated the boycotting of the function. The said President thus forced upon the students is none other than Mr. Joseph Baptista, the President of the Bombay Corporation. Personally the students have no grievance against Mr. Baptista, for, on their own confession, they cannot think of a much better man to preside over the function than the premier citizen of Bombay. What, however, they are fighting for is the constitutional right to elect their own man for the occasion, and in this the students will have the sympathy of all. We cannot help thinking that the punishment awarded to the girl-students is too drastic and quite unwarranted by the circumstances of the case, and we hope that the over-sensitive Principal will lose no time in retracing the hasty step he has taken.

Vidyasagar's Daughters : We are glad to read in a recent issue of the Forward that Dr. Miss Bose, who has been collecting funds to help the late Pandit Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar's daughters, has received a contribuion of Rs. 300 from Maharaj Chandra Sham Shere Jung Bahadur, Rana, Marshall, the Prime Minister of Nepal. In his covering letter the Prime Minister writes :

> It is indeed distressing to hear that the children born of such a great son of Bengal are in such strained circumstances, and much as I sympathise with your noble efforts to do something for them, I am doing myself the pleasure of expressing these feelings by a contribution of Rs. 300 to the fund that is being raised for the purpose.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, DECEMBER 5, 1925.

THE HINDU MAHASABHA.

The Hindu Mahasabha is holding its special session to-day in Bombay under the presidency of Lala Lajpat Rai. The Chairman of the Reception Committee is Mr. M. R. Jayakar. These two names stand for all that is most liberal and cultured in Hinduism and we hope that, under their guidance, the Bombay session of the Mahasabha will become a land-mark in the history of that movement. The Hindu Mahasabha as it is at present constituted, is itself a great advance upon the past. For the purpose of the Mahasabha, the term 'Hindu' is defined as all those who profess a religion which had its origin in India. This would include not only orthodox Hinduism with its different sects, but also Buddhism, Jainism, Sikhism, the Brahmo Samaj and the Arya Samaj. This is good so far as it goes. At the Benares session of the Mahasabha Mr. G. K. Nariman, the distinguished Parsi-Sanskrit scholar of Bombay, participated in the proceedings and was recognised as a regular member of the Mahasabha. Dr. Besant is attending the present session at the special invitation of the Mahasabha which thereby accepts that members born in other faiths can become Hindus. We hope that, in course of time, the term 'Hindu' will come to include—as a distinguished Mahomedan friend suggested some years ago in these columns—all natives of India, irrespective of the creed that they profess. This is the sense in which the term is used to-day in America and that is the right etymological sense of the term.

The first and most important subject with which the Hindu Mahasabha should deal is the position of women. That, in our opinion, is the most crucial question and its right solution will almost automatically lead to the solution of other questions. The first reforms for the regeneration of Hindu society are the abolition of the purdah in Northern India and the liberalising of caste in the South. Both in origin and incidence, these two questions have much in common. What in the North is sought to be achieved by the physical restriction of the purdah is sought to be achieved in the South by the impalpable restrictions of caste. We must, therefore, strike at this spirit and introduce the principle of freedom in the constitution of Hindu society. Another reform essential to the uplift of woman's position is the prohibition of polygamy. A Bill like that which was recently introduced by Mr. Advani in the Bombay Legislative Council, permitting the registration of Hindu marriages as monogamous, should be introduced in the Legislative Assembly, and should be made applicable to the whole of India and to all sections of Hindus. The raising of the marriageable age, the removal of the restriction on the remarriage of widows and the reform of the law of women's property, are other essential reforms which deserve the close attention of the Mahasabha. The Mahasabha will, we hope, pass a strong resolution upholding the prohibition of the use of intoxicating liquors and drinks and supporting the movement for the prohibition of their manufacture, import and sale in India. Another important question which the Mahasabha should not omit to consider, is the Brahmin-Non-Brahmin question which is agitating Maharashtra and the Madras Presidency. It is strange that, while there have been several conferences between Hindu and Mahomedan leaders for the purpose of bringing about Hindu-Muslim unity, nobody has yet thought of having a conference of Brahmin and Non-Brahmin leaders with a view to settle the much smaller differences between the two sections of the Hindu community. We suggest that the Mahasabha should take the initiative in the matter and appoint a small committee consisting of Brahmin and Non-Brahmin leaders to call such a conference at the earliest possible date.

We are of opinion that the Mahasabha would do well to eschew political questions. It has before it the great work of reconstruction which will tax its utmost energies. Political questions are comparatively less important and may be left to politicians of whom there are only too many among us. The Mahasabha, likewise, should not take up an attitude of antagonism towards Christianity or Islam. These two religions are proselytising religions from the very first and while Hindus have every right, by introducing reforms in their own religion and social institutions, to remove the causes which lead to coversions to other religions, they have no right to complain if Islam and Christianity following their traditions carry on their propaganda among Hindus. The Hindu Mahasabha, in other words, should concentrate upon the work of eliminating all the factors which impede the free play of social justice in the Hindu community and promote the growth of strengthening ideals among the people. If it succeeds in doing this, it would have done a great work both for the country and for humanity.

Towards Compromise. We are glad that Pandit Motilal Nehru has at last recognised that a conciliatory spirit is a virtue even in the leader of the Swaraj Party. His decision to hold a conference with Messrs. Kelkar, Jayakar and others who advocate responsive co-operation—the phrase which used to stink in the nostrils of the Pandit—will be welcomed by all lovers of unity. The Pandit has come down to Bombay where he is having conversations with Messrs. Jayakar, Kelkar, Aney, Abhyankar and Dr. Moonje—the leading figures in the Maharashtra Swaraj Party. Upto the time of writing, nothing is definitely known about the result of the conversations. Lala Lajpat Rai, who has recently issued a special appeal to both the sections of the Swaraj party to close up the ranks, arrived in Bombay on Friday to preside over the Hindu Mahasabha which is holding its session today, and as Lalaji is not a party politician, his advice will be of much help in arriving at some understanding between the Pandit and the advocates of responsive co-operation. In view of the approaching session of the Congress, where the issue has to be fought out to a finish, it is not too much to hope that both the sections of the Swaraj Party will realise the wisdom of at least observing a truce by putting a stop to the unedifying controversy for a brief interval of three weeks.

THE INDIAN SANDHURST COMMITTEE.

The Skeen Committee which was appointed as a result of the resolution passed in the Legislative Assembly in February last to go into the question of the Indian Sandhurst, has begun its deliberations, and they are of special interest to us, because on its recommendations largely depends the acceleration of the pace of the Indianisation of the Army as well as the opportunities that will be offered to our youths for superior military training. In an able memorandum submitted to the Committee on the questionnaire issued by it, the Deccan Sabha, Poona, discusses all aspects of the problem. In the first place, it points out, the terms of reference to the Committee are not in the form in which the resolution was passed in the Assembly, but in the form in which the Government desired the Assembly to pass it. Whereas the Assembly asked for the appointment of a Committee to consider what practical measures should be adopted for the establishment of a Royal Military College on the lines of Sandhurst in India, the Government of India has returned to the proposition which the Assembly rejected, namely, "whether it is desirable and practicable to establish a Military College in India to train Indians for the commissioned ranks of the Indian Army." Thus, the terms of reference to the Committee leave the question of the establishment of a Royal College in India an open question, while the Assembly took it as a settled fact. As to the question whether it is desirable to establish a Military College in India, there can be no two opinions. As the Deccan Sabha points out, no country should be under the necessity to send its citizens to a foreign country for professional training and, least of all, for military training in its higher grades. Even the Army Secretary, Mr. Burdon, admitted in the Assembly the disadvantages which the Indian cadets sent to Sandhurst for training are put to, such as the removal of the boys to very unfamiliar surroundings at an early age and the heavy expensiveness of the course. But he made much of the disadvantage that would follow from the establishment of a College in India, viz., the possibility of the Army Council declining to recommend Indian students trained in their own institutions for King's Commissions, and their consequent eligibility for Dominion Commissions alone. This contention is, however, unsustainable, for, as the Army Council will retain in the last resort, complete control over both kinds of Commissions, there is no reason why they should refuse King's Commissions to cadets, who, though trained in India, are adjudged to be fit to hold them. Besides obviating many of the disadvantages of the present system, an Indian Sandhurst has many positive advantages in its favour. It would stimulate recruitment in India so that in course of time the much-desired Indianisation of the Army can be given effect to. The students may also be under the care and watch of their parents and can return to their homes during the holidays. Unequal treatment, unfair competition, race prejudices and other possible evils of education in England, to which Indian students at Sandhurst are subject, will then be to a large extent eliminated.

The question of the practicability of establishing such a College in India will largely depend upon the number of Commissions which the Army Council in England is prepared in the immediate future to confer upon Indians. The vacancies now allotted to Indians in the Army are only 10 per annum which is only about five per cent of the normal requirements of the Army. And unless this number can be raised very materially by the authorities concerned, it is altogether profitless to give serious consideration to the question of founding a Cadet College in India. Speaking in the Legislative Assembly on the resolution on Indian Sandhurst, Mr. Burdon made the sweeping statement that, even if all the officers required for India's needs were to receive their training in this country, it would still be uneconomical to set up a Sandhurst here. The facts and figures which the Deccan Sabha has given in reply to this will speak for themselves. Several European countries which are many times smaller than India, do not send their officers for training to foreign countries. The self-governing Dominions which require a smaller contingent than India do not send their cadets to Sandhurst, but prefer to give them training in their own institutions, which they would not do if it was uneconomical. For instance, the Royal Military College, Duntroon, of Australia, has an establishment of 150 cadets, from 30 to 35 staff cadets being admitted annually, and the College of Canada also has the same strength. India, on the other hand, drafts 70 officers annually from Sandhurst. It stands to reason, therefore, that if the Dominions have found it profitable to have a Military College, it is much more so in the case of India. But, as has been said above, it will be profitable to start and run such a College in India, only if an assurance is forthcoming from the Army Council that a larger number of Commissions than are now available will be thrown open to Indians, say, at least 50 a year. The next thing that will have to be taken into consideration with regard to the practicability of a College in India is the cost that the scheme will involve. We do not see how a country that spends nearly half of its income in Army expenditure amounting to nearly 60 crores, will find it difficult to get a few lakhs to put the Sandhurst scheme into execution. Indeed, as Pandit Malaviya once said in the Assembly, no Indian will grudge even hundreds of lakhs of expenditure on such an institution. To our mind, it is not considerations of money or anything else that stand against the scheme, but the unresponsive attitude of the Government of India in the matter.

Another objection that is often urged against the establishment of an Indian Sandhurst, is the deficiency in the present supply of Indian candidates for the King's Commissions, both in regard to number and quality. The present policy itself is largely responsible for bringing about such a state of things. In the first place, the number of vacancies is only 10 and the prospects of being refused selection in many cases would only deter students from attempting a hopeless task. Again, under the present arrangements, only candidates of good birth and high social position, and those belonging to families with military traditions or communities noted for their martial spirit, are considered as fit for Sandhurst. And if the selection is made on this principle, India will find it difficult for a long time to come to supply candidates even for the ten vacancies now allotted to her at Sandhurst, as experience has proved. The remedies for this state of things are not far to seek. The middle classes which are the back bone of society in any country should be made the main recruiting-field for military training. The cost of the course, which is almost prohibitive now, should be sufficiently lightened so as to be within the reach of an average middle-class man and, in some cases, as in England, scholarships will have to be instituted. Finally, selection will have to give place to open competition in which every man, irrespective of his descent and social position, will have the best chance of success. We have no doubt that, given sufficient opportunities, there will be sufficient response from our youths for superior military training. If necessary, public schools on the model of the Military College at Dehra Dun may be started all over the country to afford the youths preparatory military training, but in no case selection should be restricted to such institutions. In this connection the idea of encouraging military training in our schools and colleges by means of the U. T. Corps, has also much to recommend it. These and other things the Skeen Committee will have to consider in recommending for an Indian Sandhurst.

THE GOSPEL HISTORY AND ITS TRANSMISSION.

(By Mr. G. Y. Chitnis, Oxford.)

Dr. F. C. Burkitt's book entitled "The Gospel History and Its Transmission" should be used by all students of the Gospel. It is expressly intended for the purpose of popularising a critical view of the life and teaching of Jesus. It does not demand from its readers a knowledge of Greek or Hebrew nor even a very close acquaintance with the Jewish history, as the most important critical problems are quite independent of these. "An intelligent use of the English Bible", says Dr. Burkitt, "brings us face to face with the most important Gospel problems and even suggests their solution. It is one of the great attractions of the Biblical study that the chief document is in everybody's hands in an available form, so that all the main results and many of the processes of learned critical study can be at once made plain to those who will read the English Bible carefully for themselves".

Dr. Burkitt regards the Gospel of Mark as the only authority for the outward life of Jesus. It has been made use of by Mathew and Luke and the latter follow the order of events as adopted by Mark. The other two Evangelists give us a number of precepts and parables of Jesus which we do not find in Mark, but so far as the external events of his life are concerned, they practically add nothing (nothing that we can accept as historical) to what we already know from Mark. Mark gives us the following outline of the life of Jesus:

The public ministry of Jesus took rise from the preaching of John the Baptizer. The preaching of John had chiefly attracted the people of Judea but Jesus had gone down from Galilee and had been baptized. At the moment of Baptism he hears a voice from Heaven calling him the beloved son of God, but his public career does not begin until John was cast into prison by Herod Antipas. Then Jesus comes to Galilee announcing the Kingdom of God to be at hand, and exhorting men to repent and believe the message. How long the first period lasted, we have no means of judging, for it is not until Simon and his companions join the New Prophet that the narrative becomes detailed. At first Jesus teaches in the Synagogues, and his commanding personality produces a great effect. But the very success of the announcement of the Gospel brings interruptions to the work which are far more clearly brought out as such in Mark than elsewhere, viz, the intrusion of invalids in season and out of season, seeking for cures and acquiring for Jesus a kind of popularity which he definitely tries to avoid; and the growing opposition of the official Jewish world both religious and secular. The final rupture of Jesus with the religious authorities in Galilee arose out of the healing of man with the withered hand in the Synagogue on the Sabbath. This event according to Mark was the parting of ways. The religious leaders decide to get rid of Jesus by the help of the friends of the Herodian Government; while Jesus, on the other hand, begins to organise his followers into what was destined to develop into the Christian Church. He no longer preaches in the Synagogues save once in his own home, and for the remainder of his ministry, his main efforts are directed towards preparing his disciples for the trials in store for him and them. For this purpose and for present safety, Jesus more and more avoids appearing in public, much of the remaining time being spent out of Galilee, away from the jurisdiction of Herod Antipas, or else in the open country far from the main routes. Shortly before the breach with the Scribes and Pharisees it had been early spring. In the following year Jesus determines to go up to Jerusalem for the Passover, though fully aware that it can lead to no earthly victory. While still in the territory of Antipas, he remains as much concealed as possible, but in the Roman province of Judea he resumes public teaching and enters Jerusalem openly amid his followers. There he arouses further opposition and through the treachery of Judas he was discovered in a garden by the soldiers and carried off almost without resistance. A hasty trial followed and, because of his avowal that he was the Messiah and the son of the ineffable God of Israel, He was crucified before 10 A. M. on the Friday morning; and after his death he w laid in a rock-hewn tomb. On Sunday morning when the women came, they found a young man sitting in the tomb, who announced to them that Jesus had been raised; that he was not there, but was going to meet the disciples in Galilee. At this point the narrative, as we have it, breaks off.

The above outline which is here given, as far as possible, in Dr. Burkitt's own words, lest I be again accused of inaccuracy of stolen statement, plainly brings out the humanity of Jesus. We do not find any conscious attempt made by Mark to modify the life of Jesus in "an eschatological sense" as Dr. Headlam says or even in the light of subsequent doctrines, save for the fact that the life he has portrayed is supposed to be the life of one who was the Jewish Messiah and the son of God. In addition to this, if we except the Miracles and the Resurrection, we have a thoroughly reliable account of the life of Jesus. The miracles are to be excepted not because they are impossible, but because, as Dr. Sanday puts it, "we may be sure that if the miracles of the first century had been wrought before the trained spectators of the nineteenth, the version of them would be quite different." As regards Resurrection, Dr. Burkitt seems to be willing to omit its consideration altogether because it only throws doubt upon the historicity of the other parts of the Gospel. He also says: "This (Christian) Society was already founded by Jesus Christ himself for whatever view the historian may take about the Resurrection, it is impossible to believe that the appearances of the Risen Christ could alone have sufficed to knit together the Christian community." At the conclusion of his admirable book he farther says: "I have purposely abstained in these lectures from discussing most of those parts and features of the Gospel History which usually form the subject-matter of modern controversies. Our belief or disbelief in most of the Articles in the Apostles' creed does not ultimately rest on historical criticism of the Gospels, but upon the general view of the universe, of the order of things, which our training and environment or our inner experience, has led us severally to take. The Birth of our Lord from a virgin and his Resurrection from the dead—to name the most obvious Articles of the creed—are not matters which historical criticism can establish." Will all students of the New Testament take lesson from this warning and cease to make historical criticism the hand-maid of dogmatic theology?

INDIAN SWARAJ—A REPLY.

To The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Of the several leaflets issued by Mr. Bhagat Ram, Jiv Daya Parcharak, Ferozepore Cantt. (Punjab), one is entitled: "How far is India prepared for Swaraj?" It opens with the remark that "Swaraj is a 'blessing' to a country and that the existence of 'deep-rooted social evils, religious prejudice, hatred and jealousy of one community against another, would wreck Home Rule among any people." From this general statement, Mr. Ram comes to the particular question of Indian Swaraj, and, after discussing it under various heads, more or less on the lines indicated above, concludes:

"Before the erection of a magnificent edifice like Swaraj, the ground must be made level by eradicating social evils, and a firm foundation must be laid by regeneration in the heart and mind of the classes as well as of the masses. When we shall have calmly reached that stage, then and only then will it be truly said that we are entitled to demand a better recognition and more privileges. Otherwise the whole endeavour for Swaraj will prove, as in the past, to be a mere waste of men, money and talents." In short, he says: 'First level the ground by establishing harmonious relations between Hindus and Mahomedans and other communities in India, by removing the appalling illiteracy of womankind and by rooting out all social evils and then raise the superstructure of Swaraj thereon." This is the burden of his whole song.

Apart from its tone, it would be wise to consider whether the advice contained in the leaflet can be seriously taken by the country in its present plight. No doubt, we have communal troubles on the increase between Hindus and Muslims in the North and, to a lesser extent, between Brahmins and Non-Brahmins in the South. It is true that much spade-work is yet to be done in the social sphere. It is also true that literacy in the country and especially among women, is not very great Whilst these facts cannot be denied, is it not fair to remember that all these things are due to the lack of a national Government in India? A foreign Government, however good it may be, is no substitute for a national one, and the truth of this can be fully seen from experience by any one who has eyes to see and can reason for himself. In his treatment of the subject, Mr. Bhagat Ram has completely failed to take note of this factor and this is a principal defect vitiating his whole thesis.

I now come to the reasons advanced to cry halt to the movement of Swaraj and I shall deal with them one by one:

1. In the first place, he stresses too much the existence of conflicts between Hindus and Muslims in the North. May I humbly draw his attention, in this connection, to the comments of the Reformer of October 24th on this problem, that, before the Minto-Morley Reforms, religious neutrality was the declared policy of the Government, that a departure was made thereafter, that in the past the Indian doctrine of equal protection for all religions has ensured harmonious inter-communal relations, and that "an Indian national Government, whenever it comes, will instinctively revert to it as its surest security against the curse of communal rivalries."? One is much indebted to the Reformer for the flood-light it has so ably thrown on the communal problem in India and may I ask, in all humility, Mr. Bhagat Ram whether he can ever hope for harmonious inter-communal relations without a national Government instinctively reverting to the doctrine of equal protection for all religions as its policy! So the problem, after all, has a political basis and for its solution, it is needless to say, it is closely bound up with the attainment of Swaraj.

2. The other point that deserves notice is the want of education among woman-folk, which he attributes to the deep-seated prejudice against women in general. Here he is partially correct. Whilst it is desirable that, to make our home the cradle of Indian nationalism by educating them and giving them an equal voice in all public and private life, Hindu parents should take greater care of their education than hitherto, it must, at the same time be borne in mind that without State-aid this much-wished-for object cannot be attained. The rapid strides which the West made in this matter are largely due to the moral and material support of the various Governments to solve the problem of illiteracy. What the provincial Governments and Christian Missions have so far done to spread education, cannot touch the fringe of the problem. 'All that glitters is not gold,' so goes the proverb. Mr. Ram speaks in glowing terms of the social and educational activities of Missionaries in India. Is it too much to say that they are interested in conversions also? (Vide Reformer of May 30th, 1925 p 610. There were nine baptisms even in the Matunga Leper Asylum.)

And lastly there are social evils of which we have an ample measure. For instance, we have problems like Early Marriage and Widow Remarriage to solve with the aid of the Legislature. Mr. Bhagat Ram observes in his leaflet that there are at least 17,000 baby widows under five years of age and 350,000 under fifteen years old. Their respective figures, as given in the columns of the Reformer of October 24th, from the Patriot of Lucknow, are 2,024 and 3,32,517, according to the Census Report for 1921. "The dreadful customs of Sati and female infanticide", he says, "could never have been stopped by the so-called merciful Hindu Society; only the benign Legislature stopped the cruelty of these customs." Cannot Mr. Bhagat Ram, to be fair, say one word in praise of the devoted labours of Raja Ram Mohan Roy to put down Sati and infanticide? Is it even right to charge the whole Hindu Society when, as a matter of fact, it had been instrumental, to a lesser extent, of course, to the passing of legislative enactments to stop those customs? Coming to recent events, the Age of Consent Bill may not have received the unanimous support of the Swarajists in the Assembly, but it cannot be taken as indicative of Indian unfitness for Swaraj. The Act as finally emerged from the Assembly raises the Age of Consent from 12 to 14 in the case of girls not lawfully wedded and from 12 to 13 in the case of married girls. What has Mr. Ram to say to this? If the raising of the Age of Consent can alone prove India's fitness for Swaraj, then here is ample proof of the same.

His remarks about municipal administration and about the ever-changing programme of Congressmen are of the humdrum type. It is a pity that he has not taken due cognisance of the rising spirit of fairness and just dealing in the upper strata of Hindu Society towards the Depressed Classes. Among the various contributory causes tending towards this end, Gandhism holds the prominent place. The new wave of Democracy that swept over the land after the Great War has revolutionised men's minds and is preparing the ground for higher ideals and common brotherhood to sow and, therefore, there is at present a remarkable change of heart noticeable among high caste Hindus. Is it wise to shut one's eyes on what is happening around us and be a modern Rip Van Winkle staring at the world with mopish ideas?

I am extremely sorry that he makes, in the end, an appeal to Western journalists, who are espousing the cause of Indian Swaraj, not to lend their support to the Congress movement, in the style of a bureaucrat. The dictum that "service unto the least and the weakest too ought to be the pious ambition of all thoughtful persons everywhere" reads well. Is the leaflet seriously aiming at this ideal? By trying to alienate the sympathy of Western journalists from the political movement of the Congress and by setting its face against the same, it is only more bent upon putting an obstacle in the way of Swaraj, the realisation of which alone will take it to its goal, namely, "Service unto the least and the weakest."

The leaflet is almost reactionary in its tone. As one is likely to get prejudiced against the Swaraj movement from its perusal and as such a predicament is hardly to be thought of, I have most humbly taken upon myself the task of answering some of the charges contained therein, in a fair and just manner, as far as possible. If I have in any way overstepped the limits of decency and fairness in my reply, I hope to be pardoned; for, to speak the truth, I am not even a penny-a-liner and as such I do not know the art of writing.

TOWARDS A CRITICAL UNDERSTANDING OF JESUS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

When I said that Dr. Schweitzer has gone to Africa as a philanthropist and not as a missionary, it was clear that I used the latter term in a purely technical sense and I am glad that Mr. Andrews himself supports my view. The passages quoted by Hasler of the Baptist Mission in his letter of the 11th September, did not escape my notice when I questioned the accuracy, as Mr. Hasler puts it, of Mr. Andrews' statement; those two passages have puzzled me a great deal as they have misled many. But I would suggest that in order to understand Dr. Schweitzer's attitude towards the gospel of Jesus, it is necessary to reflect a little upon the historical picture of Jesus that he has presented to us and then ask ourselves the question whether that picture is likely to inspire any one with a missionary zeal. It is possible, as Mr. Andrews suggests, that he has receded from the extreme position taken up in the "Quest," in which case the Doctor owes it to himself and others that he should make that point absolutely clear; but the peculiarity of Dr. Schweitzer's position is this that it admits of no compromise. Either the eschatological element in the gospels is historical or it is not. Dr. Schweitzer has accepted its historicity and any change in his original position would mean the abandonment of eschatology as the historical foundation of the gospel-story. I wonder if the Doctor is willing to do that. As he himself has remarked, the eschatology of the gospel will either destroy, or be destroyed by the modern historical theology.

Mr. Andrews seems to have thoroughly grasped the main critical problem underlying the present discussion. The problem is this: was Jesus the fanatical enthusifist who was expecting a catastrophic appearance of the Kingdom of God, and whose life and teaching were solely dominated by that expectation as Dr. Schweitzer would have us believe or, to quote Mr. Andrews, "does He represent a revolt from these fanatical Hebrew ideas prevalent in His time in the direction of a Gospel of good-will and peace to all mankind"? I believe it is possible to prove that Jesus did not share the Apocalyptic ideas which prevailed in his time, but of this later.

MASS EDUCATION AND GOVERNMENT.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In these days of "progress," efforts are made to make primary education compulsory; but the efforts, serious as they may appear to be, result practically in nothing owing to the reactionary attitude of the Government who trot out the excuse of "no funds." Millions of pounds can be drained away from India so as to fill the pockets of alien capitalists, The already overpaid but underworked Services may still be overpaid excessively for the services in the cause of the Indian masses! The Finance Member may, with a stroke of his pen, write off some crores of Rupees advanced to a foreign nation as a loan! But there will be 'no funds' for the education of the masses in a country where more than ninety per cent. of the population are illiterate, in spite of 150 years of benevolent British rule.

In this connection, it can be noted that, what prevails in Iddia is not always the case with other countries, however backward in other respects they may be. Taking Denmark for instance, Rev. J. Bittman of the Danish Mission, speaking at a meeting held in Madras, on 'Mass education' contrasted Denmark with India. He said that Elementary Education was free and compulsory between the ages of 7 and 14 throughout Denmark. Besides the common schools for boys and girls they had the Peoples' High Schools and Half-time Schools for adults. Fines were imposed on people who did not send their children to school. Even Secondary and University Education were free. Another noteworthy fact was that, unlike India, according to Rev. Bittman, there was no difference in the salary of the civil servant and a teacher. In India, while the teacher was paid less, the civil servant was paid more, and consequently there was no progress in education. More was spent on education in Denmark. But in India? The military expenditure runs to a high figure and consumes most of the taxation of the already overtaxed and financially resourceless population. In the words of the Rev. Bittman, "money was there if those in authority could agree." There is also a story in Aesops' Fables illustrating the proverb: "If there is a will there is a way." Those in authority never agree where the welfare of the people of India is concerned and consequently there is no money. There is also no will and conseqnently no way.

ORGANISE.

Lala Lajpat Rai writes in his weekly, the People, Lahore:—

I would suggest that every province should enlist a number of whole-time workers who will pledge themselves to serve the nation for a period of ten years on a fixed subsistence allowance. From the economic point of view, they may roughly be divided into two classes according to their needs. Every one of them should receive a probationary training for one year, before he or she is deputed to work in any definite area. There should be a further division into urban workers and rural workers. The work should be mainly of the nature of social service including the organisation of labour and professional classes. The object should be to win their regard and affection by useful service, and to instil into them self-respect and self-confidence, and thus to save them from exploitation. These workers should co-operate according to their numbers and resources with all existing educational, social and political organisations in a spirit of pure co-ordination and with the object of avoiding overlapping and unnecessary waste of money and energy.

Let me illustrate what I mean, by taking a city organisation as my model. Suppose we have a dozen whole-time workers for the city of Lahore. We may count upon the support and co-operation of about 100 part-time workers. The city may be divided into four parts with a bureau in charge of at least one whole-time worker in every part. The bureaux will be information bureaux as well as service bureaux. They will register all complaints made by citizens of that locality and all requests for help. They will keep registers of children of school-going age not attending schools, of the unemployed, of needy widows and orphans in their area, and will try to give or procure as much assistance as may be possible. In co-operation with other organizations or independently, as circumstances may require, they will arrange for lectures and propaganda on all civic matters including education, public sanitation, domestic hygiene, medical relief, government of the City, government of the Province, the condition of women, the condition and grievances of the depressed classes and so on. One or two of these dozen workers may be in charge of statistics. We are acquiring the habit of generalising without data or on insufficient data These information bureaux and the statistics collected by the workers will supply the necessary data for correct generalization. This kind of training will bring us knowledge, power and influence which can be beneficially employed for national purposes. It will prepare the people for all kinds of civic action. A budget of say 30,000 rupees a year for the city of Lahore for this kind of service will revolutionise the public life of the city. Such an organization will be a centre of usefulness and power with vast potentialities for the future. It will help in bringing about the co-operation of all public bodies to the exclusion of the spirit of competition which mars their activities now and which creates so much bitterness and ill-feeling There will be room for demagogues too in this organization, but the actual reins of power will be in the hand of workers, and that is as it ought to be. At present the demagogues alone hold the field because the only work done and recognised is speechifying or holding Conferences where speechifying is multiplied to the nth degree.

Work in rural areas is the most difficult, the most delicate and the most risky part of the problem. Th

Prohibition Supplement.

TO

The Indian Social Reformer.

"Abstinence and Purity, Unity and Service."

Vol. II. No. 4 BOMBAY—SATURDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1925. Price One Anna.

EVASIVE TACTICS.

In the November number of the Prohibition Supplement we published the statement of the Hon'ble Mr. A. M. Dehlavi, the Minister of Excise, regarding the Excise policy of the Bombay Government. The Minister said that Government had declared total prohibition as the goal of its excise policy and assured the House that the Government was prepared to stand by it if the House and the country behind it were equally and practically prepared to stand by Government. This would mean that the Government had some definite proposals to lay before the House to bring about total prohibition. But the Minister's speech contained nothing of the kind. The Minister put forward the usual plea of "financial collapse" and quoted figures in support of the same. There is no constructive suggestion in the Minister's speech, and he has not explained how he expects the House and the country to stand by Government. In disallowing Mr. Pradhan's Local Option Bill, His Excellency the Governor of Bombay took his stand, quite contrary to his Government's declaration in the resolution on the Excise Committee's report that "they do not think it necessary to make the increased taxation an integral part of their excise policy," on the statement of the Excise Committee to the effect that "before any steps are taken to introduce any changes into the present excise system, the necessary legislation should be passed which may enable government to impose the taxation requisite to avoid financial difficulties." As we stated in our article in the October issue of the Supplement, there is absolutely no doubt that His Excellency's decision was greatly influenced by the frank statement of Sir Basil Blackett, the Finance Member of the Government of India, in the course of the debate on the Prohibition resolution in the Legislative Assembly, that it was quite impossible for him to accept anything in the nature of a commitment by the Government of India to a statement that the ultimate goal of excise policy should be prohibition. The difference between Sir Basil's statement in the Assembly and the Honourable Mr. Dehlavi's statement in the Bombay Legislative Council is that, while the former was quite frank in his opposition to prohibition, the latter wanted to maintain that total prohibition was the goal of the Bombay Government's excise policy and that it would be achieved "if the House and the country behind it was equally and practically prepared to stand by Government", in spite of clear indications of its having gone back on its declared policy.

Under the circumstances, we are unable to share the jubilations of those who think that the acceptance by the Bombay Government of Mr. Pradhan's resolution recommending the appointment of a small committee consisting of elected members of the Council, officials and financial experts, to consider and report on the financial measures that should be introduced in order to give full effect to the policy of prohibition of the traffic in alcoholic drinks and drugs, has gone a great way in mitigating the disappointment caused by the Bombay Governor's disallowance of Mr. Pradhan's Local Option Bill. The personnel of the Committee and the terms of reference are yet to be known. But, in the absence of the complete control of the purse, we wonder how the Legislative Council should be made responsible to find money to meet the deficit contingent on the introduction of prohibition. In suggesting the financial measures required, will the proposed committee be empowered to examine the whole financial position including that of the "reserved" half of the Government? The pathetic helplessness of ministers in working out any scheme of reform in the nation-building departments such as education, sanitation, medical relief, etc. which are under their charge, in the absence of any control over the purse, has been the greatest handicap of ministers under the discredited diarchy, and we are unable to place much faith in the proposed committee being able to find out measures to meet the financial deficit consequent on the advance the Government might make towards prohibition.

The question has come to Government versus people. The Legislative Assembly, in carrying the prohibition resolution by an overwhelming majority—not a single Indian non-official voted against prohibition—has but recorded the nation's verdict, and it is for the non-official Indians to see that they are determined to have it. The Government have made no secret of their opposition, and they may not care a straw for the Assembly's resolution. The time has come for the temperance workers to consider the steps required to be taken to combat the drink evil even without the help of legislative machinery, and the All-India Prohibition League which meets in Delhi at the end of January affords the opportunity to formulate the future plan of work. We earnestly trust that all those, irrespective of race, community or party, interested in the cause of temperance, will whole-heartedly contribute their mite towards the success of the Delhi Convention of the Prohibition League.

THE CASE FOR LOCAL OPTION.

Mrs. Philip Snowden writes in the Daily News:

First, let me say what we mean by Local Option. Local Option means giving to the adult population of a locality the power to decide by a ballot vote whether premises for the retail sale of intoxicating liquor shall be licensed by the authorities. Local Option would apply not only to applications for new licenses, but to the renewal of existing licenses. That is its broad principle. Details such as the size of the polling area and whether the option should include the reduction of the number of existing licenses, are matters for arrangement.

It is with the principle of Local Option I am concerned in this article. The system is opposed on two main grounds. First, that it is an unwarrantable interference with individual liberty; and secondly, that it would be ineffective in operation. I am not concerned to stress the obvious contradiction in these two objections.

The first of these criticisms is weighty and deserves to be seriously considered. When a proposal is made to restrict individual freedom or to interfere with an established custom, it must be justified. But Local Option would introduce no new principle either into the general law or into the licensing laws. The licensing Justices have the unfettered right to refuse to grant new licenses. They have the right, conditional on compensation being given, to cancel existing licenses which they consider to be redundant.

Democratic Control.

Local Option would simply transfer from the Licensing Justices to the popular vote the decision as to new licenses and the continuation of existing licenses. In other words, the question of whether public-houses should exist in a locality would be decided by the vote of the people intimately concerned, instead of being at the discretion of a non-elected and irresponsible body of Justices. Surely, no objection to this change of procedure can be raised on democratic grounds. The present method of licensing control admits the principle of restricting and regulating the scale of drink in the public interest. But, it does this by undemocratic machinery.

Our Licensing Laws have been passed, because experience has proved that the liquor trade is one which, in the public interest, cannot be left uncontrolled. Therefore, the main question to be asked about Local Option is whether it would more truly give expression to the democratic wishes than the existing method. If a dozen Licensing Justices can decide the question of licenses, surely, no logical objection can be taken to putting this power in the hands of the people in whose interests the Magistrates are supposed to act. The legislative control of a trade, in order to curb its abuses, is admittedly the right and duty of the community. All political parties admit this right and duty, and for a century Parliament has been mainly concerned in passing legislation to restrict and regulate and control and suppress trade abuses and evils.

The True Liberty.

Every law which is passed interferes to some extent with individual freedom, or with some established custom. Such legislation becomes necessary in the interests of the individual himself, or for the well-being of the community generally. Factory Laws, Public Health Legislation, Trades Boards, the Regulation of the Hours of Labour, and Compulsory Education are a few of such interferences with individual freedom. The purpose of all such restriction of individual license is to ensure a larger liberty for the individual and the community. To establish the case for the popular control of the liquor traffic, we have only to prove that the trade is one which, in the interest of the community, needs to be controlled. Our Licensing Laws are an admission of the need of control.

But the existing evils of the Drink Traffic prove that the present control is not sufficient. The Drink Traffic is the main cause of crime. It has disastrous effects on physical health. It aggravates poverty, lessens industrial efficiency, and causes enormous economic waste. These facts establish the case for the public right to eliminate a traffic which causes so much individual and social misery and loss. Drunkenness is a legal crime, and if the community has the right to punish drunkards, it surely has the right to refuse to license places for the making of drunkards.

The suppression of public houses by the popular vote could not operate, unless the majority of the adult population were convinced that such suppression were necessary for the well-being of the locality. But that, it is maintained by the opponents of Local Option, would be a tyrannical interference with the rights of the minority. A minority has no right to insist upon its anti-social freedom to make itself a nuisance to the majority.

The System in Action.

If public-houses exist in a locality against the wishes of the majority, the interference with individual liberty is on the part of the minority. That is a violation of every principle of democracy, and is a violation of the laws and principles on which a healthy community can alone exist.

We may meet the other objection to Local Option—that it would be ineffective in operation—by saying that experience alone can settle that question. It certainly was not ineffective in America before the adoption of State Prohibition. I have seen Local Option in operation in that country, and in some of our Dominions, with incalculable benefits.

Supporters of Local Option for England and Wales do not expect that it would give immediate and widespread results. Its first great benefit would be its educative value. It would bring home in a direct way to the electors their responsibility for the drink evil.

Local Option is no device of "tee-total fanatics" to impose their will upon an unwilling community. On the contrary, it is sound democratic proposal for trusting the people. Local Prohibition would not be successful unless it were supported by a substantial and convinced majority of the locality. But where that majority does exist, it is their right to say that they will not be offended by the existence in their midst of places licensed for the demoralisation of men and women.

MR. LLOYD GEORGE ON PROHIBITION IN AMERICA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer,

Sir,

I enclose herewith a clipping from today's paper Kalamazoo Gazette which may be of interest to Indian

realpatidar.com

readers of your Prohibition Supplement. Having spent some time in India I know with what reluctance the English papers publish such material. This is a city of some 60,000 people with many factories and working people, and though we have lived here for three months and gone out among the working classes nearly every day and night, we have not seen a single intoxicated man, nor heard of any place in the city where any sort of intoxicant could be secured. And there are hundreds of similar cities throughout the West.

1011, S. Rose Street,
Kalamazoo, Mich., U. S. A. Yours etc,
27th October 1925. HUGH H. LINN.

London: October 20.—(AP)—David Lloyd George, former prime minister, had some favourable words to say Monday night on the prohibition law in the United States. He spoke at the City temple on the responsibilities of free churchmen.

Alluding to the church's responsibilities on the drink question, he said:

"Do not let us try to cure eternal problems with an external plaster of words. Prohibition is an experiment we ought to investigate."

Despite unemployment and an adverse trade balance, he asserted that England spent last year £ 316,000 000 on alcoholic liquors. Then referring to the United States he continued:

"It is no use indulging in slap-dash condemnation of America. Not only have Americans carried prohibition, but no political party in America now dare propose abolition of prohibition. As politicians the Americans beat us at every turn."

It had been suggested, said Lloyd George, that prohibition in America was the craze of cranks, but when he went to America he said he found this entirely untrue; that he never met a man who would vote for the re-establishment of the saloon. So far as public opinion in America was concerned, the beer house, he said, was a thing of the past.

Detailing various advantages which he attributed to America's becoming dry, Lloyd George repeated:

"It is an experiment we ought to investigate. Do not condemn it haphazardly. One hundred and ten millions of people do not continue to make fools of themselves for long. They are the most prosperous people under the sun, not because they have the gold, but because they have not the drink."

The former premier pointed to Canada where, he remarked, it was suggested that prohibition had been less successful and concluded by recalling Lincoln's looking forward to the time when there would be no slavery and no drink.

"He got rid of slavery," exclaimed Lloyd George," and 60 years later the people were on the high road to accomplish the second of his ideals."

ASSAM CONGRESS OPIUM ENQUIRY REPORT.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Hindu, Madras, writes to that paper under date Nov. 7:—

The Assam Congress Opium Enquiry Report is an illuminating document and a marvellous production ever compiled by an influential unofficial committee in Assam. This is for the first time that the Assam Provincial Congress Committee has made a searching enquiry into opium evil. The initiative of such an enquiry came from Mr. Andrews. The work was taken up by the most eminent men of Assam, Mr. Kuladhar Chaliha, M. L. C., (President of the Enquiry Committee), Mr. T. R. Phookun, M. L. A., Mr. N. C. Bardoloi and a few young enthusiasts. The report is an appeal to humanity to redress the opium evil which is eating into the vitals of Assamese populace.

The committee in the course of four months, traversed an area of about 1,250 miles and examined 345 witnesses. In their opinion the evil has become most deep-rooted among the agricultural village population and the virile hill-tribes who have settled in the plains. Opium has made the people insipid and inefficient. It has vastly affected the immigrants to Assam tea gardens. The report has righly stated: "We have found that immigrant population in these areas, so long as it does not take to opium, remains healthier and more industrious than the indigenous population. At the same time in certain areas where immigrants have lived for a long time in contact with opium addicts they also have contracted the opium habit with the same harmful effects."

The report says that evils connected with opium were thoroughly well-known in Government circles, but in dealing with these evils the Government were determined not to surrender one of the most lucrative sources of revenue. Reader's surprise reaches its climax when he beholds that in Assam Valley alone, inhabited by about 23 lakhs of people, the consumption of opium was 1,748 mds. in 1919-20, although the price of opium increased from Rs. 5 per seer to Rs 65 in 1924 The revenue which Government derived from opium was Rs. 44,12,303 in 1920-21, probably the highest figure on record. In his excellent preface to the report Mr. Andrews very appropriately remarks that full medical requirements of 10,000 of the world's population according to the League of Nations are six seers or 12 pounds avoirdupois. But in Assam, the greatest opium consuming country in the world, opium is sold nearly 800 mds. per ten thousand, not to speak of seers. If the habit is allowed to continue the whole Assamese populace will be extinct during the course of another hundred years.

Mr. Gandhi's Assam visit and the non-co-operation movement brought a sharp decline in opium consumption. The result of their (non-co-operators') strenuous work was that in 1921-22 the consumption of opium dropped from 1614 maunds to 1,013 maunds within twelve months. The Criminal Law Ammendment Act was promulgated in Assam on the 21st November 1921 which practically made picketing illegal. As many as 1,100 workers out of the comparatively small Assamese population were shut up in the different prisons. Amongst these were lawyers, tea planters, graduates, college students and young patriotic men from the villages. The last mentioned were the chief sufferers in those Government acts of repression The prominent workers were shut up for being members of unlawful assemblies. In spite of this, enthusiasm continued among the Assamese people and there was a continuous decline in the consumption of opium and ganja.

Immediate prohibition of opium is the slogan of the majority of Assam people, but notwithstanding this, the recommendations of the committee are very modest. It is a great credit to the committee that, though distinctly a Swarajist committee, they have based their recommendations in order to preserve absolute unanimity of opium prevalent in the country. So they recommend that prohibition should be effected within the course of 5 years. Their recommendations are as follows:—

(1) The sale of opium and its derivatives should be ultimately limited to the medical and scientific needs of Assam.

(2) Provision should be made for confirmed addicts above the age of forty enabling them to procure a rationed amount of opium, their names being registered for that purpose.

(3) All opium addicts who are under forty years of age should be dealt with as medical patients. Whenever opium is needed by them it should be given only under the order of a fully qualified doctor, the medical permission to obtain it being subject to quarterly renewals.

(4) These changes should be carried out within the next five years At the end of five years opium should be placed on the list of poisons under the Dangerous Drugs Act and treated as such for all inhabitants of Assam.

It is gratifying to know that a Bill on similar lines will be moved in the Assam Council by Rev. Nicholas Roy, an independent. The committee are not satisfied with mere legislation. In the meantime they have appealed to all those who desire the welfare of Assam to organize themselves into anti-opium societies and to advocate opium prohibition amongst the people in general. They have asked Mahatma Gandhi once more to come to Assam and put himself at the head of the anti-opium campaign to be carried on by entirely peaceful means.

THE COCAINE TRAFFIC IN CALCUTTA.

In our August issue of the Prohibition Supplement, we quoted from the Statesman that there is in Calcutta at the present moment a highly organised cocaine traffic with strong financial resources and that the facilities at present available for dealing with it are inadequate. The following extract from the Mussalman of Calcutta on the subject will be of much interest:

One Narendranath Bose who was recently sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment by Mr. E. H. Keays, Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, is reported to have made a statement before the Magistrate to the effect that while he was arrested, a man named Keramuddin, who had supplied him with the drug and who had been selling cocaine for years had gone free. The police, the accused alleged, searched only one room of Keramuddin's house and not the whole house, although the accused requested them to do so. Keramuddin is now said to have disappeared.

Referring to this statement the Magistrate remarked: "Keramuddin has often been mentioned in my court as a cocaine dealer, and I would have preferred to see him in the dock to the accused."

The readers of The Mussalman are aware that Mr. Keays had made similar remarks in at least two other cases. On the basis of those remarks as well as on authentic information received by us (and published in these columns) we have published a series of articles dwelling on the huge illicit traffic in cocaine that was going on in Calcutta with the connivance, if not with the support, of a section of the Calcutta Police—articles which for a time caused considerable flutter in some quarters—but, we are afraid, neither our remarks, nor the disclosures made in these columns, nor the deterrent punishments which some of the Magistrates have inflicted on those prosecuted for the offence and found guilty thereof, have at all been able to put an end to the drug traffic. Are we to understand that those responsible for it cannot be brought to book and that the Government of Bengal is absolutely powerless in the matter? British representatives at the League of Nations are often found to be waxing eloquent over the opium or cocaine evil in China, Japan or elsewhere, but they forget altogether what has been going on in India, especially in the heart of the premier city of Calcutta, under benign British rule. Should not those who come forward to find fault with others, at first set their own house in order?

All-India Prohibition Convention: The All-India Prohibition Convention will be held in Delhi from January 29 to 31, 1926. The Arrangements Committee has secured speakers of national and international fame. The Convention's main object is to constitute a permanent Prohibition League of India. There will be a Welcome Meeting to all delegates—and specially invited visitors. Diwan Bahadur Ramachandra Rao, M.L.A., President of the Convention, will deliver his presidential address at the first meeting. There will be a special Purdah Meeting for women. Recitations of Persian Poems, specially composed, will be given. Singing of temperance songs and instrumental music will be provided. At various public meetings in halls, theatres and parks, Convention speakers will deal with the live problems of Prohibition in India. Every Temperance organization in India including Burma and Ceylon can send one or more delegates. Delegates must meet their own travelling expenses and make their own arrangements for hospitality. The Local Reception Committee may be able to advise delegates as to hospitality if approached soon through the Convener of the Arrangements Committee, Prohibition League of India, 59, King's Road, Howrah, Bengal. Complimentary tickets for non-delegates will be available for a few visitors.

A Temperance Worker's Testimony of the results of Prohibition: Mrs. Mary J. Campbell, the well-known temperance worker, who is now in America, writes to us in the course of a letter from Waterloo, Iowa, U.S.A:—The battle is not over in America by any means but victory will come. The forces of evil are overstepping themselves. The liquor element is becoming so flagrantly wicked and repulsive that the indifferent ones are awakening and beginning to see the necessity for joining the forces that stand for righteousness. I hear much that is to our discredit, but I do not see it. A wonderful change has come over America since the prohibition law was introduced. Many school children do not know what the word 'saloon' means and have never seen a drunken man. The ordinary working man gets $8·00 (about Rs. 22 daily and he does not spend it on drink. He has a nice home, well-clad, well-fed children and a motor car. My heart is back in India all the time It is my home now and my prayers are for the welfare of the people of that ancient land. May God bless you in your labour of love!

Punjab Congress Opium Enquiry Committee: In pursuance of the direction of the All India Congress Committee, asking the Provincial Congress Committees to hold opinion enquiries regarding the opium consumption where it is enormously higher than the Index figure of six seers per ten thousands of population as fixed by the League of Nations, the Working Committee of the P. P. Congress Committee has appointed a "Punjab Congress Opium Enquiry Committee," to hold an enquiry in the Central Punjab Districts where consumption in 1923-24, according to official reports, has been from about 12 seers to about 61 seers per ten thousands of population. The following is the personnel of the Enquiry Committee:—Mehta Anand Kishore, Swaraj Sewak alias Paira Khan, Syed Habib, Sardar Sardul Singh, Dr. Pars Ram, Pandit Haridatta Sharma of the Servants of India Society and Mr. B. L. Rallia Ram, General Secretary, Y. M. C. A., Lahore. The Committee is empowered to co-opt two influential gentlemen of the district in which enquiry proceeds.

Manchester Temperance Federation on Prohibition in India: At a meeting of the National Temperance Federation held in Manchester on October 20th the following resolution on Prohibition in India was unanimously passed: "The National Temperance Federation notes with satisfaction recent public manifestations in India in favour of the suppression of the liquor traffic particularly the resolution passed by the Indian Legislative Assembly to the effect that the ultimate policy of the Government should be the prohibition of the production, manufacture, sale and import of intoxicating liquors. The Federation also welcomes the declaration of the Bombay Government that the extinction of the drink and drug traffic is the goal of their Excise policy; gives its hearty support to the Prohibition Bill introduced in the Bombay Legislative Council this year by Mr. R. G. Pradhan, M.L.C., and urges the Government of India and the Local Governments to provide facilities for the passage of similar legislation applicable to all parts of the country."

Sale of liquor in Madras Park Fair: We are glad that in giving permission to the South Indian Athletic Association to hold the usual annual carnival of sports fair at Exhibition at the Park, the Madras Corporation has made it distinctly clear that no liquor of any kind be sold to the public within the premises and that no gambling or festune pastime involving lucky dips and lottery, etc., would be made one of the features of the Fair.

people there are less educated, less organised and less courageous. The Police and Revenue officials reign supreme and from all the signs before us, we can safely conclude that the Government and those playing the game of the Government are determined to keep the "agitator" out of the rural areas. How to work in villages without coming into conflict with the authorities is the thorniest of all the questions we have to solve. Wild talk of Civil Disobedience does not help us in solving it satisfactorily. The problem is to find out workers who will make the least possible noise, create the least possible antagonism, and will yet substantially educate and organise public opinion in the rural areas. The members of the Legislative Councils and the Assembly have so far signally failed to do their duty by their constituents. Nor do they seem even alive to a sense of their obligation in this respect. If the Legislatures are to become real living bodies expressing the public opinion of the country, it is necessary that the Legislatures should be in close touch with their masters, the electors. But councils or no councils, the problem before us is how to inaugurate and carry on national work in the villages. The Government and the landlord are both interested in keeping the ryot down and ignorant, and as long as he is ignorant and inert, no appreciable progress in political and economic condition beyond the stage that has been reached is possible. Yet our leaders do not like to devote a day or even a few hours to the consideration and discussion of the question! The seniors amongst them are busy with the problems of party. The juniors can spare no time from "bridge" and "good time". How are we then going to be free? If my countrymen imagine that freedom will come to them from the roof, they are mistaken. Freedom, lasting freedom, real freedom, freedom for the many as distinguished from that for the few, will only come through doors and windows opened in the walls. May I venture to suggest, in all humility, that without neglecting high politics, it is still possible for us to devote some of our 'precious' time to the consideration and discussion of this problem. The rulers have set up ghosts of Bolshevism, Communism, Anarchism, mostly imaginary, in order to scare us away from substantial useful activities. Young men enamoured of catchwords and high-sounding theories, are sometimes caught in the net, by which they not only ruin their own lives but make the work of others impossible. How are we to utilise the brains and the energies of these young and often sincere enthusiasts for real constructive work? We can do so only by education and by organisation. Let us then put our hands to that work if we are earnest and sincere.

SOCIAL DEMOCRACY AND POLITICAL FREEDOM.

In the course of an article under the above heading, Mr. Bepin Chandra Pal writes in the Englishman, Calcutta:—

Few Indian politicians seem to have as yet fully realised the close and organic relation existing between social and political institutions in any country. We are eager to secure full national sovereignty or Swaraj. We even profess to mean by this Swaraj, government of the people by the people and for the people as Pandit Motilal defined it, or government by the masses as Mr. C. R. Das declared it means. But how few indeed of their followers clearly realise that this Swaraj, or government of the people by the peple and for the people, can never be attained by us until there has been a more or less radical reconstruction of our social and domestic life?

Our social reactionaries not only lack that lofty idealism which has been the dominant note in the modern freedom movement all the world over, but they have not even an intelligent appreciation of the situation about them. The age of consent must be raised not only at the call of the higher social ideal, but even for the very preservation of the integrity of the Hindu Society, particularly in this Province.

[ After referring to the attempts at kidnapping Hindu women and to the defects in the social system on account of the existing caste-laws which prevent such unfortunate women from being taken back to Hindu society, Mr. Pal proceeds:— ]

The only immediately effective remedy that may be conceived in these circumstances is to raise the age of consent from the present limit of 12 and 13, to 16 and 18; and also to make it criminal for members of one denomination to forcibly take away women of another denomination and convert them or marry them without the full and free consent of their guardians or relations. Dr. Gour's Bill could offer some protection to these Hindu girls if the age of consent had been raised to 18 in the case of unmarried. But this was violently opposed by the representatives of so-called orthodoxy in the central legislature. Bengalee Hindus, it is hoped, will realise the harm which they have done to their own social well-being by lending their support to this reactionary opposition.

Mr. Gandhi has been right in insisting upon the removal of so-called untouchability in the Hindu society as an essential condition precedent to the establishment of Swaraj or political self-government. Unfortunately however, he has himself hardly any clear idea on the subject. He calls himself a "Varnashrama" or a believer in the current Hindu-social economy of caste-and-order. He apparently is unaware that though there have been Hindus who observed this caste-and-order law, there have been others, from very ancient times, who openly repudiated it. The Bhakti-vada schools in Bengal and elsewhere, openly repudiated it. There has been no caste-restriction among certain Vaishnava communities of our province, yet they have always been recognised as Hindus.

The same thing has been found in the other parts of Hindustan also. Indeed, this untouchability is organically bound up with this "Varnashrama" or caste-and-order system. Mr. Gandhi cannot remove this untouchability and yet keep this caste-and-order code in full force among his people. It is very much like wanting to eat one's cake and keep it at the same time. It only betrays the hopeless confusion of the Mahatma's social philosophy.

Indeed, we shall never secure real Swaraj or full responsible government, until we have been able to simultaneously strive for the establishment of an honest social democracy in the country. The democratic experiment has not fully succeeded even in Europe and America, because there also, the political franchise has advanced far ahead of this social democracy. To this is due all the conflicts and confusions of present-day European and American politics. Social pariahs and economic slaves have been invested in those countries with supreme political power. And this has led to the present class-war in every Western country. The masses are using their political power to bring down the social ascendancy of the classes; while the labourer has been using the same weapon to fight his powerful employer.

Bolshevism, Communism and all the other revolutionary movements of modern Europe and America have their origin really in this divergence between the social order and the political franchise. If Europe and America had been able to successfully work out the problems of social democracy, 'pari passu' with those of political democracy, the course of their history and evolution would have been much smoother than it is to-day.

In India, the need of solving these social problems simultaneously with political progress, is much greater and more pressing than it ever was in Christendom. Christianity had set up the ideal of a perfect social democracy from its very birth. The gospel of Jesus Christ received a revived meaning and force from the Lutheran protest. The French Illumination carried this gospel still further and opened the vision of a new earth and a new heaven where all men shall be equal and free and shall be bound together by the bonds of a universal brotherhood and Humanity.

In India, we never had this gospel so widely preached after the Buddha. Our social difficulties are, therefore, infinitely greater than those of Europe or America in this struggle for real Swaraj or democratic freedom in our political life and relations. The danger of violent revolution is therefore immensely greater here from the reckless pursuit of a democratic political ideal in more or less opposition to all our social habits and institutions. Rabindranath must have been thinking of all these when he warned us, in his latest pronouncement, against trying to run after political Swaraj before creating the true Swaraj-mind in the people. This Swaraj-mind or character can never be developed without a radical reconstruction of our social system and philosophy.

BUDDHISM AND HINDUISM.

Swami Sharvanand delivered an address on Buddhism to a well-attended meeting in the Prarthana Samaj Hall on Tuesday, the 24th instant, Mr. M. R. Jayakar presiding. The Swami pointed out how, though 'Buddha' has come to be regarded as an incarnation of God among the Hindus, His message and religion has counted as heresy. It was no doubt an irony of fate, but is mostly due to a cloud of ignorance engendered by the half-true commentaries of the commentators partly justified by later accretions. The Buddha was born a Hindu and died a Hindu. He was a great reformer who checked metaphysical tendencies of his age and turned the minds of the people to the practical questions of life. He promulgated the theory of the four noble truths with 'Misery" as the starting point, that form the cornerstone of his teaching. His one quest related to means of redemption and for this purpose he tried to drive deep into human nature. He probed through the elements of Personality and discovered the way to "Nirvana" which means dying down to the root of all evil, dying down to 'glamour, greed, desire.' The Message of Buddhism is thus essentially ethical with purity of life and thought as the first stage and 'Meditations' as the second. It was Buddhism that is responsible for spreading Indian culture all over the world. The prophet of Buddhism is veritably the light of the world. 'Do away with the genesis of all sufferings and level down the social inquities,' is in brief the essence of Buddhism.

Mr M. R. Jayakar, the President, paying his tribute to Buddha and Buddhism, said that the philosophy of Buddhism was more intelligible from the practical point of view and that was why one saw a Buddhist to be much more cheerful than an average Hindu. That 'Divinity is in Humanity' is more successfully translated into action by Buddhism than perhaps by Hinduism The greatest teaching of Buddhism lay in the hope that one can evolve by daily effort or disappointment to the rank of Buddha himself. It was Buddhism that carried Hinduism to a higher level of renunciation.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Bombay Social Service Conference: The first session of the Bombay Social Service Conference will be held on 12th December 1925 at the Malabari Memorial Hall, Gamdevi. The Session commences on Saturday 12th December at 3-30 P.M. (S. T.) under the presidency of Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, C. I. E. On the 1st day there would be subjects Committee meetings after the presidential address. All delegates can take part in the committee meetings. For the convenience of work there will be three committees and every delegate can take part in any one of these. The committees would discuss subjects in the light of the papers that would be sent to the delegates a week before the conference. The "A" Committee will discuss three subjects, viz., (1) Untouchability (2) Prison Reform and (3) Adult Education. The "B" Committee will discuss three subjects, viz., (1) Village Sanitation (2) Unemployment and (3) Housing problem. The "C" Committee will discuss subjects such as "Prostitution and Drink Evil"—subjects on which no papers have been called for. The committee is specially for framing resolutions on subjects that could not be included in the programme owing to the short time at disposal. On Sunday, the 13th December there will be Subjects Committee meetings if the business is not finished on Saturday. The Conference begins at 12 A M. and would continue up to 7 P. M. with an interval of one hour at 2-30 P. M. Institutions and individuals interested in social work are requested to join the Conference and thus help to make it a success.

Lala Lajpat Rai's Appeal for Funds for Depressed Classes Work: In a statement to the press, Lala Lajpat Rai says he is prepared to spend Rs. 10,000 or even more for anti-untouchability work and hopes that Swami Shradhanand who recently paid a visit to Malabar will also reserve a part of the money he receives for untouchability work from the same source from which Lalaji receives his supplies for relief work in Malabar. Lalaji would be pleased to receive subscription for this purpose from all people who feel for this cause and are prepared to help it with money.

New Member of the Bombay Executive Council: His Majesty the King Emperor has been pleased to appoint Mr. J. L. Rieu, C. S. I., I. C. S., to be a Member of the Executive Council of the Governor of Bombay in succession to the Hon Sir Maurice H. Hayward, K. C. S. I., I. C. S.

A Curious Resolution: Mr. M. Singaravelu Chetty has written the following letter to the President, Indian National Congress, Cawnpore: "Dear Madam, Please allow me to move the following resolution in the Congress at Cawnpore; "Whereas the division of Indian peoples in British India into Brahmins, Non-Brahmins, Mahomedans, Hindus, Touchables and Untouchables is neither political, nor economical, and whereas such communal difference is distructive of India's real freedom, this Congress resolves that in entering Legislative Councils and local bodies, hundred per cent of the seats be given to workers, namely fishermen, agriculturists, carpenters, blacksmiths, railwaymen, post and telegraph men, miners, sailors, petty merchants, clerks, and all other manual and brain worker exclusive of lawyers, landlords, capitalists, judges, ministers, and all others, whose annual income exceeds one thousand rupees."

Village Panchayats in Madras Presidency: The Government of Madras have issued an order on the formation of Village Panchayats in the Presidency in the course of which they say that they are instructing the Registrar General of Panchayats to keep in close touch with the Collector of the District concerned in all his activities and to enlist the co-operation and sympathy both in the formation of Panchayats and in their subsequent proceedings. The Government order also states: Government desire that the formation of the panchayats and their working should be on a strictly voluntary basis. They believe the time has come for every village to realise the necessity of certain services and for it to be prepared to subscribe—each villager according to his means—so as to secure under the guidance of the body of their elders the provision of these services. The part of Government is chiefly to frame laws and rules which legalise and control the action of villages in this regard. The part which Government hope that district officers along with the Registrar will play is to arouse the social conscience of villages and guide their steps towards realising in fact the object now dimly perceived, namely the attainment by means of association of individuals, of improved physical conditions and intellectual advancement.

Hindu Yuvati Saranalayan: A correspondent writes to the Hindu, Madras:—Swami Shraddhanandaji visited the Saranalayam on the 6th instant at 11 a.m., accompanied by Mr. S. Doraiswamy Iyer. He was much pleased with the work of the institution and wished it all success. He recorded the following words of sympathy and encouragement: "Yesterday I was taken to the Hindu Yuvati Saranalayam, in its new habitation by the young manager, in the absence of the founder, Mrs. Yamini Purna Tilakamma. Last year in April, I paid my first visit. There were only 6 or 7 inmates and the institution was situated in a small house. The present house is commodious, well-ventilated, and accommodates 15 rescued girls with room for a a dozen more. In the absence of Mrs. Tilakamma and for want of time, I could only give some 10 minutes to the Ashram. In my last visit I appealed to several respectable gentlemen and Hindu leaders to help the institution generously so that Mrs. Tilakamma might not be obliged to go about a-begging leaving the girls in charge of others. The institution is not less important than others which are flourishing in this city for the amelioration of the condition of Hindu Society and unless the class that it gives refuge to, is largely helped, no appreciable progress can be made in blotting out wilful prostitution from among the Hindu community of South India. A Sanyasi's blessings go to Mrs. Tilakamma for the noble work she is doing—Shraddhananda Sanyasi."

Death of Mr. T. K. Chinmayanandam: Death occurred on the morning of Sunday, the 22nd November, at Calcutta, of Mr. T. K. Chinmayanandam of the Indian Audit and Accounts Service. The deceased, who was only 30 years of age at the time of his death, was ailing from tuberculosis for some months, and succumbed despite the best medical aid rendered by Sir Nilratan Sircar and Dr. Bidhan Chandra Roy. Mr. Chinmayanandam was a brilliant student of the Hindu High School, Triplicane, and of the Presidency College, Madras. He was a Research student in Physics of the Madras University in the Indian Association for the Cultivation of Science, Calcutta, and did some really good work under Doctor C. V. Raman, F.R.S., which won him recognition in scientific circles. He entered the Indian Audit and Accounts Service in March 1919 through open competition, and his services were transferred in January, 1920 to the Metereological Department for employment as Director of Observatory at Colaba, Bombay, for two years. When he reverted to the service, he was specially selected for work in connection with Commercial Audit, and was at the time of his death an Assistant Director of Commercial Audit.

NOTES

Medical Relief in Bombay : As President of the public meeting of the citizens of Bombay convened by the Sheriff on Wednesday last, His Excellency Sir Leslie Wilson, who has been taking great personal interest in the question of medical relief in the city, made a stirring appeal to the public to support the scheme, which His Excellency outlined in the course of his speech, whereby it is proposed to increase hospital accommodation in the city by providing 850 additional beds to the Government and Municipal hospitals. It was proposed to elect a General Committee representative of all citizens in the Presidency which in turn is to elect an Executive Committee to which the work of administering the Hospital Fund will be entrusted. His Excellency laid stress on the necessity of vesting as wide powers as possible in the Executive Committee in order to secure the most efficient use of the money subscribed by the public, and pointed out the King Edward's Hospital Fund of London as a model for Bombay. His Excellency also suggested that a particular day in each year called the Hospital Day should be set apart for the collection of funds. The sums already subscribed are an earnest of the keen interest of the public of Bombay in the problem of medical relief. Excluding the 16 lakhs which Mr. N. N. Wadia has given for the Maternity Hospital at Parel which will be very useful to the mill-hands there, His Excellency has already received promises or cheques for Rs. 5,07,603 of which His Excellency's share is Rs. 10,000 and that of Mr. Byramjee Jeejeebhoy Rs. 2 lakhs to be devoted exclusively for a Children's Hospital. On a persual of the list of subscriptions, we are glad to find that not only the big businessmen but also the leading commercial firms in the city have contributed liberally towards the Fund. The success of the meeting and the good beginning made augur well for the future of the scheme which, when matured, will be a boon to the sick and the suffering, and we are sure that the efforts of His Excellency to whom goes the lion's share of the credit for evolving a scheme of the kind, will bear fruit in the near future.

The Hindu Mahasabha : We have given over a considerable part of this issue to the speeches of Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Chairman of the Reception Committee, and of Lala Lajpat Rai, President, of the Hindu Mahasabha held in Bombay. We deeply regret that the proceedings were marred by some intemperate speeches in the course of which sweeping generalisations about what was called "Mahomedan mentality" were made. We cannot too often repeat that the Hindu community cannot gain anything by antagonising other communities and that, if it strenuously exerts itself to remove its crying social evils and to promote a feeling of greater brotherliness between the different classes and provinces, it will not only strengthen itself but would earn the good-will of other communities also. Most of the evils from which the Hindu community is suffering are of its own making and it is in its power to get rid of them. The only way in which it can bring about a change in the mentality of the Mahomedan or other communities is by changing its own mentality.

Bombay Quadrangular Cricket: The annual quadrangular cricket matches in Bombay, lasting for ten days, came to an end on Thursday last with a victory to the Hindus over the Europeans in the finals. The quadrangular matches create a good deal of enthusiasm and draw large crowds, but we cannot help thinking that much of the enthusiasm is due to communal rivalry rather than to pure love of the sport. The teams are constituted on communal lines, Europeans, Parsis, Mahomedans and Hindus. It is high time that this communal system is replaced by one in which the competing team will represent territorial divisions as in England. As it is, the quadrangular week in Bombay is to some extent an occasion for the display of ill-feeling between the various communities and in particular, between Hindus and Parsis.

The Swarajist Pact: As expected, the conversations between Pandit Motilal Nehru and Messrs. Jayakar, Kelkar, Aney, Athyankar, and Dr. Munji, resulted in both the parties agreeing to suspend the unedifying controversy till the Cawnpore Congress. The following is the text of the agreement arrived at:

In view of the approaching session of the Congress at Cawnpore, it is agreed (1) that all public controversy and propaganda on the question of the Swaraj party's programme shall cease on both sides till the Cawnpore Congress has met, (2) that after the Cawnpore Congress and subject to the decision of the party at Cawnpore, there shall be full liberty of expression of views to all members of the party till such time as the party finally decides its programme for the next general elections to legislatures, and (3) that the question of acceptance of office or any other kindred question may be raised at a meeting or meetings of the party that may be held in future for the purpose of deciding the election programme of the party.

As a result of the agreement, Pandit Motilal cancelled his engagement to speak at the Gaiety Theatre in Bombay, thus giving a practical demonstration as to how the parties are expected to observe the terms of the agreement. There will be no political speeches by the leaders of the Swaraj party for two weeks, and other means must be found to canvass opinion in favour of the respective parties to obtain the requisite majority at the open Congress.

Success of Borstal Schools : The report of the Inspector General of Prisons, Madras, for the last year, on the after-care of the adolescents discharged from the Borstal School, Tanjore, bears eloquent testimony to the wonderful transformation which the Borstal system has effected in them. Besides educating the adolescents on the duties of citizenship, the Borstal school provides them, on entering the school, with facilities for a particular trade or vocation by means of theoretical and practical instruction so as to enable them to earn their livelihood when they revert to their civic life. The adolescents are generally given training in such subjects as carpentry, weaving, tailoring, masonry, agriculture etc, all calculated to stand them in good stead in after-life. In the Tanjore school, out of one hundred and forty-eight exinmates, one hundred and seven are reported by District Magistrates to be pursuing occupations in which they received training in the institution. We need hardly say that the system deserves to be extended on a large scale throughout the country. In this connection, we welcome the Madras Borstal Bill, now before the Select Committee, which seeks to extend to the adolescent offenders between the ages of 15 and 21 the provisions of the Reformatory Schools Act with necessary changes.

A Blow to Local Self-Government: It is understood that the Madras Government is contemplating taking powers to dismiss the Chairman of a Municipality or the President of a Local Board, whether elected or nominated, if it appears to Government that his "continuance in office is, in the opinion of the Government, dangerous to the public peace or order or likely to bring the Municipal administration into contempt." The Advisory Committee suggested to the Government that a Chairman or President might be removed only if three-fourths of a local body ask the Government at a special meeting for the removal. Government, however, does not seem to be satisfied with this restricted control and evidently it is determind to carry its wishes. If Government assumes any such powers, local self-government will only be a sham, for the essence of it, namely, that local bodies should not be interfered with as far as possible in their own sphere, will then be gone. Nor is this all. We all know how such elastic expressions as "dangerous to the public peace or order" and "bringing the administration into contempt" will be interpreted by the custodians of law and order. Thus, even the slightest disobedience on the part of a Chairman may be construed as contempt. Government has already strengthened its control over the Chief Executive Officers of the Local Bodies, the health officer and the engineer, for instance, and the proposed Government control over the President also will only strike the deadliest blow on local self-government. No wonder it is apprehended in certain quarters that it is a blow aimed at the Swarajists who are capturing the local bodies in large numbers.

The Irish Settlement : The wisdom of the Baldwin Government has triumphed in settling satisfactorily the Irish boundary question which almost threatened to break down. The Anglo-Irish Treaty of 1921 appointed a Boundary Commission consisting of representatives from Great Britain, Ulster and the Free State to fix the respective boundaries of Ulster and the Free State, but the Free State representative resigned, evidently in protest against the unfavourable conclusions arrived at with regard to the Free State. Things came to a crisis, but Mr. Baldwin, realising the past Irish history, conceded the Free state demands. The settlement now arrived at revokes the powers granted to the Boundary Commission and permanently fixes the boundary where it was temporarily fixed by the Anglo-Irish Treaty. The Free State Government is released from the obligation of bearing a share of the burden of the public debt and war pensions while, in return, it undertakes to pay reparations for malicious damage done to property. On the whole, it is a good bargain for the Free State.

Mass Conversions : At the request of the National Christian Council, India, Mr. P. O. Phillip has issued a book entitled "The Depressed Classes and Christianity". From the Christian point of view, it is indeed an excellent analysis of the wholesale conversions of the depressed classes to Christianity, but the same, however, cannot be said from the Hindu point of view. For, what is a loss to the Hindu society is a gain to Christianity. We have often pointed out in these columns the excellent work done by the Christian Missionaries in the field of social service, education and medical relief, but, at the same time, we have also felt bound to protest strongly against their proselytisation propaganda which is nothing else but the exploitation of the weaknesses of the Hindu society. The Census Report of 1921 showed that there are now two and a half times as many Christians as there were in 1881. The total population of India in the last ten years increased only 7 per cent. while the Indian Christian population increased over 33 per cent. This increase is largely due to mass movements. The rate of increase through this mass movement is as follows : Punjab 400 per cent., Hyderabad (Deccan) 150 per cent., U. P. 74 per cent., Madras Presidency (Telugus) 50 per cent. In the Punjab it is said that the Chuhras are clamouring for baptism and that many have to be refused admission to the Church. We hope this will serve as an eye-opener to the Hindus to root out untouchability from their midst which has been the sole cause of the increase of the Christian population during the last few years.

Lala Lajpat Rai's Election to the Assembly : We are glad to see that Lala Lajpat Rai has been elected to the Assembly in the place vacated by Lala Hansraj. For long, Lalaji's services have been lost to the country owing to ill-health and many other reasons, and his presence in the Assembly at this juncture will be an accession to the strength of the popular cause.

INDIAN-SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, DECEMBER 12, 1925.

THE HINDU MAHASABHA.

As we indicated last week, the substantial work of the Hindu Mahasabha is to popularise, to consolidate and to carry forward the work which Indian social and religious reformers have been and are doing for nearly a century. The really important resolutions passed by the Hindu Mahasabha held in Bombay last week are those relating to the emancipation and elevation of the status of women, the modification of the caste system, the removal of untouchability, protection of orphans and widows, and such other subjects having for their object the purification and regeneration of the community. These reforms have been advanced by social reformers as measures of social justice and national efficiency, and their progress has been slow but sure. The promoters of the Hindu Mahasabha have introduced the bogey of Moslem aggression as an incentive to the more rapid adoption of these reforms. We have more than once pointed out in these columns that the view which some publicists have been propounding, namely, that the Hindu community is fast decreasing numerically and losing ground otherwise, is not supported by a dispassionate examination of actual facts. If in recent years there has been any influence which has made for the weakening of the Hindu community, it is the Non-Co-operation movement which attempted to put it back on all the lines along which it had progressed under British rule. An impartial student of Indian affairs cannot but recognise that the position which the Hindu community occupies to-day as compared with the position which it occupied in pre-British days, is largely the result of English education the opportunities afforded for which were embraced by the Hindu literate classes with more readiness than by other communities. The Non-Co-operation movement laid its axe at the root of this English education as the breeding ground of slave-mentality. Most of the children who withdrew from the schools under the impulse of that movement were Hindu children. Most of the lawyers who gave up practice were Hindu lawyers. Most of the men who went to jail for breaking the law were Hindus. The Non-Co-operation movement ousted the old and experienced leaders from their positions and installed in their places raw, untried and inexperienced men whose only qualification was that they were prepared to carry out any orders that might be issued from the headquarters. The full effects of this unfortunate and ill-considered movement have not yet disclosed themselves. We have refrained from making any reference to Mahatma Gandhi's latest fast for seven days, but we cannot help saying here that the irregularities among the students of his Ashram for which Mahatmaji underwent this penance, is but a symptom of a general demoralisation which has been the worst effect of the Non-Co-operation movement. We have more than once called attention to the dangers of the neo-Ashramite movement and we once again repeat that it is a very tremendous responsibility to withdraw young people from their natural environment in their own homes and to transplant them in surroundings surcharged with the spirit of disobedience as a religious creed.

The Hindu Mahasabha has not yet found its true centre of gravity. Lala Lajpat Rai in his presidential address spoke of the necessity of preserving Hindu culture, but he did not define what that culture is and why it should be preserved. In our view, Hinduism is neither caste nor any particular system of marriage nor vegetarianism. Hinduism is a religious synthesis which bases itself not merely upon the relation of man to man as the so-called ethical religions do, but upon man's relation to the whole Universe. To find out that relation has been the object of earnest search of Hindu philosophy. "This world means intensely and means well ; to know its meaning is my meat and drink," says one of Robert Browning's dramatic personæ. That accurately represents the outlook of Hinduism. We had the privilege last week of receiving a visit from a distinguished American sociologist and we put to him at parting the question whether he saw any prospect of the East and West being able to find a common civilization and culture. He replied "no". The West, he said, whatever the priests and the preachers may say, is irrevocably rooted to the relativity of things, and so long as India maintained its belief in the absolute and in the possibility of human perfection, so long, in his opinion, there was no chance of an approximation between Indian and European culture. Other modern writers on the philosophy of religion have also recognised that the Hindu religio-philosophic idea is the only rival to the Semitic conception which is embodied in Judaism, Christianity and Islam. Hinduism, to our mind, if divorced from its root in Brahmajnyan or the knowledge of the absolute, will be a very unimportant phase of thought which cannot long survive the onslaught of the personal and historic religions. It follows that the only way to put fresh life into Hinduism and in the Hindu community is to destroy the weeds that have overgrown the central thought of Hinduism and to leave it free scope for emancipation in our personal and social lives. In a word, we have got to apply the metaphysical truths of Hinduism to social and national affairs. The ancient Hindus who meditated so deeply and resolutely had planned a huge structure which would last for all time, because it was founded on great cosmic principles. For this purpose they raised a huge scaffolding with such material as they found to their hands in the customs, practices and even superstitions of the inhabitants of India. This work of construction, however, was impeded by eruptions through the North-Western passes and for a thousand years the whole energy of Hindnism was absorbed by the task of assimilating the new arrivals. The Moslem conquest introduced a new factor which was unamenable to assimilative methods and the vitality of Hinduism was spent in defending itself. The growth of sea-power and the advent of Europeans into India created yet another situation and one of much greater complexity. The task of Hinduism today is to assimilate modern ideas and to adjust itself to the world-conditions of the present day. The Hindu Mahasabha, we think, would do well to leave politics alone and devote itself entirely to the work of reconstructing Hindu society.

BOMBAY SOCIAL SERVICE CONFERENCE.

The Bombay Social Service Conference holds its first session in Bombay today under the presidentship of Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, C.I.E. The Conference, as the name connotes, is a provincial gathering of those interested in social service as distinguished from the All-India Social Service Conference, the fourth session of which was held in Bombay last year under the presidentship of Dr. Annie Besant. We have not so far heard of any attempts to hold the annual session of the All-India Social Service Conference this year, and it is not understood why today's session is made a provincial one. It will be remembered that the Social Service Conference was first held in 1916 and continued to be held annually till 1918 after which it suffered a break in 1919. In 1920, however, the social workers of South India organised a conference and the first three sessions were held in Madras under the name of the South Indian Social Service Conference. For practical purposes the first two sessions were confined to the Madras Presidency. The third session held at Madras was a large and representative gathering, and so was the fourth session held last year in this city. We do not know whether the present session of the Conference, in the absence of any attempts to hold the annual session of the All-India Social Service Conference, is likely to break the continuity once again of holding an All-India session every year. In view of the increasing recognition of the importance of social service, there is ample scope for holding provincial and even district sessions of the Social Service Conference just as political conferences. Although some Congress politicians have not cared to show as much practical interest in social work as could be expected of them, the most thoughtful among the nationalists are quite alive to the need of social work. There is no better example than that of Mahatma Gandhi who, by example more than by precept, has demonstrated the value of social service and the place it should occupy in the national programme. Lala Lajpat Rai has been for some time past devoting much attention to the organisation of social work, as his writings in his weekly, the People of Lahore, from which we extracted last week his article under the heading "Organise", amply show. The work before us is not merly "educating our masters", but also serving them, and Indian politics has reached a stage—thanks to Mahatma Gandhi—when it is no longer possible to divorce social service from its programme of work. We are, therefore, surprised to see the omission of some at least of the prominent Congressmen in Bombay among the list of office-bearers. Social service is above politics and parties, and it is well to remember the full significance of Christ's words: "He that is greatest among you shall be servant of all."

When the tentative programme of the Conference, as decided at the meeting of the Council of Social Workers held in August, was announced, we at once pointed out what we considered grave omissions in excluding discussions on the evils of drink and prostitution from the list of subjects selected to be dealt with at the Conference. We are glad that the organisers have since then included these subjects. Untouchability, prison reform, adult education, village sanitation, unemployment, housing problem, prostitution and the drink evil are the subjects which will be dealt with at the Conference. The term "Social Service" is sufficiently wide to include everything calculated to advance the welfare of society. But the most urgent and important questions which should engage the attention of social workers are the prevention and relief of distress caused by poverty, sickness, vice and such other causes, welfare work among the labouring classes of which maternity and child-welfare should occupy a prominent place, care of the infirm and the disabled, medical relief, the beggar problem, etc. "To lift up the manhood of the poor" is in essence what is called social service. Social workers are concerned more with those members of society who are unable to look after themselves and consequently depend on society. In India we have neither a Poor Law nor a system of old age pensions as exists in civilised countries. The Government, as constituted at present, does not and cannot be expected to shoulder the responsibilities which are mainly its as regards the unfortunate members of society who now depend on public or private charity. The sight of hundreds of beggars in the streets, most of whom are decrepits and diseased, is a disgraceful feature of which both society and Government should be ashamed. We are sorry to observe that the organisers of the Social Service Conference have failed to include the consideration of problems affecting the beggars and the disabled. We know some at least of these subjects used to find prominent place in the subjects usually discussed at Social Service Conferences, and we also know that the Bombay Social Service League takes much interest in such work. We, therefore, regard the omission as having been due to oversight, and we have dealt with this branch of social service at this length simply to emphasise that the care of the decrepit, diseased, helpless and the poor must be the first charge on the time, energy and funds of every social worker and social service institution. It is very difficult to differentiate between the scope of social reform and social service; but if there is any difference, it is this: that while the former embraces all classes of society inasmuch as its chief aim is to remove disabilities which have been imposed upon by religion or custom, the latter is confined to the lower classes of society which are too poor, too ignorant and too feeble to meet their own needs of existence.

The chief difficulty in the way of working out any scheme of social service is want of funds. Every branch of work needs vast sum of money. To check the growing evil of prostitution, for instance, needs a good lot of money in organising work-houses for the reclaimed prostitutes without which there is no use attempting to tackle the problem. The appalling infant mortality cannot be mitigated by holding Baby Week celebrations and awarding a prize to the best specimen of babies, in most cases the child of a millionnaire or of a high European official brought up in luxury, nor by preaching to the mothers on the necessity of bringing up babies in good sanitary surroundings and on pure milk, without the least thought as to how the poor mother, who may be working twelve hours to keep hunger off from her doors, shold find means to carry out the advice. The educative propaganda on baby welfare is to a great extent superfluous, if not ridiculous, for Nature has taught the mothers to love their babies and they know how to bring up their little ones if only they had the means. The problem is economic, and cannot be solved without financial aid being given to those unable to look after the essential needs for the preservation of the life of their babies. This means money. The same is the case with regard to the care of the beggars, the diseased and the decrepits. The utterly inadequate medical aid in Bombay has, as a result of public interest in the matter, attracted much attention, and we are sure His Excellency the Governor's appeal at the public meeting of the citizens of Bombay held on Wednesday is bound to bear fruit. Private enterprise has not been wanting in this direction as will be seen from the number of maternity hospitals recently started in different places. The Social Service Conference will be doing the necessary spade work by focussing public attention on the importance of the various schemes of work it might evolve. The work is purely humanitarian and transcends every artificial barrier such as caste, creed or colour. The Conference should not only discuss the subjects, but also draw up a scheme of work for the year. Social workers must have the faith that no good cause will suffer for want of funds. Just as the question of medical relief which is nearing solution to some extent, other items of social work which suffer from lack of funds are bound to be solved.

The Locarno Spirit: To us in India, however, the glowing descriptions of the signing of the Locarno Treaties in London, which Reuter sent us, will cause no jubilation. Judging by the speeches made on the occasion by the representatives and delegates of the various countries, it would seem that the Pact is intended only to consolidate the European powers and European civilization. Unlike the Geneva Protocol which aimed at world peace and which included in its pale Asia and Africa, the present Pact only bands together the aggressively imperialistic nations of Europe so as to present a stronger front to the rest of the world, and, as such, it constitutes a menace to Asia and Africa. Nor does the exclusion of Russia from the concert of Europe in any way augur well for the future peace of Europe. Asia will never forget that almost at the very moment when negotiations were being made at Locarno, the inhuman Damascus massacre was perpetrated and the brave struggle of the Riffi for independence was stifled. The peace of Europe will never be assured, unless the Locarno spirit prevails equally in Africa, Syria and China. So far as India is concerned, she cannot honourably join in a Pact which avowedly aims at the aggrandisement of Europe.

THE HINDU MAHASABHA.

A special session of the Hindu Mahasabha Conference was held on Saturday the 5th December in a large pandal specially erected for the occasion, near French Bridge, Chaupati, Bombay. Lala Lajpat Rai presided. There was a fairly large gathering. The pandal was attractively decorated. Prominent among those present at the Conference were the Hon. Sir Chunilal Mehta, Pandit Motilal Nehru, the Hon. Mr. B. V. Jadhav, Messrs. M. R. Jayakar, A. Rangaswamy Iyengar, Drs. B. S. Moonje, M. B. Velkar, Messrs. S. Satyamurti, S. Srinivasa Iyengar, Rattansey D. Morarji, Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, Mr. Lallubhoy Samaldas, Mr. N. C. Kelkar, Mr. K. Natarajan, Major Graham Pole and Mr. T. C. Goswami.

Election of President.

Mr. K. Natarajan in proposing Lala Lajpat Rai as President said that he considered Lalaji to be what he should call a complete man. Lalaji was not merely a politician, but was also a great social reformer. He had always looked upon Lalaji with the greatest respect. His (Lalaji's) views on social, economic and religious matters were always balanced with the needs of the country. There was no leader in the country whom he always revered more than Lala Lajpat Rai.

He then pointed out that it was the good fortune of the Sabha to have secured the Lalaji's services. He always thought that the Hindu Mahasabha should begin its session in Bombay and not in Benares, because in Bombay they had balanced views on economic and religious matters, which they certainly did not find in Benares. Therefore it was a very good thing that the Mahasabha's session was held in Bombay that day, because it would take colour and complexion, and that it would be recognised by all communities and all parties in the country as not only the development and progress of the Hindu community but as a movement for the promotion of all communities. The Hindu traditional policy was never exclusive.

Chairman of the Reception Committee's Speech.

In the course of his speech welcoming the delegates, Mr. M. R. Jayakar, Chairman of the Reception Committee, said :

This is the first Conference we are holding in Bombay where the activities of the Mahasabha are not yet well-known. In a cosmopolitan city like Bombay, where the sharp distinctions of caste, creed, race and nationality are softened by daily contact in commercial, professional or neighbourly relations, the work of the Hindu Sabha assumes a peculiar aspect.

It is obvious that, in the case of a vast organization like the Hindu Mahasabha, its activities should take colour from the soil and the environment in which they are carried on. The objects of the Sabha have been stated in an authoritative manner by various exponents from several platforms, and I venture to think that, in a place like Bombay, the Sabha has a distinct function to perform in "promoting greater union and solidarity among all sections of the Hindu community and to unite them more closely as parts of one organic whole." Likewise, the Sabha can perform a distinct service in "promoting good feelings between the Hindus and the other communities" and establish friendly intercourse "with a view to evolve a united and self-govern ing nation." In northern climes where this admixture of races is perhaps not so complete as in Bombay, the Sabha's work may take the form of extreme self-centredness, in "protecting and promoting" Hindu interests whenever and wherever necessary. But in Bombay, there is perhaps great scope for the work of establishing solidarity amongst the several sections of the Hindus and also promoting friendly relations with the other communities inhabiting the crowded city. Likewise, there is a great opportunity before the Sabha in the direction of "promoting the religious, moral, educational, social, economic and political interests of the Hindu community."

Reply to critics.

I venture to reply to the critics that I see no inconsistency between attempting to consolidate the Hindu community as a whole and endeavouring, when this consolidation is completed, to bring that community into proper relations with other communities, equally consolidated, in the entire organism of the Indian people. In fact, I venture to think that this process of individual or communal consolidation is a step towards the larger affinities which Indian nationalism hopes to attain in course of time. To destroy the loose and fissiparous tendencies which a many-sided religion like Hinduism necessarily gives rise to, to root out the sense of division and isolation which the several communities of India feel towards one another, to attempt to spread the message of cultural and religious unity amongst the several sections of Hinduism, to undertake a root and branch reform of some of the grievances which Hinduism in its working has created, to bring Hinduism into line with the requirements of a modern and well-equipped society, to prepare its adherents to take their proper place in the national life with regard to the various activities of the people; between all this and the creation of a national unity I confess I see no coflict at all. I hold the view very strongly that the consolidation to the fullest extent of the two main communities in India, the Hindus and Mahomedans, is in no sense opposed to the idea of the two communities working together for a national ideal of freedom. The ultimate fusion of the components can only come from the fullest development, within itself, of each of the component parts, and as with a family, so with a nation, the process of development can begin from the home and can proceed far apace into the entire country.

After referring to the glorious work before the Hindu Sabha Mr. Jayakar said: In a place like Bombay the Sabha can create a feeling of unity amongst the several communities in the Presidency. Partly owing to the apple of discord thrown into our midst by the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms and partly owing to the speedy process of the awakening which the Gandhian movement created amongst the masses, we are at present passing through a very acute state of race-consciousness, of communal awakening. It is a necessary stage in our political growth, and so far as it is kept within proper bounds, and is in the hands of men who have a national outlook, I have no apprehensions with regard to its effects. To me the message of Hinduism is well proclaimed when the Non-Brahmin desires to attain the privileges of a Brahmin, and there are many people in the country who believe that the ultimate satisfaction of this craving will be reached when the Brahmin voluntarily accords to the non-Brahmin all the prized privileges and prerogatives of the higher castes, subject only to the requirement that the Non-Brahmin will conform to the cultural and social tests and standards of the higher castes. I am not saying this only as a dreamer or a visionary.

I am not afraid of the aspersions cast on the Hindu Sabha that it is likely to become anti-Mahomedan I am glad that these aspersions should be freely vented about, because they serve to put the workers of the Hindu Sabha on their guard against the dangers to which their activities are so naturally liable Men like Lala Lajpat Rai, our esteemed President, and Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya are too true nationalists to forget their real mission in connection with the Hindu Sabha, and so far as my connection with this body in Bombay is concerned, it will always be my humble endeavour to prevent the Sabha from assuming a hostile attitude towards any other community. We shall not provoke it so far as we can, but if the process of our consolidation by itself provokes hostility by reason of suspicion, jealousy and distrust, its growth is inevitable. We shall deplore it and try our best to remove the misconception, but if notwithstanding our efforts, the misconception grows and breeds animosities, I will say, in all frankness, that we will not be afraid of them, but will trust to time to remove the misconception and establish confidence in their stead.

Work Before the Sabha.

I want, therefore, the Hindu Sabha to plunge into its work with earnestness. There is a good deal of work to be done in the direction of creating and spreading ideas about social and marital purity. I may mention one such direction. Mr. D. B. Adwani, M. L. C., for Karachi, introduced in the Bombay Council a Bill, which unfortunately met with an adverse fate, that a Hindu husband in Sind can, by a declaration, confine himself to a monogamous marriage. That measure, of course, was confined to Sind only, but I cannot see any reason why gradually the same principle may not be made applicable to all Hindus according as a Province or a community becomes ready for the acceptance of the monogamous principle. Already the amendment in the principles of Act III of 1872 has secured a partial acceptance of this principle, and I feel certain that, if the Hindu Sabha takes agitation in this direction, its efforts are bound to succeed. With reference to the marriageable age of boys and girls, great reform is necessary, and the process of raising that age may be consciously accelerated as it is being unconsciously achieved by the social necessities of the times. There is, further, a great need for a Rescue Home for women and orphans in Bombay. The subject is free from all controversy, and the local branch of the Sabha ought immediately to take up the work of establishing such a home in the city of Bombay, which has been long overdue.

For a number of years yet the work of the Hindu Sabha will be mainly social and religious reform. One or two subjects I will venture to suggest as appropriate centres of a broad activity on the part of the Sabha. One is the condition of Hindu Kshetras and pilgrims. Far from being places of purity and cleanliness, the places of our pilgrimage and worship are sordid, squalid and debasing.

I cannot see any difficulty in the Hindu Sabha having a branch solely devoted to the purification of our Kshetras and the protection of the interests, health and comforts of the pilgrims.

The want of employment amongst the old Pandits and scholars, learned in ancient lore but famishing for want of occupation now, is another department in which the Sabha can do very useful work. The purification of the priesthood, its elimination in cases where it is in the hands of unworthy men, its ennoblement in other cases where worthy men are struggling and eking out a living and an audience, all these can be usefully undertaken by the Sabha. The curtailment of enthusiasm for animal sacrifices in the name of the deities is another direction in which the Sabha's activities can be fruitfully carried on.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH.

Lalaji, after condemning the system of communal representation which only intensifies communal and religious differences said :

Hindus are divided into caste and sub-castes, Hindu Shastras recognise no such distinction as between Brahmins and non-Brahmins. In North India we know of no such distinction. In the South and the West the distinction has come into existence because of the original Varna system not having been enforced here. In the North there is very little difference between the Brahmins and the other Dwijas. All the Dwijas, whether Brahmins or non-Brahmins, are entitled to wear the Yajnopavita, perform Yajnas, and study the Vedas. All of them are entitled to the Gayatri. The functions of the priesthood are no doubt confined to the Brahmins and they alone can cook food for all. Beyond this there are hardly any other distinctions. In the South and the West, however, Yajnopavita and Gayatri and the Vedas are denied to all non-Brahmins. We have sufficient evidence in Hindu Shastras and Hindu history that in ancient times the caste distinctions were not so rigid as they are to-day. Intercourse between castes was fairly common. A Brahmin was sometimes degraded to the position of a Shudra and a Shudra had opportunities to rise to Brahmanhood. Any way, there is no authority for Yajnopavita and Gayatri being denied to those who are entitled to the position of Dwijas under the Shastras. There is also abundant authority for the proposition that those who became Antyajas by ceasing to wear Yajnopavita and perform Yajnas, were re-admitted to these rights by the performance of the necessary Prayashchitta. Under the circumstances, it is easy for the Hindus of the South and the West to fall back on the ancient custom, and admit at least those non-Brahmins who are Dwijas by occupation as laid down in the Dharma Shastras and other ancient books on Hindu Law and ritual, to the rights of Yajnopavita and Yajnas. The Brahmins of the South and the West can thus destroy the movement for the separate political existence of the non-Brahmins by broadening the basis of their Brahminism and admitting into its fold all those non-Brahmins who are not doing the work of the Shudras. Brahminism will thus become synonymous with Hinduism. I am certain the movement for separation is exploited by a few educated men. The non-Brahmin shopkeeper, cultivator, craftsman, etc., have no interest in it. If the Brahmins of the South were to concede to them the rights of Dwijas which are theirs under the Hindu Shastras, their separatist tendencies will disappear. It is in the best interests of Hinduism as well as Nationalism that this should happen and I beg to implore the Brahmins of the Western and Southern Presidencies to lose no time in coming to an understanding with the non-Brahmins. I am not afraid of the latter, even if they continue to receive the favoured treatment they are now getting from the Government, because I am certain that ultimately they cannot go adrift from the Hindu Samaj, but the sooner the division is healed up the better.

SHUDRAS AND UNTOUCHABLES.

Now I come to the Shudras and the untouchables. The case of the untouchables is clear enough so far as untouchability is concerned. On no account and for no consideration can untouchability be allowed to disfigure the fair face of Hinduism. Once untouchability is removed, the present-day unt ouchables become one with the Shudras. We have a clear authority in the Code of Manu that a nation which has a majority of Shudras as against the Dwijas, is doomed. We have abundant authority for the proposition, as already remarked, that caste in ancient times was not so rigid and so permanent as it is now. Shudras were allowed by proved fitness to rise to higher castes and people in the latter were degraded to the position of Shudras by reason of misconduct. The present-day caste system is not an ancient system. All sensible and intelligent Hindus are agreed that the prevailing system of numerous castes and sub-castes cannot be defended. It requires substantial changes. Time and circumstances are against it. However wrathful the Varna-Ashram Sanghis may be against the reforms, they are destroying the existing caste-system inch by inch by their own conduct. Theirs is a dying cause, for the simple reason that the time forces are against it. Let us first take the Varna system. It is clear that the present numerous divisions have no justification in the ancient Hindu Shastras which divided society into four Varnas. The present system must then be a development of later days, and is thus open to change according to the needs of the time. The advocates of Varna-Ashramas themselves do not fully observe either the rules of ancient Varnas or the customary restrictions of the present Varnas. The customary practices are opposed both in spirit and in letter to the ancient system, but the actual conduct of the orthodox to-day is opposed even to the sanctioned customary practices of 100 years ago. There are many among the so-called orthodox who have no objection to the use of European medicine, or aerated waters, or pipe-water, or articles of food manufactured in Europe and America. Some of them dine at the Government House or in the company of the European and also pride at Sanatan Dharma Sammelans (conferences). They go to Europe and do not perform any prayaschit (expiation ceremony) on their return. This is particularly true of the Ruling Princes. How can they then advocate the maintenance of the caste-system in its present shape ? Their own conduct belies their professions of faith.

NECESSITY OF CHANGING HINDU SOCIAL CODE.

Let us next take the Ashramas Here again, their conduct and practice is entirely opposed to the spirit and the letter of the Ashrama-Dharma. The rules as to Ashrama-Dharma do not contemplate early marriage, at least

realpatidar.com

among the Dwijas. The present-day Hindus have cut the root of the Ashrama-Dharma by the institution of child-marriage. How many of them retire to the forests or become Sanyasis as required by the Ashrama-Dharma? For people who marry their children at the age of 12 or under, who do not teach the latter even rudiments of Sanskrit, who send them to schools managed by non-Hindus who stick to Grihastha life even after 60, nay some of whom even re-marry at that age, to call themselves defenders and champions of the Varna-Ashrama Dharma, is mere mockery worthy of the Pharisees. The best thing for us is to deliberately change our social Code, and for that there is ample authority and provision in the ancient scripture. Samaj Dharma is always regulated by Desh and Kal (i. e. place and time). The Hindus have, from time to time, changed it according to their altered needs of circumstances; and this has given them stability and permanence. Life implies adaptability and growth. Hinduism is a living organism, has always been so. Its social Code has been changing, is changing, and will continue to change according to the needs of desh and kal. The opposition of the orthodox is good so far as it militates against too rapid a change and too outlandish a transformation, but it is harmful and injurious when it threatens to thwart all progress and militates against the regeneration of life according to the needs of the time. I appeal to my orthodox countrymen to take note of the changes that have been introduced into our lives by circumstances over which we had no control. Railways, steamships, airships, Post offices, water works, electricity, all these and many other modern inventions have produced a new world. We cannot ignore them. We are allowing ourselves the full use of them. So far we are changing with the times, but we object to certain other changes which are necessary corollary of these. In this we are doomed to failure. Failure in this direction involves waste of time and money, which again means slowness of progress and loss of opportunities. Let us then take note of the necessary implications of the altered state of things and read just our lives accordingly. Therein lies safety, statesmanship, foresight, wisdom and solidarity. Diehard conventionalism only means more and more waste, and also useless struggle and strife. If we are wise, we shall avoid it. If not time will take its own revenge.

Mischievous Cry of Religion in Danger.

There is another danger which threatens the Hindu community and against which I wish to sound a note of warning. Orthodoxy is being used for political ends. There are forces at work which invite and encourage the orthodox people to oppose the Nationalist Hindus on the ground that the latter are not orthodox and therefore do not truly represent the Hindu community. It is argued that the Hindu community being, in the main, followers of the Sanatan Dharma, the Santan Dharmis alone can represent the community in the councils of the Nation. An appeal is being made to the prejudices of the orthodox against those who are social reformers. No educated Hindu possessed of a feeling heart and love for his community, can help being a social reformer. Social reform on an extensive scale is the greatest need of the community, and no political advance of a substantial nature can be secured without it. Does any one really believe that a community wedded to child-marriage and Chhut Chhut, with a passive outlook on life and a psychology of negation and tyag (renunciation) can secure that efficiency which is the sine qua non of respectable communal or national existence in these days. If the Hindu commuuity does not wish to commit political harikari, they must move every nerve to be communally efficient and united. To divide itself into religious sections with separate political ambitions, is the greatest folly, of which a community can be guilty. Political work must be done by poeple who have at least a working knowledge of politics and also political experience at their back. The cry of 'religion in danger' is the most mischievous of all the cries that could be raised either by professed Nationalists or by Communalists. To me Sanatan Dharma means all that is good and noble and pure, but I have no faith in the popular Sanatan Dharma which seeks to preserve untouchability, to perpetuate untenable caste distinctions, to keep women ignorant and in bondage, and to keep the Hindu community eternally inefficient. Nor have I any faith in the attempts at religious purifications which are being made by foul-mouthed fanatics.

Hardships of our Women.

The greatest need of the community is to take the best care it can of the mothers of the community. The mothers of the race are its makers and, unless their condition is healthy, the race cannot be expected to be anything better. When we say healthy, we include in it all that makes life enjoyable, progressive and potent. The efficiency and prosperity of a social or political unit must eventually be a reflex of the efficiency and prosperity of its women. The Hindus of to-day are inefficient, lacking in courage, lacking in enterprise, lacking in the zest for life, lacking in enthusiasm, lacking in solidarity, scattered units of a once great race, because the condition of their women is not what may be called healthy. The great feature of present-day Hindu life is passivity. "Let it be so," sums up all their psychology, individual and social. Active effort to change the conditions of life, to change the current of their tendencies, to be masters of their fate, to grapple with difficulties that hamper their progress and solidarity, is wanting. They have got into the habit of taking things lying down. They have imbibed this tendency and this psychology and this habit from their mothers. It seems as if it was in their blood. There is no question that all this has to be changed if the Hindus are to become efficient, enterprising and courageous. The best, the easiest and the most effective way is to attend to our girls. Our women labour under many handicaps. It is not only ignorance and superstition that corrode their intelligence, but even physically they are a poor race. Their physical disabilities are generally due to the social restrictions from which they suffer. They become mothers at an age at which girls in other countries are at school, developing their muscles and nerves, hands and feet by suitable physical exercises. The first delivery is the death of a good number of them, and disables many more. They become a kind of invalids for the rest of their lives. Those who breed, breed too many, and thus lead miserable, wretched lives from which all zest and enthusiasm disappears. As a rule, they are careless about their food. Their chief concern is to feed their men well. For themselves they can live and subsist on anything. The Hindus are an awfully carless people in the matter of their food. The rich eat too much and the poor too little. The middle class does not exist. In middle class and poor families, the women are all day long engaged in cooking food. Both men and women are supremely ignorant about the food value of the things they eat and drink. As for regularity of meals, no one understands the value thereof. Women get very little open air and almost no exercise. How on earth is the race then to improve and become efficient ? A large number of our women develop consumption and die at an early age. Such of them as are mothers, infect their children also. Segregation of cases affected by Tuberculosis is almost impossible. Mothers won't leave the children alone. They must have them by their side.

Then the condition of the child-widows is indescribable. God may bless those who are opposed to their remarriage, but their superstition introduces so many abuses and brings about so much moral and physical misery as to cripple the society as a whole and handicap it in the struggle for life.

The hardships from which our women suffer, react most injuriously on the condition of men too. We put up with all kinds of tyranny and impudence from others, because we are in the habit of making others put up with such things at our hands. Our women are extremely shy and dependent. Modesty is a great virtue, but not so helplessness and dependence. I want the Hindu woman to retain her modesty, her selflessness, her devotion to duty towards her children and her man, but at the same time I want her to learn a bit of self-assertiveness and independence. Hindus as a race are lacking in self-assertiveness. People who lack in that quality can never be free. They are always looking to others for protection. It is not praiseworthy to be offensive and agressive, but it does not pay to be always on the defensive. There are occasions in life when one has to take the offensive if one wants to save his life and liberty. Offensiveness in such a condition is really another name for self-preservation. The ancient history of the Hindus proves that in ancient times, Hindu women were more independent, more assertive, more self-reliant and physically more competent than they are now. They were as free as men, and their children were brave, kind, self-confident and able-bodied. If the Hindus want to get out of the slump in which they find themselves at present, they must attend to and improve their women.

I will beg of my countrymen to save their girls, to give them suitable opportunities for developing healthy bodies, and psychologically fit minds. Our girls and women must be freed from all superstitions which breed carelessness in life, indifference to food, distaste for struggle, lack of energy, the habit of taking things lying down and a psychology of dependence and fear. Let me not be misundersood. There is nothing so hateful as a quarrelsome, unnecessarily assertive, impudent, ill-mannered woman but even if that were the only road which the Hindu woman must traverse in order to be an efficient, courageous, independent and physically fit mother, I would prefer it to the existing state of things In concluding this part of my address, I will say to my countrymen, "Your women are your makers, save them and educate them."

A WIDOW MARRIAGE IN LUCKNOW.

(From a Correspondent.)

On the evening (between 8 and 10 p. m.) of the 25th November, 1925, a notable widow marriage took place at the house (Kunjanivas) of Babu Kunj Behari Seth, President of the Hindu Widow Reform League, Lucknow, under the auspices of the League. Shrimati Bhagwati Devi, a Dhaighar Khatri (Tandan) virgin widow of the age of about fifteen years, was wedded to Babu Santa Saran Khanna of Allahabad, a youngman of the age of 27 years. Invitation cards had been issued on behalf of the League; and at 7 p. m. there was a good gathering of ladies and gentlemen. Among the distinguished guests of the evening was the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Gokaran Nath Misra, Judge of the Chief Court, Lucknow. Some eminent ladies were also present behind the pardah. Babu Kunj Behari Seth made a speech in Hindustani in which he stated briefly the three objects of the League; that there were hundreds of thousands of widows of the age of 15 years and below according to the census of 1921; that their marriage was as necessary as that of maids of the same age; that most of the young widows were potential converts to non-Hinduism; that their marriage was as much an act of virtue and piety as that of maids. He observed inter alia that so long as the marriage of maids was made compulsory, the marriage of widows of the same age should likewise be made compulsory. Continuing he said that this compulsion should in no way affect the volitions of those widows who are prepared to lead a Brahmacharya life and devote themselves to the good of the country. He made a special appeal to the ladies to carry out the reform relating to the re-marriage of Hindu widows, as their determination and decision in the matter would be final and unappealable whilst the males were incompetent to implement this branch of social reform. He asked young widows to go through their re-marriage even as an act of self-sacrifice for the benefit of their widowed sisters; and if five or six such widows of Lucknow were to re-marry, hundreds of other widows would follow suit.

With respect to the slow activities of the League in the field of re-marriage he enumerated and described the difficulties which were experienced in bringing about the re-marriage of widows Lastly, he appealed to the ladies and gentlemen to help the League in every respect. The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Gokaran Nath Misra spoke a few chosen words in applause and appreciation of the work of the President. He stated that in this province there were really great difficulties in the way of the remarriage of Hindu widows though the attitude in favour of such marriage was more favourable now than it was some years before. Babu Ismari Dayal, Advocate, announced a monthly subscription of Rs. 5 to the League and promised an additional donation of Rs. 100 in case a separate Widows' Home was established by the League.

Pt. Nehru and Skeen Committee: Pandit Motilal Nehru, interviewed in Bombay about the rumour of his intention to resign from the Skeen Committee emphatically denied the truth of the same and said that neither he nor Mr. Patel intended to resign from their respective positions.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

New President of the Punjab Legislative Council: The Punjab Legislative Council, at its meeting held on the 3rd instant, elected Mr. K. B. Chaudhuri Shahab-ud-Din as President.

Sir J. C. Bose's New Discovery: Sir Jagadish Chandra Bose demonstrated to a crowded audience at Calcutta on Nov. 30 at the Bose Institute a remarkable discovery relating to the nervous system of plants and a system of distributing sap similar to the blood system of human beings. This discovery explodes the theory of plants inhaling sap enunciated by the German scientist, Dr. Strasburg, whose experimentation on plants with poison put entirely a different construction on the sap circulation system of plants now discovered by Sir Jagadish, who believes that the present discovery has opened a vista of scientific truths which will be of infinite possibilities in the field of agriculture.

Dr. Rutherford on the Labour Party: Dr. Rutherford, ex-M. P., who is on a visit to India, interviewed by a press representative in Madras, said he was attending this year's session of the Congress. He was anxious to meet Indian leaders of all shades of opinion. He characterised the reforms as too feeble and said he was very much disappointed with Labour's attitude towards India. Not only had that party, when it was in office, nothing to accelerate Indian self-government but it had actually been a party to the passing of repressive legislation as the Bengal Ordinance. That was why he had left that party.

All-India Students' Conference: Babu Rama Misra, Publicity Secretary of the All-India Students' Conference, Cawnpore, writes: The sixth session of the All-India Students' Conference will be held during the Congress week at Cownpore. All those interested in it are requested to give in their suggestions for the presidentship of the aforesaid Conference.

Inter-School Singing Contests in Calcutta: The last week in November marked the annual Inter-School Singing Contests in Calcutta. There are two contests, one for European and one for Indian Schools. Both contests were inaugurated by the Y. W. C. A., but whilst the Government has now taken over the contest for European Schools, the contest for Indian Schools is still held under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A. This year five Indian High Schools competed, four Christian and one Brahmo School. Christ Church School won the prize for English Unison songs, and the cup for English part-songs, whilst the cup for Bengali songs was won by the United Missionary School.

A Widow Marriage in Bengal: Under the auspices of the Bengal Widow Marriage Association, the wedding ceremony of Sreeman Bijoygopal Halder, son of Sj. Keshavlal Halder, a resident of Jessore, was solemnised on Nov. 27th, with Sreemati Mokshada Sundari Devi, nine year old widowed daughter of Sj. Annada Prasad Palsai, residing at Rine. Pt. Kshetra Mohan Goswami conducted the ceremony according to Hindu rites. Ladies and students and gentlemen numbering about 150 attended. The special feature of the function is that the bridegroom did not take any dowry.

All-India Indian Christian Conference: The 12th annual session of the All-India Conference of Indian Christians will be held at Bishop's College, Calcutta on 28th to 30th Dec. The Right Rev. the Bishop of Dornanakal being unable to preside over this session, Mr. K. L. Rallia Ram of Lahore has been elected to that position by the majority vote of the Affiliated Associations. Mr. S. C. Mukerji is the Chairman of the Reception Committee.

Madras Legislative Council: An Associated Press message dated Madras, 4th December, says that during the ensuing session of the Madras Legislative Council commencing on the 14th instant, three days will be allotted for non-official business for which a number of Bills and three resolutions have been ballotted. Mr. Satyamurthy will raise the question of the Government's Excice policy and request that Government should declare this policy to be total prohibition of the manufacture and consumption or sale of liquors and that immediate steps be taken to bring about prohibition within a period of twenty years. The question of giving immediate effect to the recommendations of the Committee on Seperation of Judicial from Exucutive Functions and that of removing sex-disqualification for membership of the Legislative Council are also among the subjects to be discussed.

Rs. 200 for a Life!! The New India, Madras writes: In the Madhupur garden case, in which a European manager of an Assam garden was charged, under section 304, I.P.C., with assault on a cooly which ed to death, a verdict of "guilty" has been given by the jury, by a majority of three to two. But the sentence s a fine of Rs. 200! It was evidently a case of brutal assault on a poor cooly, resulting in his death. One of the witnesses, who was working by the side of the deceased, said that the accused kicked the deceased with boots on, 20 or 25 times, in various parts of the body, and this was corroborated by other witnesses. In cases such as this, the jury has a European majority, and the verdict is therefore of particular significance. The outrageous indifference to the demands of justice revealed by the sentence is almost incredible. Does it mean that, in the Judge's view, an Indian life is worth only Rs. 200, and any European who is prepared to pay that sum can torture and kill an Indian at his pleasure? After this judgment, coming on the top of those in the Page case, the Book-stall Clerk case, etc., there need be no talk of "British Justice". There are no words strong enough to describe the indignation with which it would be received in the country.

Tragic Sequel to an Unequal Marriage: The Guardian, Bangalore, writes: Some years ago, a young Bengali girl urged her flaming protest against the dowry iniquity by burning herself to death. The horrid custom, however, has survived her and the memory of the Calcutta tragedy has been unable to swamp out this practice responsible for a vast deal of misery. Now comes the story of a Jaipur youth having committed suicide because his parents would not be moved by his prayer to spare his sister of twelve from being given away in marriage to a man of forty-five. Only the cupidity of the parents of the unfortunate girl can explain the virtual immolation of the poor thing disposed of with greater disregard than chattel. In consequence, a promising boy of eighteen has killed himself. If a community has any conscience, it ought to be touched by this happening. It is a terrible reminder of the state of things that prevails to the shame of Hindu society.

Maternity Home in Ahmedabad: The trustees of Archratlal Girdharilal Charity Funds have opened a maternity home and dispensary for women in Ahmedabad. The opening ceremony was performed by Mrs. Ramanbhai Mahipatram.

Franchise for Women in Punjab: The Tribune writes:—"Lala Bodh Raj has given notice of a resolution, which will come up for discussion at the forthcoming session of the Punjab Legislative Council, recommending that the rules framed under the Government of India Act be so amended as to extend the right of voting to women in the Province. The question of extending the franchise to women has been left entirely to the discretion to the Council, and we earnestly hope that the Council will rise above petty prejudices and arrive at the only decision which is consistent with justice, common sense and the progressive spirit of the times. It is a pity that, with all the progressive movements which have been going on in this Province for a quarter of a century, the Punjab has lagged behind in this matter and some of the other Provinces had stolen a march over it. The Punjab compares favourably with most other provinces in the matter of female education; the vicious aspects of Purdah have also to a large extent disappeared from this Province. Sikh women have already been accorded the right to vote for the election of the various bodies constituted under the Gurdwara Act; while the Arya Samaj treats women on the same footing as men. As to the Muslim community, which is the stronghold of Purdah, it is more advanced in this respect in our Province than in several others; but even the existence of Purdah is not incompatible with extending the franchise to women, and proper arrangements can be made for Purdah women to record their votes. We hope that the Council will carry the resolution by a large majority, for the exclusion of half the population from public affairs cannot but be a tremendous handicap to the constitutional advance of the people." We are glad that the resolution has been passed on Monday which, having the force of law according to the best interpretation of the Reform Act, removes the sex-disqualification in this respect once for all.

Muslim or Muhammadan?: Mr. Anwar Hussein, Dacca Islamia College, writes to the Mussalman of Calcutta: "There is a great controversy as to the use of the term "Muhammadan" for "Mussalman" or "Muslim." Many of our educated brethren find themselves in a confusion as to whether 'Muslim' or 'Muhammadan' should be preferred. Not to speak of non-Muslims, but even our co-religionists do not take it into their serious consideration and manage to ignore it altogether. The other day in the Select Committee meeting of Dacca District Muslim Students' Association under the presidency of the Nawab of Dacca a hot debate ensued on this much-debated point. The Nawab favoured the word 'Muhammadan' along with others of his fold. This is an instance in point. But the question is whether we should use 'Muslim' or 'Mohammadan' in official records, in papers and in other places. The word 'Muhammadan' is a coinage of the western writers. They would, in imitation of Christians, Buddhists, Confucians, Zoroastrians, etc, apply this term to the followers of Islam; they would not consider very much the sanctity, the dignity, the intrinsic worth, the comprehensive meaning and significance, the sublimity, the pristine glory and majesty of the term 'Muslim' implying the followers of the tenets of Islam. And 'Muslim' is a follower of the principles of the religion 'Islam' as preached by the prophet through divine revelations. Everywhere in the Qoran the word 'Muslim' has been used attaching to it much value and weight. What a deep significance does the word Muslim carry with it! The holy Qoran says: "Whatever is in the heavens and in the earth, is a Muslim." Why should we narrow down the wider meaning, the splendid import of the term 'Muslim' within territorial limits by calling the follower of Islam 'Muhammedan' which is quite inadequate to give expression to the sublime sense of the term Muslim. A Muslim is a follower of Islam and therefore of the Prophet. Islam cannot be separated from the grand personality of the Prophet. It found its highest development and perfection in the noble character of the Prophet who represents Islam in all its magnificence and radiance. We, as Muslims, ought to take serious exception to the misuse of the term 'Muhammadan' for 'Muslim.' The Government should be approached and requested to make the necessary arrangement that in official records the word 'Muslim' may be substituted for 'Muhammadan' so long used in a wrong way. If Government officials use the term, then others will follow suit in no time. There should be a clear circular to this effect."

NOTES

Lord Reading in Calcutta: The Viceroy who has spent nearly two months in Calcutta where he went on account of the illness of Lady Reading (who, we are glad, is well on the way to recovery), addressed the meeting of the Associated (European) Chambers of Commerce of India and Ceylon and also the European Association which entertained him at a farewell dinner last week. In the former speech, His Excellency contrasted the political and economic position of India when he first came here four and a half years ago with the situation as it is to-day. He claimed that his Government was entitled to the lion's share of the credit for the improvement that has occurred. So far as the political situation is concerned, the improvement is mainly due to the collapse of the Non-co-operation movement and the intransigeant policy of the Swarajists in the Councils. Both these movements were in the nature of rolling a heavy stone up a steep hill and it is due to the sheer force of gravity and not to any measure of Government that their rapid descent to the ground-level is mainly due. The economic situation, so far as the country is concerned, has become worse than what it was in 1921, though the Government of India have managed to balance their budgets and even to produce surpluses, while, on the other hand, the provincial Governments and the trade and industry of the country are in the depths of depression. In his address to the European Association, the Viceroy gave the European community in India exaggerated credit for their co-operation and assistance in working the reforms. It is, however, ungracious to take too seriously the expansive sentiments of a post-prandial utterance.

The League and the Mosul Dispute: The failure of the attempts of the Council of the League of Nations to mediate in the Mosul question to the satisfaction of Turkey, and the consequent decision to give its arbitral decision, is fraught with grave consequences as it is calculated to undermine the confidence of the non-European nations in the impartiality and sense of justice of the League. The Mosul question has proved to be the acid test of the claim of the League of Nations to be an impartial international tribunal free from religious or colour prejudice, and its failure as regards the Mosul dispute, coming so close upon its failure to take any notice of the French atrocities in Damascus, is conclusive proof of its impotence in any issue where there is a conflict of interest between western powers and eastern nations. A special cable to the Times of India from Geneva dated 15th instant states that, after an hour's secret session, the League Council confirmed its previous decision regarding the award of Mosul to Iraq provided that Britain definitely accepts a 25 years' mandate. In explaining the position of Britain, a British Official Wireless message states that, in making the claim to the Mosul Vilayat on behalf of Iraq, Britain is not seeking any accession of territory, but was only trying to impress upon the League its duty to its protege to provide her with such a frontier as will enable her to survive. Britain's magnanimity, as the message intends to convey, apparently goes beyond the wishes of a large section of the Conservatives themselves who expressed their disapproval of continuing the Mandate. The British attitude as conveyed in the message appears to lack sincerity, and there is more meaning in characterising it as "oil politics". Since the above was in type, it has been announced that Mosul has been awarded to Iraq which is but an alias for Britain.

Lala Lajpat Rai's Council Programme: We have from the first striven our best to induce the leaders of the Swaraj Party to give up their destructive proposals of obstruction and wrecking, and to adopt the constructive programme as their objective in the Councils. As we pointed out recently, the Swaraj party have, since the last elections, revised their programme in such a way as to permit moving resolutions and supporting bills which were for the healthy growth of national life. While they had decided to advance the constructive programme through the Councils, the leaders of the party have been fighting shy of admitting the plain fact that they have found it impracticable to follow the programme outlined in their election manifesto, namely, 'consistent, uniform and continuous obstruction'. The controversy between Pandit Motilal and Messrs. Kelkar and Jayakar, which has been suspended till the Cawnpore Congress, was the result of the leader of the party refusing to admit publicly the change necessitated by experience in the pre-election programme of the party. At such a time, we have very great pleasure in welcoming the pronouncement regarding the Council programme made by Lala Lajpat Rai, whose election to the Assembly has been hailed with delight by all sections of the Indian press. In the course of an interview to a press representative last week, Lalaji made it perfectly clear that he was not in favour of any particular formula, but he was very strongly in favour of using the Councils, as far as possible, for strengthening the constructive programme for nation-building work without creating unnecessary conflict either with the political parties or with the Government. Lalaji's Council programme affords the best medium to adjust the minor differences between the different nationalist groups—differences which, in fact, exist only in names—and we hope the leaders of the different parties will strive to arrive at a common workable programme on the main lines indicated by Lala Lajpat Rai.

Congress and Total Prohibition: We whole-heartedly support the suggestion made by Mr. C. Rajagopalachar in the course of his communication to the Swarajya, Madras, that "the Congress which now controls election and Council work should devise means to compel legislation totally prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants and call for the preparation of the Budget on that basis." He adds that not twenty years but at once must be the objective, and a Challenge Budget should be prepared on the basis of No-Drink-Revenue and the country agitated from one end to the other over such an election programme. Mr. Rajagopalachar administers a mild rebuke to the present leaders of the Congress when he says that the Congress is now living on its past capital of service rendered. That even a no-changer of the first order like Mr. C. Rajagopalachar has been moved to make a suggestion which is tantamount to the approval of the programme outlined by Lalaji, namely, utilising the Councils for constructive work, confirms the view we have often expressed that such a programme is the best means of ensuring the solidarity of the Congress movement. In this particular instance, however, there is no question of party, for the debate on prohibition resolution in the Assembly has made it perfectly clear that there is not a single non-official Indian who is not in favour of Total Prohibition. The suggestion, therefore, deserves consideration not only by Congress members but also by other parties who are no less keen on the demand to rid India of the curse of the drink evil.

Indian Shipping Industry: The speech which Mr. Narottam Morarjee delivered the other day as President at the annual meeting of the Scindia Steam Navigation Company, is a sad commentary on the policy followed by the Government of India with regard to the shipping industry in India which has to struggle against heavy odds. It is now almost two years since the Mercantile Marine Committee submitted its report, but Government have not given effect to any of its recommendations. It is much to be regretted that Government, instead of themselves taking the initiative, should have postponed on the plea of want of time two non-official Bills introduced in the Indian Legislative Assembly demanding the reservation of the coasting trade to Indian-owned vessels and the abolition of the Deferred Rebates System. Government's attitude towards the recommendation of the Ackworth Committee for the appointment of a Rates Tribunal is also equally apathetic. Some of the Railways have initiated the deliberate policy of heavily reducing the railway fares from port to port with a view to kill water transport by diverting the sea traffic to the rail route. If the Railways had equally reduced the rates from the interior as from port to port, they could be credited with some solicitude for the interests of trade and commerce. For instance, the rate from Sholapur to Calcutta is Rs. 4-7-2 per maund while that between Bombay and Calcutta is Rs 1-8-0 per maund. Only a Rates Tribunal can remove such an anomalous state of things.

The Bhil Seva Mandal: In the course of his presidential address to the 3rd annual gathering of the Bhil Seva Mandal which was celebrated last week, Mr. N. M. Joshi of the Servants of India Society, Bombay, made some pertinent observations which deserve careful consideration of the Government, social workers and the general public. Mr. Joshi observed that the Bhils who number about 19 lakhs in Western India are poor, ignorant hill-tribes most of whom are addicted to drink and whose lot is in several respects worse than the so-called untouchables inasmuch as they are isolated from the influence of civilised life. The Bhil Seva Mandal is an institution, of which Mr. A.V. Thakkar of the Servants of India Society is the most prominent worker, which has been doing very useful service in reclaiming and reforming these semi-wild tribes by opening schools, co-operative societies and dispensaries amongst them. Mr. Joshi suggested the need of many such institutions in different localities with Bombay as the headquarters. We are sure the suggestion will be endorsed by other members of the Servants of India Society and the Social Service League, and that the efforts at improving the lot of the Bhils will receive the support they deserve from the general public.

The Fall of Medina: The capture of Medina by Ibn Saud and his followers, which has now been confirmed, has naturally caused much speculation as to the future of the holy places. For the moment, the Wahabi leader is the undisputed master of nearly the whole of Arabia, and he has succeeded in ridding the Hedjaz of non-Muslim influence by overthrowing the Hashimite family. So far as the Islamic world is concerned, the news will be received with great joy, for Ibn Saud has more than once declared that he is going to put the Hedjaz under a commission at which India, Persia and Egypt will be fully represented. This is a matter that concerns solely the Muslims, and the European powers would do well to adopt a strictly non-interfering attitude on the matter.

The Indian Taxation Enquiry Committee: We have received the third and fourth volumes containing the evidence given before the Indian Taxation Enquiry Committee. The report is yet to be published. The members of the Committee were Sir Charles Todhunter (President), the Maharaja of Burdwan, Sir Percy Thompson, Sardar Jogendra Singh, Dr. R. P. Paranjpye and Dr. L K. Hyder.

Our Overseas Supplement: The South African Indian Deputation led by Dr. Abdur Rehman, arrived here on Saturday the 12th instant. Out of the eight members who were to come out to India only seven have arrived, Mr. Ismail not being able to accompany the Deputation. The members of the Deputation are : Dr. Abdur Rehman, the President, Messrs. James Godfrey, Amod Bhayat, Sorabji Rustomji, Puther, Mirza and Pandit Bhawani Dayal. Interviewed by a press representative, Dr. Abdur Rehman said that their object in coming to India was to seek the intervention of the Government of India and the Indian nation in the unjust and cruel persecution to which Indians are subjected in South Africa. On Sunday the 13th instant, Mrs. Sarojini Naidu gave an "At Home" to the Deputation at the Taj Mahal Hotel, when a representative and cosmopolitan gathering including high officials like Executive Councillors, High Court Judges and Ministers was present. On Monday the 14th instant the members of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association had a long conference with the members of the Deputation. His Excellency the Viceroy receives the Deputation to-day. With a view to embody the Viceroy's reply to the Deputation, we hold over the publication of the Overseas Supplement which is due this week.

INDIA IN 1924-25.

The annual review of events connected with the administration of British India by Mr. Rushbrook Williams, Director of Public Information to the Government of India, for the last official year, was issued last week. Mr. Rushbrook Williams, it is announced, has accepted the post of Foreign Minister to His Highness the Maharaja of Patiala, and this, therefore, is his last review. We may, therefore, take the opportunity of bearing testimony to the great capacity which these annual reviews have revealed of their author's grasp of the main aspects of Indian life and thought, and the ability with which he has marshalled them in a narrative of which the interest is sustained from beginning to end. Of course, as an official chronicler, Mr. Rushbrook Williams cannot be expected to give an absolutely detached survey of the administration during the year. He is bound to shut his eyes to the faults and mistakes of the administration, to impute its failures to the perversity or ignorance of the people and their leaders, and generally to depict it in a pleasing and progressive light. Subject to this qualification which the reader should always bear in mind, Mr. Rushbrook Williams' annual reviews have been valuable hand-books conveying to the general reader in an easily accessible form a whole view of Indian progress from year to year. Where the administration is not directly concerned, Mr. Rushbrook Williams displays an intelligent interest and sympathy with the aspirations and activities of the Indian leaders. We hope that Mr. Rushbrook Williams' successor will be an Indian who is in close touch with public activities and who can present the Indian point of view with greater fulness than is possible to an Englishman.

"India in 1924-25" strikes us as being perhaps the best of the series both as regards the subject-matter which, of course, includes all the main heads dealt with in previous reviews, and in the maturer judgment and surer touch with which the author deals with the more controversial aspects of the year's activities. The most important chapter in the book, to our mind, is that headed "Some Fundamental Problems" in which such subjects as labour conditions, sanitation, social reform and the education of the adults are treated. The views expressed under the several heads will not commend themselves in their entirety to Indians who have an inner knowledge of them. But it must be admitted that Mr. Rushbrook Williams has succeeded as much as an outsider can in understanding the main issues involved in each case. We wish some one undertook to supplement these semi-official annual reviews by producing a treatise which supplies from the non-official point of view a corrective and amplification of the information contained in them.

THE BOMBAY SOCIAL SERVICE CONFERENCE.

The first Bombay Social Service Conference was held in Bombay last Saturday with Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas as President. The Conference was organised by the Bombay Council of Social Workers, a body that came into existence in April last in order to give frequent opportunities for social workers to meet together for exchange of views and experiences. Though we have among us many social service agencies, there is little co-ordination between them. Conferences such as this, therefore, will go a great way in bringing together workers from different parts of the Province so that they may exchange views and experiences as to the best methods of carrying on social work efficiently and economically and thus avoid overlapping in their activities. The speeches of Mr. N. M. Joshi, Chairman of the Reception Committee, and of Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas, President, extracts from which we publish elsewhere, were pitched in the right key. As Mr. Joshi remarked, the idea of social service as an expression of our desire to improve the basis of our society in such a way as to remove the disabilities and the consequent miseries from which a large number of fellow-beings suffer and to offer to them opportunities of living healthy and full life, has taken deep root amongst us. Social work is no longer looked upon as an act of charity, but is recognised as an act of justice and social readjustment. As Mr. Lalubhai pointed out, at the outset, the ideals which social workers have to keep before their minds must be clarified. We cannot draw a hard and fast line between social reform and social service. Often, they overlap. Social work which does not go deep down into the root-causes of our social evils will only result in temporary remedies. For all practical purposes, therefore, we may say with Mr. Lallubhai that social work in the largest sense includes all kinds of work done by people with the specific intention of making the world better and happier. We have no records of social work done in the pre-Buddhistic period. In the Buddhistic period and more especially in the reigns Asoka and his successors, social work and spiritual enlightenment were being carried on by the Bhuddhist monks in a missionary spirit. With the decline of Buddhism, however, we do not hear much of social work, though the Hindu Mutts that were established in various parts of the country for some time fulfilled this need. Gradually, Hinduism also lost its pristine purity and emphais was laid more upon rituals and ceremonials. Thus, the other-worldliness which the Hindu systems of philosophy preached, diverted money and land from social welfare to religious ceremonials. The village communities and castes did some social work, but it was the Brahmo and the Arya Samajists that first laid stress upon social service.

Among the many social service agencies that Bombay can boast of, the Social Service League occupies a prominent place. It was started about fifteen years ago with the object of rendering service to the poor and especially to the mill-hands. Mr. Joshi was among its early promoters and, at the outset, it was able to win the sympathy and financial support of the leading capitalists and industrialists of this City. Recently, however, owing to the active part which the labour leaders have been taking in trade unionism, several mill-owners have been constrained to stop their help to the League. It is unfortunate that this estrangement should have happened, for as Mr. Lalubhai remarked, it is a loss to both parties. While the mill-owners miss an opportunity of doing welfare work among its factory workers, the League is also handicapped in conducting and extending its work owing to want of finances. We would commend, in this connection, to our social workers the wise advice which Mr. Lalubhai gave, namely, that they should keep aloof from all activities not directly connected with their work. In Mr. Lalubhai's words, "social work as such must be above facial troubles, or labour disputes or political squabbles. It is meant as much for the poor as for the idle rich, as much for Hindus, whether Sanatanist or Samajist, as for Moslems, Parsees, Indian Christians or Anglo-Indians. It ought not to keep away any community or class of people, and to this end it should have the sympathy and support of all communities and classes of people. It can best win such support by keeping away from all party disputes and directing its energies only to its legitimate field". Mr. Lalubhai did well to point out to our social workers the example of the disinterested social work that is carried on by Christian Missionaries and the Salvation Army in this country. As it is, social work is confined only to industrial towns and almost all the important social service agencies have their headquarters only in some big towns. There is, therefore, a tendency to underrate the importance of social work in small towns and villages. Social workers will do well to follow the wise advice of Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas to utilise for social welfare propaganda the District and Taluka and Local Boards and the Village Panchayats which are themselves to some extent social service agencies inasmuch as education, medical relief and sanitation come under their purview. Hence the necessity for making a social survey in the Presidency, upon which Mr. Lalubhai laid stress, in order that the headquarters may have full information of social conditions and needs in villages and small towns. At the end, Mr. Lallubhai rightly emphasised the need for getting adequate funds before we ask our young men to devote their lives to social service in order to make provision not only for their own maintenance but also for their children, for, as he pointed out, we cannot expect an average social worker to be a Gautama Buddha or a Jesus Christ. The Conference passed a number of resolutions, chief among them being on untouchability, adult education, housing, specially condemning the one-room tenement chawls now in vogue in Bombay, unemployment, village sanitation, maternity benefits, child-welfare, prostitution and the drink-evil. One feature of the Conference was that papers from eminent social workers on Untouchability, Prison Reform, Adult Education, the Housing Problem, Village Sanitation, Unemployment and Free Legal Aid to the Poor, were presented to it in a book-form. All the papers contain a wealth of information on the burning social questions of the day and would prove of much value to a social worker. It would have been better, however, if papers were also invited on the drink-evil and prostitution and included in this valuable collection.

ASTROLOGY AND PHILOSOPHY.

I propose to make a few observations in this article about the bearing of Astrology on Philosophy, so as to throw some light on some current phrases.

Modern Western astrologers like Allen Leo and palmists like Chiero have used the phrase 'Character is Destiny', though they were able to tell many important events in the lives of many persons from thier horoscopes or palms. Chiero's experiences published in the Times of India Illustrated Weekly from Nov. 1923 to Jan. '24, show how an expert palmist was able to tell past events and predict future ones in the case of some of the leaders of society not at all superstitious. I have met with some expert Indian astrologers with equal abilities. But the Indian astrologer as a rule is not a philosopher and does not say 'Character is Destiny,' as he from his experience of astrology rather thinks that it is the Destiny or influence of the planets which moulds character to a larger extent than the other circumstances of life. Then, though he predicts events, he has equal faith in the gods and goddesses who, when propitiated in the proper way, make the burden of their devotees light enough for them to bear. Here he also depends on the great universal law of 'Give and take' for avoiding a calamity, which is sometimes ridiculed as a sort of bargaining with God. I have already referred to the great law of adjustment by which you get a thing if you deny some other. Those who say 'Character is Destiny', mean by it that it is possible for you to mould your destiny by moulding your character, 'taking your life in your hands'. They say 'God helps those who help themselves.'

The great law of Karma of our philosophy also tries to explain the inequalities and other important circumstances of this life as the effect of our Karma in past lives, but leaves the person somehow free to perform new Karma in this life for affecting our future in this life or the next. Another phrase, also commonly used, बुद्धिः कर्मानुसारिणी relates our present tendencies to our Karma, making it a little doubtful whether we are free to mould our future apart from the effect of the past. If we come to the saints, they ask us not to think of our Self or Will, but follow God's Will cheerfully, praying 'Thy Will be done,' and helping to unfold this purpose in our lives, and by our lives, thus becoming 'Co-workers with God' The Gayatri, revered as a goddess by the Hindus, is but a prayer for the awakening of our intellect and more light of knowledge. The Monist school of philosophy denies our individuality and free will by an attempt at logical reasoning, which Bergson calls vicious intellectualism And lastly, the Modern Western philosophers tell us 'Conscious Evolution' to be the thing we have to achieve in this physical life of ours, thus making it a religious or spiritual life.

From these various philosophies or views of life, it is difficult to determine the right one without some other sure guide and astrology is helpful as one. Without knowing any astrology, Prof. William James spoke of these different views as being due to the different temperaments of the thinkers, and astrology is able to explain the different temperaments as partly the effects of the good or bad planets affecting the body and the mind of the thinkers. Not only do the planets affect us by their positions at birth, but also when they pass through important houses or over the former positions of important planets. These passing influences make men talk and do things which they would not have done before and which they themselves repent of having done when the cloud has passed away. This is often seen when Saturn or Rahu is passing over the moon's degree, the moon representing the mind. Marriages performed during such bad phases are often a source of troubles. Relatives and friends often enter into bitter qurrels and are estranged as a result of a few strong words during such bad aspects. Thus the idea that even our thinking is affected by external forces led some to believe in fatalism; persons with the unfortunate experience of constant defeats in spite of their best efforts took naturally a pessimistic view; while the more fortunate ones preached the gospel of taking the life in their own hands. The Gita preaches the doctrine of doing our part in life without caring for its fruit, without satisfactorily explaining why a person appears to do things sometimes as if compelled by some force against his wish. It is one thing to say that we should not be disheartened by our failures or elated by successes, keeping our mind on the spiritual benefits of our very exertions. But it does not touch the point at issue, viz., how far a man is free to choose his ideal and act according to it.

The philosophy that astrology teaches is this. Every person is a soul or spirit in essence, clothed or covered up by the physical body in order to live in the physical world. The body will be affected by the physical forces of the world and the spirit has to fight against and overcome them when they trouble and try to disintegrate the body. Thus the struggle for existence is not a physical law but the first and last ideal of every conscious or unconscious being. The world is a school where everybody is afforded a chance of realizing and developing our real self, whatever the external ciscumstances be. Thus the spiritual life begins with the control of our desires for mere pleasures of the body and ends when one has conquered Death, our last enemy, by going unmoved through most of the vicissitudes of life during the full span of a century or more. Astrology is useful to lead this life of control as it tells us the strong and weak points of our body and the forces which are liable to affect it, as well as the time of their action. Thus astrology helps us to know ourselves better and forearms us by forewarning. Only a man with such a knowledge about his body as well as its circumstances can take his life in his own hands, and hold on against the passing storm. He only will be able to say with Tukaram: 'I shall not leave my path whatever happens to me.' It is possible to live such a life without knowing astrology, but with its knowledge we shall be less tempted to complain about our misfortunes in an hour of depression, as Tukaram and other saints have done in a sorrowing mood, when they felt themselves to be far from God's presence in spite of their best efforts to keep them in their hearts. Then astrology will be of help in removing our pride, which affects us now and then even in our spiritual life. Will it not take away most of our pride about self-sacrifice or earnestness, if we read in astrological books these things mentioned as the result of some particular position of some planet in our horoscopes.

Thus the real practical and important point in philosophy or in life is how to awaken the spirit to a consciousness of the real nature of this life and the thing to be achieved here. A person is born in this life as an unconscious and helpless being. The body during its growth is affected by the circumstances of life, and a person beginning life with a body-consciousness is apt to seek the pleasures of the body for their own sake. Then the pleasure-loving individual begins to learn a little self-control in order to avoid the illnesses and miseries of life. And astrology will teach a man self-control better than any other philosophy, because it can tell him beforehand the time and the probable nature of the misery, and thus prepare him to go through it without any fear. A few such experiences of self-control can alone give him a spiritual consciousness and awaken him to the ideal spiritual life. Formerly when astrology was used to its full benefits, bringing forth children was considered as a sacred duty. The astrologers advised the parents in this matter with a view to give the child a better set-off in life as far as the planetary forces are concerned. The medical men advised the parents to give the child a better physical and mental heredity. Thus sex control, the greatest self-control, was taught from different points of view of conserving the creative force of the body for longevity as well as for increasing the intellectual creative faculties, not only during the life of the student, but also during the married life.

Thus it will be seen that astrology has an important bearing on philosophy and religion, and it is on account of this that the religious ceremonies based on astrology have survived to this day in spite of the high talk of different philosophies, and have a hold on all classes of people. And a proper understanding of astrology will alone help to bring about the unity and harmony of all mankind and also help to remove many of the social curses of modern life.

THE PUNJAB NATIONAL MISSIONARY SOCIEY.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

You might have heard of a Society known as the National Missionary Society. It has its branches in almost all the provinces of India. Avowedly it is a Christian body. I do not know about its work anywhere else except in the Punjab. So far as the Punjab branch is concerned, the word "national" is a misnomer; and if to further one's own interest comes within the purview of missionary work, it is by all means a missionary society. Its aims are to propagate the gospel of Christ, but it is doing nothing of the sort, and has, therefore, made itself the laughing-stock of foreign missionary bodies. The Punjab branch is notorious for its unchristian actions,

The outlook of its workers does not go beyond the walls of their own homes. These are hopelessly behind time and are not in touch with the nation-building process. Every time they make an attempt to say something, they betray their ignorance and lack of knowledge of the real facts. But they must have their say. It is best for them to keep their peace, for by resorting to silence their faults will at least remain hidden. I can quote instances after instances to prove what I have stated above. For my purpose here, I just mention one fact which has recently come to my notice.

In the September number of the Qasad, the Urdu monthly journal, through the medium of which the deeds of the society are revealed, there is an editorial note under the heading "The Hopes of Hindus regarding Christians." The learned editors—for there are two—radiate their wisdom by referring to the Indian Social Reformer as "the English journal of the Hindus." The allusion is to one of your "leaderettes" and a rejoinder to the latter by the Epiphany of Calcutta. The capable editors of the Qasad, for reasons best known to them, have not given the date of the issues either of the Reformer or of the Epiphany, and therefore, I am not in a position to quote your own words. It seems from the note of the Qasad that you remarked that one day Indian Christians will go back to the protection of Hinduism. Then follows the translation of the lengthy comments of Epiphany. I am surprised to see that even to-day there are some people among educated classes of India who look upon the Reformer as a 'Hindu journal'. That is a sufficient indication of the amount of interest the Indian Christians of the N. M. S., Punjab are taking in national affairs. The Reformer which has been doing excellent national work of every description on non-sectarian and non-communal basis for the last thirty-five years, is dubbed as a 'Hindu journal' by the Punjab National Missionary Society. If it is through ignorance, I sympathise with the editors, who need a little coaching for the work, but if it is otherwise, I believe it is a most mischievous attempt to misrepresent the Reformer in the eyes of the Punjab Christians in general, and to disintegrate the national unity for which it has been striving all along its life.

In the last session of the Legislative Assembly, Dr. S. K. Datta, the Indian Christian representative, referred to his community as the "Qualitative and Quantitative" section of the Indian population. I beg to draw his attention to the fact that in the Punjab National Missionary Society section of the "quality" has developed symptoms of deterioration, and I hope that he will have time to look to it before mortification sets in.

Bombay, Yours etc.,
17th November 1925. A CHRISTIAN.

[The Editor of this journal is certainly a Hindu and we do not see any objection to its being called a Hindu organ though orthodox Hindus will, we fancy, warmly repudiate that description.—Ed. I.S.R.]

THE HINDU MAHASABHA.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

In your journal of the 5th instant, writing about the Hindu Mahasabha, you remark:

"These two religions (Christianity and Islam) are proselytising religions from the very first, and . . . they (the Hindus) have no right to complain if Islam and Christianity, following their traditions, carry on their propaganda among Hindus"

Now, Sir, you cannot be unaware of the fact that Buddhism and Jainism were proselytising religions; that Sankara nearly drove away Buddhism out of India not by carrying out among his own disciples your advice of internal reformation but by conversion, relentless conversion of people of other faiths. Here, Sir, I think you have tradition in the light of which you will kindly revise your advice.

Suppose there is no tradition to follow—what then? Are we to allow the robber to carry on his traditional robbery while we sit with folded hands? For defend ourselves, we must not as there is no tradition to follow. Why on earth, I ask you in the name of fairness, should the Hindus not carry on proselytising work? It is the love, Sir, as Mr. Kelkar so pathetically put it, of the desire to live, that prompts us to take to proselytisation. Hindus do not desire to become extinct by absorption into other religions. Internal reform is, of course, necessary and has already begun. But proselytising work will go on so long as other religions go on with their aggressive propaganda.

Santa Cruz. Yours etc,
14th December 1925. KRISHNA.

REGISTRATION OF MARRIAGES.

A Bombay Government Press Note states:—At the last session of the Legislative Council Mr. Noor Mahomed's Bill for the compulsory registration of marriages was introduced and read for the first time. Mr. Noor Mahomed in his statement of objects and reasons says:—

"The object of the Bill is to have an authenticated record of marriages for the purpose of production, whenever required in a Court Law. The absence of such an authorised record often creates difficulties, whenever the fact of marriage is disputed and in a way facilitates the commission of matrimonial offences or affords facilities to such offenders to escape the consequences of their acts. It will also prevent bogus claims of marriages being set up. It is a well-recognised principle of law that whenever an event creates a legal right status or obligation, an authentic record in the shape o registration is generally kept. Thus births and death are registered, because both these events either create or destroy particular rights or obligations. There is nc reason why a similar record should not be kept fo another event, viz., a marriage, which also creates important rights, status and obligations. In cases of enticing away married women, adultery, bigamy and other matrimonial suits, the fact of a legal marriage is the most important and relevant fact in issue; and very often the parties find it most difficult to prove or disprove it by means of oral testimony or some unauthenticated and unreliable record. This difficulty has often resulted in grave miscarriage of justice and has prevented many people from getting their just grievance redressed. In many localities it has led to the commission of murders and other serious crimes. It has also afforded opportunities and temptations to litigants to set up fabricated and false testimony. If compulsory registration were enforced, these difficulties and drawbacks both of the parties as well as of Courts, would be obviated. Besides this, compulsory registration would not entail any hardship or inconvenience on the public as the Local Board, consisting of the representatives of the people, could be trusted to make most convenient and suitable arrangements for such registration"

The Bill (No. XX of 1925 "The Bombay Local Boards Amendment Act") was published in the Bombay Government Gazette of the 10th September last. All those who are interested in the question are invited to submit their opinions on the Bill to the Secretary, the Legislative Council, Bombay, before 15th February next.

BOMBAY SOCIAL SERVICE CONFERENCE.

The first session of the Bombay Social Service Conference was held on Saturday the 12th instant with Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas as President. Mr. N. M. Joshi, Chairman of the Reception Committee, in the course of his speech welcoming the delegates said:

It is for the first time that the social workers in the different parts of this Province are being invited in a Provincial Conference to discuss some important social questions. Social service activities of various aspects have been conducted in this country and in our Province for many years, and if we take a broad survey of the field we may find that though the progress is not as fast as we may desire, it is also not very small. The idea of social service as an expression of our desire to improve the basis of our society in such a way as to remove the disabilities and the consequent miseries from which a large number of fellow-beings suffer, and to offer to them opportunities of living healthy and full life, has taken a deep root among the people and is being expressed in the form of the establishment of many institutions which we see around us and also in the form of various kinds of non-institutional individual work. As years pass on, the work is being specialised and at the same time its scope is being broadened covering new ground step by step. Moverover, what is more important still is that the principles which are the foundation of such work and the institutions are being more clearly and truly perceived. The social work is no longer an act of charity, but is recognised as an act of justice and social re-adjustment.

I need hardly state here that this Conference has been organised by the Bombay Council of Social Workers, a body that has come into existence since April last in order to give frequent opportunities for social workers in Bombay to meet together for exchange of views and experiences, to take a survey of the work actually done in different fields of social service and of the need for its further extension and to act as a permanent organisation to hold conferences from time to time. The formation of councils of social workers in cities like Poona and Ahmedabad should not also be delayed. These councils of social workers are expected to survey the field already covered by social service institutions. In India we have not yet attempted social survey of any cities or towns. I hope this deficiency will soon be removed. These councils and even conferences should make suggestions for the co-ordination of activities in each field so as to avoid overlapping.

The Presidential Address.

Mr. Lalubhai Samaldas then delivered the presidential address extracts from which we print below:—

As this is the first meeting of its kind, it is right that we should clarify our views regarding the ideals to be kept in mind by social workers in the Presidency. Social work in the largest sense includes "all kinds of work done by people with the specific intention of making the world better and happier." The kind of social work to organize which we have met here today, is on different lines from similar work carried on in ancient or mediæval India. We have no records of social work being done in pre-Buddhistic period. In the Buddhistic period and more especially in the reigns of Asoka and his successors, social work—education, medical relief and spiritual enlightenment—was being carried on by Monks who worked in a missionary spirit. There is very little mention of similar work being done in the post-Buddhistic period. The need for an all-India organization for social work was perhaps not felt in these latter times, partly on account of India being divided into small congeries of States and partly on account of the growth of village communities which made themselves responsible for this kind of work for each and all the individuals living in the village. As Hindu society became split up into castes and sub-castes, each of these sub-divisions began to look after persons belonging to it and in proportion to the greater attention paid by a caste to its members, less attention was paid to those outside the caste.

As Hinduism began to lose its pristine purity, and greater stress began to be laid by the later religious teachers on ceremonials and worship of the different Deities, kings and rich persons began to endow temples with lands and moneys for religious worship and consequently the flow of money was diverted from social welfare to religious ceremonials. The other-worldliness of most of the Hindu systems of philosophy and religious sects led to the same result. The village communities and castes did something in this direction, but till the Arya Samajists and to a smaller extent the Brahmos linked social work with religious missionary work, no other Hindu religious sect in recent times had tried to use the missionary spirit which is latent in most of us for social work.

The Social Service League of Bombay was started about fifteen years ago with the object of rendering service to the poorer classes of people of Bombay. As the majority of such people live by manual labour, the League began its work in labour areas. The promoters and chief amongst them, the Chairman of the Reception Committee, Mr. N. M. Joshi, were able to win the sympathy and achieve support of some of the enlightened capitalists and industrialists of this city. From the donations received from these gentlemen, various activities were carried on in Mill areas and large public halls and institutes built for workmen. During the last few years on account of some of the prominent members of the League taking part in trade union activities and working for the organisation of labour in this City, the movement has lost the support of these gentlemen who had come forward a few years back to assist the League with finances for the purpose of doing social welfare work for the workers in those Mills. It is difficult to say now as to how far this attitude of the leading capitalists to the City will affect the social service movement carried on by the League. Perhaps the loss will be to both parties. While the Mill-owners will miss the advantage of having the assistance of an organised body to carry on welfare-work among factory workers, the League will feel the want of finance in conducting and extending its work.

This split raises the important question whether social workers should not keep aloof from all activities not connected with their work. Social work as such must be above racial troubles, or labour disputes or political squabbles. It is meant as much for the poor as for the idle rich, as much for Hindus whether Sanatanist or Samajist as for Moslems, Parsees, Indian Christians or Anglo-Indians. It ought not to keep away any community or class of people, and to this end it should have the sympathy and support of all communities and classes of people. It can best win such support by keeping away from all party disputes and directing its energies only to its legitimate field. That is the spirit in which social welfare work is carried on by Christian Missionaries and the Salvation Army. The Ramkrishna Mission has shown that religious activities can be linked on to social work and it will be for our association to decide if any religious ground-work is necessary for this purpose.

It is almost a truism to say that a social survey must precede a practical social welfare programme. If we want to extend our activities to the whole of the Presidency, it is essential that at least we at the headquarters must have definite and sufficient information about social conditions and needs in the villages and towns. If the work of investigation is carried on through organizations like the Co-operative Societies, or through Village Panchayats when they are established, to a large extent, it will not be difficult to get sufficient data for our purpose.

At present sanitation, education and medical relief in villages come within the scope of Taluka Local Boards and these in their turn are supervised by District Local Boards. Both propaganda and actual social effort, we must carry on our work through the District and Taluka Local Boards. This will enable us to get first-hand information about local conditions and will at the same time prevent unnecessary expenditure of money and energy by having to do the same work over again.

Among the subjects selected for discussion at this Conference one of the most important is the removal of untouchability. Although technically it is a Hindu problem, really it is a problem which, if not solved in a humanitarian spirit of brotherliness, is bound to cause trouble amongst all communities. We want to remove untouchability not because we want the support of these communities in political contests with other communities, but because we think that it is a standing blot on Hinduism and also on the fair name of the country.

The housing problem is more or less a problem of the cities, especially industrial cities, where there is congestion on account of the influx of population to meet the growing demands of industries. That problem may, for practical purposes, be divided into the problem of providing housing accommodation (1) for manual labourers and (2) for the middle classes, especially what are known as the lower middle class, that is clerks, artizans and other persons of limited means. It is the duty of local bodies and also of Government to see that sufficient housing facilities are available for the labour population; and in providing these facilities they have every right to count upon the assistance of the Industries. As regards the middle classes in general, useful work is being done in this direction through the help of the co-operative movement.

Having not been inside a prison for a number of years, and having never gone there as an inmate, it is not possible for me to make suggestions for prison reform with much authority. Political prisoners and others have through the press and on the platform shown how the powers of the Jail authorities are abused. They have also referred to certain existing malpractices within the premises of Jails. The recommendations of the last Jail Commission have not yet been adopted by Government in their entirety and in view of the recent action of the Punjab Government in appointing a Committee to make enquiries into the alleged mal-treatment of some of the prisoners in Jail in the Punjab, our Government may also well follow that example and appoint a Jail Reform Committee as soon as possible.

The problem of unemployment is really an All-India problem, that is, a correct solution of the problem can be found by all Provinces co-ordinating their activities so that the surplus population of one province or district can be successfully induced to migrate to another, Province or district where there is scarcity of labour.

As regards rural unemployment it is very difficult to say anything with authority without full investigation into the subject, but there is one unquestionable fact that in dry crop area the agriculturists have very little work to do after the crops have been reaped till the beginning of the rainy season, excepting once or twice ploughing the fields. Gandhiji's cult of the Charkha, if linked with the hand-loom industry in an organised manner, will be of real help to this class of people.

Adult education may be divided into (1) the higher education of young men who have been obliged to give up their university career in order to earn a living, and (2) the education of adult illiterates or half literates in higher vernaculars and a little of English. Night schools in Bombay and the mofussil and the co-operative education classes for adults started by the late Sir Vithaldas meet to a certain extent the needs of the latter class of persons. Adult education in the sense of University extension classes was undertaken by some educationalists under the lead of Principal Mackenzie and Prof. P. A. Wadia. There is no doubt that our young men who have not had the advantages of full university education are anxious to enlarge their intellectual horizon, and if they are provided with facilities for doing so under capable guidance, they will, even at some inconvenience to themselves, take advantage of such facilities. There are many other fields of social welfare work which might be undertaken as our Association gains in strength both as regards men and money. I am of opinion that we must obtain funds or promises of funds before we can start our work in right earnest and call upon young men who are full of generous instincts to devote their lives to social service. These young men may be prepared to make any sacrifice, but we have no right to ask them to sacrifice all their future prospects without making provision not only for their own maintenance, but for the education of their children. This means a large endowment fund or promises of annual contributions to the funds of the Association for say at least ten years This will form the nucleus of a permanent fund which is bound to grow if our work is appreciated.

On occasions like this when we meet with the object of organising social welfare work for all our brethren to whatever community or class of people they belong, it is advisable to do some heart-searching ourselves. Let each of us ask himself whether his social conscience is so awakened and whether he is intellectually and emotionally turned so sensitive that when he sees a glaring instance of social injustice or suffering caused, or comes across physically, intellectually or morally stunted persons, he feels strong resentment against society as such and there arises in him a sort of humiliation that he has not done his bit to remove the mal-adjustment of society which leads to suffering and anguish. Each one of us cannot be a Gautama Buddha or a Jesus Christ, but if we keep their lives of service and suffering as the ideal which inspires our efforts and if we carry on our humble social endeavours in the same spirit, there is no reason why we should not succeed in making this world a better place to live in, at least for those who are coming after us.

THE HINDU MAHASABHA.

Resolutions.

On Sunday the 6th inst. the Conference met at 2 p. m. under the presidentship of Lala Lajpat Rai. At the outset, the President moved a resolution, expressing the sense of the great loss sustained by the country by the untimely deaths of Mr. C. R Das, Sir Surendranath Bannerjea, Mr. Jai Narain Desai and Dr. Sir Ramkrishna Bhandarkar. The resolution was passed in silence.

Necessity for Hindu Sabha.

Mr. N. C. Kelkar then moved the following resolution :—

"That this Conference of the Hindus of the Western Presidency including Maharashtra, Gujrat, Hyderabad, Cutch, and Karnatak confirms the resolution of the Hindu Maha Sabha held at Calcutta in April, 1925, as regards the desirability and necessity of establishing Hindu Sabhas all over India for the consolidation and protection of the Hindu community and the furtherance of its legitimate interests, and calls upon the Hindus of this Presidency to take on hand and complete the work of organising the Hindus of this Presidency on the lines laid down in the Constitution of the Mahasabha without delay."

In moving the resolution Mr. Kelkar said that at present they felt it a great necessity for furthering the cause of the Sangathan movement. Unfortunately he found that there were some Hindus, even very respectable Hindus, who deprecated the movement, because, they thought that it was actuated by malice and hatred towards the Mahomedan community. As a matter of fact, the Sangathan movement stood for the promotion of good-will; in short it adopted the policy of "Live and let live." That was all about the movement. He did not understand what crime the Hindus had committed that they would not strive for the promotion and preservation of the Hindu Society. If the Mahomedan and Christian communities did not think it desirable to drop their programme of conversion, why should they (the Hindus) be asked to put a stop to their activities on the same lines? Why should the Mahomedan and Christian communities alone carry on their propaganda for conversion in the country, he asked. It was, therefore, suicidal not to organise the Hindu Society by strengthening the Sangathan movement. Those who were opposed to the movement—which was quite harmless—were prompted by the sinister motives of taking advantage of their unpreparedness.

Concluding, Mr Kelkar said that the movement was primarily set on foot for the purpose of promoting the physical, social and mental progress of the Hindu Society. With regard to the depressed classes, it should be borne in mind that their status should be ameliorated. It was their bounden duty to consider the untouchables as their brethren, and as such, they should not be left in the lurch. If they neglected the progress of the untouchables it was likely that they would go out of the fold of Hinduism. He hoped, therefore, they would do their best for the uplift of the depressed classes.

Mr. U. K. Oza and Mr. S. V. Phadnis then supported the motion.

Swami Shraddhanand, supporting the resolution, said that the Sangathan movement had been started in the country for the last three years. While some of their countrymen were opposed to the movement, there were others who had welcomed it with great sincerity. Some of them believed that the movement had been started mainly for the purpose of converting the Moslems and Christians. Now it was impossible for them to satisfy such critics. The movement had been established in the country with a view to inspire confidence in the Hindus with regard to the solidarity of their religion. The point at issue was that the Hindus were asked, in accordance with the objects of the movement, to organise the Hindu Society. Unfortunately there were in their midst no less than a thousand disintegrating forces at work. There were different parties in the Hindu community, which were quarrelling among themselves. For instance, in Madras, the non-Brahmins were opposed to the Brahmins. These people did not seem to understand the laudable objects of the Sangathan movement. While in Southern India, he convinced these parties of the necessity of following the Sangathan movement, which protected the Hindu Society.

Concluding, Swami Shraddhanand pointed out that the Sangathan movement would have achieved its object, if the untouchables were treated like human beings. They should treat the untouchables as their brethren. It was no use merely passing the resolution if it was not given effect to by them. Unless and until they sank their minor differences, the Hindu Society would be considerably deteriorated. He was a firm believer in the Sangathan movement, which alone would protect their interests.

The resolution, on being put to the vote, was carried unanimously.

Problem of Untouchables.

Pandit Nekhiram Sharma then moved a resolution asking for the removal of the disabilities under which untouchables suffered, such as their non-admission to schools and temples. Pandit Nekhiram said that they had now reached a stage when the Hindu community was known for its manifold differences. He was of opinion that if they did not protect the interests of the Hindu society, the latter would surely disappear in a short time and they would be nowhere in the country. The Mahasabha, therefore, considered it to be its religious duty to persuade them to sink all their differences They should also do their utmost to educate the untouchables, who were part and parcel of the Hindu community.

Mr. Mavji Govindji Sheth, Rao Bahadur C. V. Vaidya and Mr. Jamnadas Dwarkadas supported the resolution. Mr. R. V. Vanamale, a member of the depressed classes, also supported the resolution.

QUESTION OF RECONVERSION.

Swami Sharvanand next moved the following resolution:

"In the opinion of this Conference it is perfectly legitimate and desirable that Hindus converted to other religions and desirous of being re-admitted into Hindu Society and such non-Hindus as may desire to accept Hindu religion and to be taken into Hindu Society may be so admitted and taken on such terms as Prayaschitta and Suddhi as may be laid down by the particular sect or denomination which they desire to join and which is prepared to accept them."

In moving the resolution the Swami said that now-a-days Hinduism was being considered as a proselytising religion. The influence of the Hindu religion was at one time far and wide. The inner truth of Hinduism was irresistible Unfortunately they had now waged a great war in the Hindu Society. The latter had practically closed the doors of ingress, and that was the reason why the number of Hindus was dwindling day by day. Now the time had come when they should look round and organise the Hindu Society. They should open the doors of their religion to those who were outside Hinduism, in order to increase its prestige.

Mr. Chilrao Shastri seconded the resolution which was then put to the vote and declared carried.

PHYSICAL CULTURE.

On the motion of Dr. B. S. Moonjee, the following resolution was next passed:

"The Conference is of opinion that the physical condition of the community requires immediate attention and that for that purpose institutes of physical culture be opened and maintained and that other necessary and desirable encouragement be given to the physical development of boys and girls and even adult men and women."

On Monday the 7th inst. the Conference met at 5 p m. and among the important resolutions passed are the following:

1. "In the opinion of this Conference it is pre-eminently desirable in the best interests of the Hindu community, religious, moral, social and political, that all disabilities imposed on the women of the community by the custom of purdah be forthwith removed; that full and free provision be made for their education in all branches of human knowledge; that monogamy be enforced; and that the marriageable ages of boys and girls be raised to 25 and 16 respectively."

2. "This Conference most earnestly draws the attention of the community to the extremely deplorable condition of Hindu widows and to the hardships to which they are subjected by their own people and community and calls upon all Hindus of all sects, denominations and castes to improve and alleviate their condition in every way possible and according to their religious beliefs and faiths."

3. "This Conference urges the absolute necessity of immediately opening shelter homes for such Hindu women as are stranded, unprotected and unprovided for by their own relatives for any reason whatever, where facilities may be provided to them for such education as may be needed for their economic independence and moral uplift. And further that one such Rescue Home may be immediately opened in Bombay and for starting this, the following committee (named at the Conference) be appointed.'

4. "That with a view to bring about greater solidarity in the Hindu Community, it is desirable that the four "Varnas" of the Hindus should make every effort to bring greater unity amongst them by gradually amalgamating as far as possible the various sub-castes into which the four Varnas are at present split up."

5. "During the period communal representation continues to be accepted as the basis of election to the legislatures in India, this Conference supports the resolution of the 1st Sindh Provincial Hindu Conference demanding an increase of representation in the Bombay Legislative Council for the non-Moslem population of Sindh."

THE SCHOOL BOARDS' CONFERENCE BOMBAY.

Messrs. V. T. Joshi, and D. G. Mulherker, the Hony. Secretaries of the School Boards' Conference write to us:—A preliminary meeting of the Chairmen of School Boards—District and Municipal—was held in Bombay at the Servants of India Society, on Sunday 22nd November to consider the proposals from the Thana and Bandra Municipal School Boards regarding the desirability of holding a conference of all School Boards with the object of considering in all its aspects the question of introducing Free and Complusory Primary Education with a view to make it a success. Principal K. R. Kanitker, Chairman of the Poona District School Board, presided over the meeting. It was decided to hold a conference in Bombay on the 5th, 6th, and 7th, February 1925. The Conference is open to all the members of the Legislature—Provincial as well as Central—members of the District Local Boards, Taluka Local Boards, Village Panchayts, Bombay Municipal Corporation, Municipalities, Bombay Schools Committee, District School Boards, Municipal Schools Boards and persons interested in primary education. The fees of a delegate and a member of the Reception Committee are Re. 1 and Rs. 5 respectively. Enrollment forms can be obtained from the Hony: Secretaries, Mr. D. C. Mulherker, B. A., Chairman, Thana Municipal School Board, or Mr. V. T. Joshi, B.A., LL. B., Chairman, Bandra Municipal School Board, or from the Hony. Treasurer, Mr. B. N. Motiwalla B. A., LL. B., Chairman, Schools Committee, Bombay Municipality.

The organisers request persons interested in Primary Education to enroll themselves as either members of the Reception Committee or delegates of the Conference. The Reception Committee meets on Monday, the 21st December 1925 to fix the whole programme of the Conference.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Indian Civil Services Bill: The I. C. S. Bill has been passed without any amendment by the Standing Committee to which it was referred after the second reading in the House of Commons, during which the Labourite motion for rejection was defeated by 241 votes to 77.

The Skeen Committee: The Indian Sandhurst Committee held its first public sitting on Tuesday last at Delhi. Pandit Motilal and Mr. Jinnah have joined the Committee. Among the first witnesses examined by the Committee were the Engineer-in-Chief and the Educational Commissioner with the Government of India, who opined that it was impossible to get the same training in India at any institution as is available in the time-honoured institutions of England.

New Ruler of Persia: For sometime past speculation has been rife as to whether Persia will follow her neighbour, Turkey, in establishing a Republic. All such speculations are once for all set at rest by the action of the constituent Assembly in unanimously appointing Reza Khan Pehlevi as King of Persia. The rule will remain in the Pehlevi dynasty, his eldest son becoming the Crown Prince.

Education of Depressed Classes. The Bengal Council at its recent session adopted a motion recommending to the Government that three lakhs of rupees be earmarked every year in the Educational Budget for the primary education of the depressed classes.

A Widow Marriage at Benares: On 24th November 1925 the marriage took place in vedic style of Sr. Kishori Devi, a Kshatriya girl in the Vidhava Ashram with Mr. Vishvanath Simha of Jalalaganj, Dt. Jaunpore. Many sympathisers were present and the elder brother of the bridegroom, Mr. Avadha Narayan Simha contributed Rs. 20 towards the Ashrama fund. Mr. Kunj Behari acted as priest.

Congress Bulletin : The Publicity Commissioner writes : The public are hereby requested not to address their money orders, insured or registered correspondence to the office-bearers of the Reception Committee or Secretaries of various Sub-committees in their names but only write the name of the office they hold, such as —the Secretary of such and such Committee. This will save many unnecessary complications.

The Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha. Reports of 164 widow marriages have been received from the different branches and co-workers of Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha, Lahore (Punjab) throughout India in the month of November 1925. The total number of marriages held in the current year, i. e., from 1st January 1925 to the end of November 1925 has reached 2,367 as detailed below: i. According to caste. Brahmin 401, Khatri 475, Arora 516, Aggarwal 156, Kaisth 68, Rajput 164, Sikh 212, Misc. 375, Total 2367. ii. According to Provinces : Punjab & N. W. F. P. 815 Sind 37, Delhi 39, U. P. 322, Bengal 64, Madras 23, Bombay 11, C. P. 7, Rajputana 14, Hyderabad Deccan 5, Assam 30, Total 2367. iii. Voluntary donation received during the month is Rs. 229 and total during the year Rs. 1600-14-0.

The "Widows' Champion" To meet the demand of the Hindu English knowing public the 'Widows' Champion" (Vidhva Sahaik) an English monthly organ of the Vidhva Vivah Sahaik Sabha, Lahore, will be started from January 1926. This is in response to the need expressed by the friends of the Widow Remarriage cause throughout India and it is expected that there will be a response all round. All information about widow remarriage among the Hindus in India, will be thankfully received. Annual subscription will be Rs. 2 payable in advance.

Seth Gordhandas Sunderdas Medical College, Bombay : A Government Press note says that the Government are pleased to direct that the Seth Gordhandas Sunderdas Medical College, Bombay, should be recognised as a fit College for the purpose of rule 6 of the rules governing the grant of scholarships to women students at Medical Schools and Colleges published with Press Note No. 3037-B, dated the 12th August 1922. Rule 6 is as follows :—" The holders of the scholarships must study for the University Degree of M. B., B.S., or the diploma of membership of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Bombay. The tenure of the scholarship will include in the case of students pursuing their studies in the Bombay Presidency the first two years at a recognised Arts College and the remaining four years at the Grant Medical College, Bombay, or any other Medical College recognised by Government.

The Hide Trade : Mahatma Gandhi writes in Young India : The hide industry of India ranks fifth in value of the products of India. The normal value of the annual export of hides is about Rs. 1,170 lakhs. Of these over Rs. 844 lakhs are exported from Calcutta. The bulk of this trade was before the war and is now in German hands. Nationalisation of tanneries means therefore not only the saving of thousands of cattle that are slaughtered for hides but the retention of hides in India which means utilisation of skilled labour in the country itself and additional wealth.

Passports to Siam : The Director of Information, Bombay, writes : Indians desirous of migrating to Siam via Burma or the Straits Settlements are again warned that they should provide themselves with passports before leaving India. Passports will not be given to them by the Government of Burma or the Government of the Straits Settlements without reference to the Government of India and inquiries from the local authorities must take time. Unless therefore such passengers obtain passports before starting on their journey from India they run the risk of undergoing considerable inconvenience and expense

Age of Consent Legislation in Morvi : The Morvi Durbar have passed fresh legislation so as to make certain changes in the existing criminal law of the State, especially as regards the age of consent. Under the new Legislation, it is laid down that any one not being the husband of a girl below sixteen years of age having sexual intercourse with her shall be held to have committed the offence of rape notwithstanding the consent of the girl. It is further laid down that any one having criminal intimacy with any unmarried girl or widow will be held to have committed the offence of adultery.

NOTES

Punjab University Convocation Address: There is much to be said for the practice followed in the Madras and Punjab Universities of inviting distinguished men other than the Chancellor and the Vice-Chancellor to deliver the annual Convocation address. The address at the last Convocation of the Punjab University was delivered by Nawab Hydar Nawaz Jung Bahadur, Finance Minister in H. E. H. the Nizam's Government. Mr. Hydari, to use the name by which he is best known to a large circle of friends, has always taken a keen interest in education and has been, as he said in his address, a student all his life. In the Hyderabad State, he has done much to place education on a sound and progressive footing. He was chiefly instrumental in the establishment of the Oosmania University which is the first experiment in this country in imparting higher education through the medium of a language other than English. Mr. Hydari's address, therefore, was full of observations embodying his experience in many spheres of the needs of higher education in India. He suggested that a Royal Commission should be appointed to investigate the Indian educational problem. We are of opinion that the main features of the problem are sufficiently well-known. The Saddler Commission, although it was specifically intended for the Calcutta University, produced a report which covers nearly all the main issues of Indian education. The great obstacle to the expansion, and improvement in the quality, of education in the country is want of funds and a Royal Commission cannot help us in this direction. The Bombay University Reforms Committee, for instance, has made recommendations which, if carried out in their entirety, would go a great way towards raising the standard of University education in this Presidency. Many of these recommendations follow on the lines of the suggestions made by Mr. Hydari in his address, except in one important matter, viz., the medium of instruction in the University. The University Reforms Committee, after much consideration, came to the conclusion that English is the only possible medium of instruction and that there were insuperable difficulties in the way of substituting any vernacular for it in the University stage. Even in the proposed University of Poona, English will be the medium of instruction. There can be no two opinions as to the fact that a scholar's mother-tongue is the natural medium of instruction for him, and a great deal has been done in recent years to emphasise the importance of promoting vernacular studies in the University. But, for the present, it is not easy to make any vernacular the medium of instruction in a University in British India.

Caste in Public Service: We are surprised that Pandit Brij Nandan Prasad Misra's resolution in the U.P. Legislative Council recommending to the Government to remove all prohibitions of caste with respect to the admission of people to public services—if they are otherwise qualified—and to cancel all orders, regulations or instructions containing such prohibitions, and to order the consequent correction of the departmental manuals and other papers accordingly, has been opposed by the Government which, according to the Home Member, seems to show unusual regard to the sentiments of the people at large. The Home Member had the effrontery to arrogate to himself the right to represent public sentiment even more than the non-official elected members who were almost unanimous in demanding the removal of the retrograde restrictions. We agree with Mr. Mukandi Lal when he said that by admitting criminal tribes and the members of the depressed classes who are otherwise qualified in the police force, the service would improve rather than deteriorate. The very exclusion of certain communities from entering the police force is sufficient to create distrust, suspicion and communal prejudice in such communities. The difference which Government apparently overlooks is, as the Leader points out, between one being eligible for a post and one being entitled to it. It is strange that the Government, which not infrequently professes considerable solicitude for "the dumb millions of India", should have ranged itself against the removal of the unjust ban based on caste. We are glad that, in spite of the Government's reactionary attitude, the resolution was carried with no dissentient voice from any non-official member.

The Ramakrishna Mission Sevashram, Kankhal, Hardwar: The above Sevashram which has been doing excellent work in the cause of suffering humanity during the last twenty-four years of its existence, needs no introduction to our readers. The report for the year 1924, a copy of which we have received, records a distinct improvement in its activities. The total number of persons who obtained relief during the period ranged above 20,000. One remarkable feature is that relief was administered to all, irrespective of caste, creed or colour. Hindus, Mahomedans, Fakirs, Christians, Chamars, Kanjers and Domes and sweepers, all alike obtained relief. In regard to hospital relief, a comparative survey will show that the work has progressed from 41 Indoor and 178 Outdoor patients in the first year of its existence, to 731 Indoor and 20,040 Outdoor patients during the year under review. A free night school attached to the Sevashram is being maintained with a view to impart primary education to the children of the local depressed classes. There is also a small library attached to the Sevashram for the benefit of voluntary workers and Sadhus. The Sevashram also did good work in relieving suffering caused by the Ganges floods. Consequent on the extending of its activities, the Sevashram feels the need of workers' quarters, a building for the Night School for the depressed classes, a guest house or Dharamsala, a Rest House for friends and relations of patients, a permanent Endowment Fund, and resources for its general equipment and maintenance. The expenditure, on the whole, is likely to average about Rs. 2 lakhs, and we would cordially endorse the appeal of the Sevashram for funds to the consideration of the sympathetic and charitable public. The needs of the Sevashram ought to be urgently attended to, for the Kumba Mela, the great religious festival that takes place every twelve years there, comes off in the spring of 1927 when lakhs of Sadhus and pilgrims from all parts of India will throng to the place.

Education of Depressed Classes in Madras: We are glad to see that facilities for the education of depressed classes are being extended more and more in various provinces. We recently noticed the success of the wise policy followed by the Bombay Government in regard to the matter. The report of the Director of Public Instruction, Madras, for the last year on the education of depressed classes in schools under public management, shows a distinct improvement as compared with previous years. The total number of children of the depressed classes admitted into schools under public management in 1924-25 was 12,942, as against 8552 in 1923-24, the increase being nearly 50 per cent. Government is also steadily following the policy of having schools under public management located in places which are freely accessible to all classes of people. In Godavari District, it is stated, in the case of schools held in rented buildings, the landlords are being required to give a statement in writing to the effect that they have no objection to the admission of children of the depressed classes. We hope other Districts in the Province will also follow this wise policy. We are glad to see that the Inspecting Officers are doing propaganda work to remove the prejudices against the admission of children of depressed classes to schools.

Female Education in Bihar and Orissa: In his annual report on the progress of education in the province of Bihar and Orissa, the Director of Public Instruction records that, for the first time for some years, he is able to report an increase not only in the total number of Indian girls at colleges and schools, but also in the number of girls in boys' colleges and schools as well as in girls' colleges and schools. The number of girls reading in girls' colleges and schools is now higher than at any time since the formation of the province, and Government trust no further set-back will occur. This is indeed fair progress considering that Bihar and Orissa is one of the most backward provinces in regard to female education. The obstacles to the spread of female education in that part of the country are the difficulty of finding trained women teachers and the consequent necessity for paying higher salaries to them, and the prevalence of the purdah system. So far as Government is concerned, it is understood that it is ready to provide a larger inspecting staff, and there is also a proposal to appoint a Deputy Directress of Public Instruction and to increase the number of Assistant Inspectresses of Schools by four. We hope that the public will not be slow in availing themselves of the opportunities the Government seems to be willing to provide for the advancement of female education in the province.

Russo-Turkish Treaty: The secret treaty between Turkey and Russia is an event of outstanding importance in international politics. Coming so close upon the League's decision awarding Mosul to Iraq under British mandate, the Russo-Turkish alliance is considered as Turkey's reply to the League in the same sense as it is Russia's reply to Locarno. The significance lies in the fact that by this treaty Russia recognises itself as an Asiatic power. Whatever may be the future developments of this move to consolidate the Asiatic powers, it is not a step calculated to help in promoting cordial relations between East and West.

The Late Mr. Abinash Chandra Mazumdar: Mr. Abinash Chandra Mazumdar who died on the 21st instant was a great social worker, especially in the fields of temperance and purity. He was, we believe, employed in the Railway service and had made his home in Lahore. He devoted his spare hours to work among the students and young men and, for several years, he conducted an excellent little paper called the Purity Servant. An ardent Brahmo and a deeply religious man, his memory is cherished by a large circle of friends with affection and respect.

---

The Future of Anglo-Indians: There is a distinct change in the tone of the speech made by Colonel Gidney on the eve of his leaving the British shores. The Colonel is reported to have said: "Anglo-Indians must be prepared to take their stand as a coloured race and one of the peoples of India and not as the rear rank of Europeans." Evidently, the Colonel did not meet with a good response in England for the extravagant claims he made on behalf of the Anglo-Indian community. We hope the Colonel has become wiser, but not sadder.

The Congress: The Indian National Congress opens its session at Cawnpore to-day under the presidentship of Mrs. Sarojini Naidu. The Congress week commenced on the 24th instant with the opening of the Swadeshi Exhibition by Mahatma Gandhi who reiterated his firm faith in khaddar. The All-India Congress Committee met in the afternoon and adopted the General Secretary's report after which it resolved itself into a Subjects Committee which confirmed the Patna decision regarding Congress franchise, i. e., reverting to the four-anna franchise from the yarn franchise.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, DECEMBER 26, 1925.

THE HON. MR. JADHAV ON THE NON-BRAHMIN MOVEMENT.

The Madras Non-Brahmin Confederation held its ninth session last Saturday in Madras under the presidentship of the Hon'ble Mr. Jadhav, Minister of Education in the Bombay Presidency. Mr. Jadhav's presidential address was largely a venomous attack upon Brahmins, based upon bad history and worse logic. It is a question whether a person who occupies the position of a Minister of the Crown does rightly in denouncing in public—whatever his private opinions may be—a class of the King's subjects in the way that Mr. Jadhav did in his address. But he did not stop there. He claimed Sir Leslie Wilson, the Governor of Bombay, as a supporter and sympathiser at whose instance he undertook to start the Non-Brahmin movement in Berar last year and had come to preside over the Non-Brahmin Confederation in Madras this year. The Non-Brahmin Confederation is a distinctly political body, as most of the resolutions passed clearly show. There was not a single resolution dealing with any question of social reform. If the Governor of a Province can publicly sympathise with such a movement, we do not see why the Governor of another Province should not send his greetings to a Conference of the Swaraj Party. We do not think, however, that Mr. Jadhav was fair in representing the permission given to him by the Governor to attend the two Conferences in the way in which he did. Mr. Jadhav, speaking of the movement in Berar, went so far as to suggest that a zealous Non-Brahmin officer was murderously attacked by Brahmins in the dusk of the evening and had almost lost his life. We do not know if the Brahmins who are supposed to have attacked this officer have been identified and brought to trial. We must confess that this is the first time we hear of this incident and we hope that the assailants have been apprehended and have received the punishment which was their due. We do not intend to traverse Mr. Jadhav's conclusions from his studies of the Mahabharata and the Code of Manu. He compared the penetration of the Brahmins into peninsular India to that of the Catholic and Protestant Christian missionaries in Japan, China and other Asiatic and African countries. Mr. Jadhav acknowledged by implication that there were priestly classes among the Dravidian peoples even before the Aryans came to the South, who were won over by the immigrants by promises of equal rights and status and who had no scruple to betray their own people. "It will thus be seen," he concluded this part of his address, "that the Brahmins are really responsible for dividing the Hindu society into Brahmins and Non-Brahmins." There may be something in this solecism if there were no divisions among Non-Brahmins themselves. As a matter of fact, the divisions among the Non-Brahmins are far from numerous and are more jealously guarded than among the Brahmins. Mr. Jadhav's statement that secular education was discouraged among Non-Brahmins, is in violent conflict with the testimony of responsible Englishmen to the existence about a century ago of schools in every village where instruction in reading, writing and arithmetic was given.

The fact is that Mr. Jadhav mistakes his prejudices for facts as, for instance, when he says that the Mahratta Empire was filched from the descendants of Sivaji by the Brahmin Peshwas. Major B. D. Basu, I.M.S. (Retd.) has written a book entitled "The Story of Satara" based upon original sources. In the first and introductory chapter of the book, he writes: "The Peshwas have been accused of depriving the descendants of Sivaji of power and dignity which legitimately belonged to them and of reducing them to mere puppets and of keeping them as captives. A little investigation into the matter will show how baseless these accusations are, and, if anything, the Peshwas deserve the best thanks of all for maintaining the fabric of Sivaji's Empire entire for at least a century and preventing it from crumbling into pieces which it would surely have done but for their support." Major Basu is not a Mahratta Brahmin, but a Bengali Kayasth and he has absolutely no motive to defend the Peshwa rule against imputations such as Mr. Jadhav repeated in his Madras address. The book was published two years ago by the Modern Review office, Calcutta, and is dedicated to the "people of the Deccan in whose midst I spent some of the best days of my life". Mr. Jadhav will no doubt say that this is another instance of the trick of the Brahmins and that Major Basu has been duped by their intriguing ways. As regards Mr. Jadhav's attack on the Swaraj Party as a party of Brahmins, it is necessary only to mention that of the two Bombay leaders of the Party, neither Mr. V. J. Patel, nor Mr. M. R. Jayakar, is a Brahmin. It is true that, in Madras till recently, the Swaraj Party was confined to Brahmins only, but during the last year or two, it has had a notable accession of Non-Brahmins who have become dissatisfied with the short-sighted policy of the Ministerialist Non-Brahmins. Mr. Jadhav accused a section of the Swaraj Party of seeking to obtain Ministerships. This charge would have come gracefully if Mr. Jadhav himself had been free of that guilt. Even now, it is open to him to resign his Ministership and devote himself wholly to the Non-Brahmin movement.

The Non-Brahmin movement has a mission before it, if its leaders cease to impute all their defects to the artful Brahmin and recognise that they themselves have at least as much responsibility for these as the Brahmins. Some of these defects, such as early marriage and restriction of the re-marriage of widows, it is true, have been borrowed by them from the Brahmins with the object of elevating themselves thereby in the social scale. A movement which has not the gift of introspection cannot last long. As an instance of Mr. Jadhav's wilful purblindness we may cite his complaint that Mr. C. Y. Chintamani in his presidential address to the Liberal Conference at Poona, did not make any mention of the passing away of Sir P. Theagaraja Chetty. Mr. Jadhav himself in his long introductory obituary paragraph has omitted to refer to the passing away of Sir Surendranath Banerjee—a Brahmin—who did at least as much for Indian nationalism as Sir P. Theagaraja Chetty. The key-note of Mr. Jadhav's address is its intense self-complacency and the resolute aversion to see anything good in the Brahmins. There is an old story which we may pass on to Mr. Jadhav in this connection. Abraham once unwittingly entertained under his roof an old man of 80 who, he subsequently found, had been guilty of the grossest crimes. Having regard to the strict rules of hospitality, however, he could not turn him out of the house and so he besought God for advice as to what he should do in his dilemma. We commend God's reply to Abraham to Mr. Jadhav. "Abraham," He said, "I have allowed this man to remain eighty years upon this earth notwithstanding his crimes. Why should you grudge to let him be under your roof for a few days?" Abraham took the hint and we hope Mr. Jadhav will follow his example. The Brahmin's position cannot be injured by attacks such as that of Mr. Jadhav, so long as he retains the two advantages which he possesses more than most other classes. The first is, he has reduced his material wants to a minimum. In a poor country, a man who can live on little has a decided advantage in the race of life over one whose wants are greater. The second is, that the Brahmin, man, woman and child, has a profound faith in education, and will make incredible sacrifices to get it. His total exclusion from the Government services, will, in our opinion, prove a distinct advantage to the Brahmin in the long run. No community rose to greatness through its members holding appointments in Government offices.

"THE LIFE AND TEACHING OF JESUS THE CHRIST."

(By Mr. G. Y. Chitnis.)

The "Life and Teaching of Jesus the Christ" by the Rt. Rev. Arther C. Headlam, the Bishop of Gloucester, is a very interesting and instructive book. It is one of the few able attempts that have been made during the last twenty years to meet the new situation created by "the Quest of Historical Jesus.' From a strictly critical point of view the book does not make any new contribution towards the understanding of the Gospels. It assumes all the results which the New Testament criticism has proved to be almost certain and proceeds upon the basis of those results to construct the historical picture of Jesus and yet, in the process of constructing it, it has quietly assumed certain things which cannot possibly be proved to be historical. The author exhibits at the very outset a tendency to lean more in the direction of British Imperialism than real Christianity as is seen from a passage in the Preface given below. Writing about the advance of the British army from Egypt to Palestine, Dr. Headlam remarks: "Peace has not brought all that we hoped for in the exhilaration of victory, but we may pray that the hills and the valleys where Jesus lived and taught, and His peaceful home at Nazareth, and the beautiful shores and waters of the sea of Galilee, and. Capernaum and Bethsaida, and Caesarea of sacred memory, may never again be brought under the blighting influence of Turkish and Mahomedan rule." It is not necessary to call in question the truth or the falsity of this unfortunate passage; but it is quite clear that it is likely to accentuate the bitterness and hatred which exist between the Christians and the Mohamedans, when it should be in reality the task and the duty of every one who calls himself a disciple of Jesus to bring about harmony and reconciliation between these two large sections of humanity. Further the book is dedicated "to the memory of those men of the British Empire who in the Great War laid down their lives for that holy land where Jesus lived and taught and died." I wonder why the incongruity of sending a biography of Jesus into the world with this dedication did not strike an acute thinker like Dr. Headlam. The main argument of the book seems to be intended to show that although Jesus regarded himself as the Messiah of the Jews, he disclaimed all earthly power and consistently refused to employ physical force to usher in the Kingdom of God. When he did not think it necessary to employ force even for the grand purpose of establishing the Kingdom of God on earth, it is extremely doubtful if he would ever have appreciated this recent attempt made to recover by force of arms the land of his birth.

Coming to the contents of the book itself we find that the Introduction defines the critical attitude of the author. The first five chapters are very interesting and throw light on many a teaching of Jesus which is otherwise obscure to us; but the concluding three chapters are a curious mixture of critical and dogmatic statements. At one place the author shows a remarkable insight into the critical problem, at another, he slips into an unjustifiable dogmatism, with the result that one does not find a satisfactory answer to those questions which naturally arise from a critical appreciation of the Gospels. The most important questions are these: Are the Gospels pure historical records? Are all the Gospels equally historical? If they are not, how can we determine their relative value as historical records? What is the unhistorical element in the Gospels (if there be any) due to? Connected with the historicity of the Gospels are other questions viz., was Jesus the Messiah? Did he apply the titles of the "Son of God" and the "Son of Man" to himself? If he did, in what sense did he use them? What did he mean by the term "Kingdom of God"? Did he use it in an apocalyptic sense or purely spiritual sense? We shall now see how Dr. Headlam answers these questions. He regards the first three Gospels as historical, but Mark more historical than either Matthew or Luke, with this exception that the date of the last supper as given by Mark is in Dr. Headlam's opinion improbable and therefore unhistorical. The birth-stories given in Mathew and Luke are to be understood figuratively, but the author does not tell us whether the resurrection stories also are to be taken figuratively. He is silent on the point which by the way is very convenient to a Bishop. The apocalyptic passages contained in all the Gospels are to be taken figuratively too. This method of interpreting the Gospels is quite familiar to the readers of that remarkable and far abler work, "Ecce Homo." Thus interpreted the Gospels, according to Headlam, give a consistent and coherent account of the life and teaching of Jesus. Although Jesus claimed to be the Messiah of the Jews, he did not share the current Jewish conceptions of the Messiah and His Kingdom. He claimed for himself the titles of the Son of God and the Son of Man and gave them a deeper content and more spiritual meaning. The main objection against this view is that, since Jesus did not write his own life, we must try to understand the point of view of those who wrote the Gospels. Did the Evangelists themselves understand the Messianic office of Jesus in a strictly spiritual or in an eschatological sense? From a close perusal of the Gospels it is quite clear that they understood it in the latter sense and Dr. Schweitzer is perfectly right in insisting that we have got to account for the eschatological element in the Gospels either by regarding it as the literal expression of Jesus' own view in which case it is historical, or by treating it as an expression of the eschatological hopes of the Evangelists in which case it belongs to the sphere of dogma and not history. There is also some truth in the view put forward by Wellhausen and recently by Dr. Kirsopp Lake that the Gospels represent the development of Christian doctrine more than they represent the historical portrait of Jesus. I am not willing to go with Wellhausen and Lake so far as that; but I do realise the difficulty of either treating the Gospel as pure historical records or interpreting the eschatological element figuratively. Dr. Headlam himself is willing to admit that the eschatological discourse in the thirteenth chapter of Mark may be unhistorical. But it is not the only discourse that has to be explained. This eschatological element is inter-woven with a genuine non-eschatological tradition from the beginning to the end of the Gospels and it demands some definite principle of explanation and not mere conjectures. It is noteworthy that Dr. Headlam recognises this when he says that St. Mathew exhibits "a tendency to modify the words of our Lord in an eschatological sense." If St. Mathew could modify the words of Jesus in the interest of eschatology, why could St. Mark not do the same thing? As a matter of fact, Mark has actually modified the life and teaching of Jesus in an eschatological sense and it is really a great pity that Dr. Headlam does not see it. This curious conflict between a desire to be critical on the one hand and to find a historical basis for the dogmas of the Church takes away a good deal of the value which the book otherwise possesses.

MASS CONVERSIONS.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

You write about mass conversions to Christianity. You say that so many of the depressed classes Hindus embrace Christianity and that the Hindu society is fast decreasing. It may be true, but when they do not find followship, brotherly love and equality with other high classes of Hindus, they may seek some other societies which will treat them with brotherly love, fellowship and equality. Now-a-days reformers of the Hindu Society only want to destroy untouchability. They will touch them, but they will not give them the right of fellowship and equality. Christianity will do such work till the end of the world in whatever circumstances, because Christ's order is, "Go, preach and baptise" Why should there be any bar to the conscience of man? If a Christian may find truth in Hinduism or Mahomedanism, he can embrace it and at the same time a Hindu or a Mahommadan can do the same. No one has authority over man's conscience but God.

Yours etc.,

AN INDIAN CHRISTIAN.

[Is our correspondent sure that Christianity affords "brotherly love, fellowship and equality" to all those who embrace it? Is he not aware of the existence of untouchability in Christian Churches? The comments of the Catholic Leader which we reprint in the news columns do not support the high ideal entertained by our correspondent.—Ed. I. S. R.]

THE ANNUAL MAHOTSAB OF THE DEV SAMAJ.

(Communicated.)

The Annual Mahotsab of the Dev Samaj, held in commemoration of the 75th Birthday Anniversary of its most Worshipful Founder, Bhagwan Dev Atma, was celebrated with especial enthusiasm and deep fervour at Lahore from 28th November to 2nd December 1925 in the Shri Dev Guru Bhagwan Memorial Mandir. Nearly 800 persons joined from about 90 stations of the Punjab, N. W. F. Provinces, Delhi, United Provinces and Sind. Besides this, hundreds from amongst the local public also attended.

There were in all 20 engagements including 4 public lectures, 4 public addresses, a lantern lecture on Bhagwan Dev Atma's life, a moral drama, etc.

The grandest feature of the entire occasion was the most illuminating address of Bhagwan Dev Atma on 1st December 1925, in which the venerable Bhagwan spoke for full two hours and a half and most charmingly defined in detail what was meant by Nature and emphasised the need of realising it as the One Universal Fact, Eternal, Self-Existent, Self-sufficient, absolutely trustworthy in the operation of its immutable laws, governing alike all existences including body and soul of man. Since man was part of Nature, it was his duty to contribute towards the betterment or welfare of its other parts and the whole, and it was wrong and fatal for him to grow low loves and low hates which impel him to harm other existences and thus act contrary to the law of Evolution (or betterment). The true salvation of man consisted in getting freedom from undue control of all these low loves and low hates, as they lead man astray from the law of his being. This is attained by developing repulsion for their slavery and developing higher feelings or love of higher principles.

In response to his appeal for funds for this highest and noblest cause, upwards of thirty thousand rupees in cash and promises were subscribed on the spot.

Four instructive and forcible lectures, attended by hundreds from among the public also were delivered by Dev Samaj workers on subjects relating to the teachings and characteristics of "Gods" of various religious systems.

At the first meeting on the 2nd December, 21 ladies and gentlemen were initiated as members of the Samaj, and 22 persons were promoted to higher grades.

The annual report of the Samaj for the year ending 30th November 1925 showed that 149 new persons were admitted as members and 'shardhalus.' Besides, as many as 404 persons refrained from various sins and evils, such as theft, bribe-taking and dishonest dealings, suppression of debts and deposits, gambling, social impurities, use of intoxicants, flesh-eating etc. One hundred and twenty seven ladies and gentlemen wholly or partly devoted their energies during the year as whole-time workers or lay workers in one or the other department of the Samaj work. One more middle school was added to the schools run by the Samaj during the year, making a total of 27 schools for boys and girls. These included 2 high schools for boys, one high school for girls, 4 middle schools, 4 schools for depressed classes, 4 schools for criminal tribes and 12 primary schools for boys and girls. 32 domestic ceremonies were performed during the year according to the Dev Samaj reformed rites. A new home for married and widowed ladies was opened and the same is being managed by an able and experienced lady worker of the Samaj. The reclamation work among the criminal tribes was carried on very satisfactorily in two settlements in the Sialkot District and the services of the Society in this respect elicited great appreciation at the hands of Government.

The Mahotsab Bhoj, in which persons of various castes and communities sat together to dine, was a very pleasant social function showing remarkable progress made by the Samaj in the direction of social reform.

AN INTER-COMMUNAL DINNER AT RAJAHMUNDRY.

(From a Correspondent.)

The students of Rajahmundry have organised recently an association called, 'Students' Cosmopolitan Association,' under the inspiration of Mr. J. Ganganna, Headmaster of the Veeresalingam's High School and of Mr. T. Ramamurthy of the local Prarthana Samaj. The object of the association is the promulgation of cosmopolitan views in communal matters among the students, and to give some definite shape to such views. The aim and hope of the association is chiefly to establish cosmopolitan dinners in the local college and school hostels. It is hoped that the college students, in a short time, would cease to be parties to the Brahmin and Non-Brahmin feelings and unite to press the hostel authorities for the early establishment of cosmopolitan dinners.

The first attempt of the association has been directed towards the solution of this problem of communal differences that threaten to remain chronic in the social life by organising an inter-caste dinner party on the 5th inst. The dinner was purely a vegetarian one and was attended by all communities, Brahmin, Non-Brahmin, Panchama, Christian and Mahommedan. The function was quite encouraging and the part taken by the college students is very enthusiastic and hopeful

The presence and participation of the local public in the function was invited and also subscriptions were raised towards the cost of the dinner. Sympathy was shown by many; but the interest and devotion towards social reform of some of the local lawyers and doctors given expression to, on both private and public platforms, was to a great extent realised to be tall-talk and mere expression of pious wishes To mention an objection raised by a public-leader (one who is the President of many local institutions and the chairman-elect of almost every meeting) of the place is not needless here. For instance, the vegetarian castes such as Brahmins should not transgress the limits of social reform, by uniting in dinners with the sub-castes who take animal food. On the strength of this sentiment, his aged wisdom holds that inter-caste dinners are bound to fail in their object and believes that the total abolition of communal feelings is impossible.

I would like to suggest to my student-friends not to stop at every such objection; but to broaden their views to suit all and extend their sympathy and fellow-feeling to their brethren and not to make fuss over vegetarian diet and encourage communalism. That is a source of mischief. For breaking down the castes, it is necessary that the 'kitchen-religion' and the hatred of flesh-eaters, should be knocked down first. As stated by an eminent social-reformer: "If you do'nt want to eat flesh don't eat it, but tolerate flesh-eaters; don't assume superior airs over your vegetarian diet. A goat lives on vegetables, a stone eats nothing. Is, therefore, a goat or a stone superior to men?" As regards diet in public dinners, let there be always vegetarian food. As in other countries, let us cultivate the national sentiment of Hindu fraternity. Let us all feel that we are sons of India.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

The Mosul Debate in the Commons: In spite of the strong opposition of the Labour Party the members of which walked out of the House in protest, the House of Commons carried Mr. Baldwin's motion confirming the acceptance of the League's decision regarding the award of Mosul to Iraq by 239 votes to 4 on the 21st instant.

The Civil Services Bill: The Civil Services Bill which was passed by the Commons without a division has received the royal assent and has now become an Act of Parliament.

Commonwealth of India Bill: In the House of Commons on December 17th Mr. Lansbury formally introduced the Commonwealth of India Bill to constitute within the British Empire a Commonwealth of India. The first reading of the Bill was formally passed.

All-India Untouchables and Sweepers' Conference: The Secretary, Reception Committee, Cawnpore, writes:— The All-India Untouchables' Conference will be held under the presidentship of Swami Shradhanandaji on days, viz, (A) 25th December from 12 noon to 4 p.m. in the Arya Samaj Pandal and (B) 27th December from 3 to 6 a.m. in the Arya Swarajya Sabha Pandal.

SUPPLEMENT TO The Indian Social Reformer.

No. 10 BOMBAY—SATURDAY, DECEMBER 26 1925. Price One Anna

THE VICEROY ON INDIAN GRIEVANCES IN SOUTH AFRICA.

The Indians in South Africa had been contemplating for a long time to send a Deputation to India to wait on His Excellency the Viceroy. It was known early in October last that the desirability or otherwise of such a venture would be discussed as a definite resolution at the 5th session of the South African Indian Congress. At the session of the Congress held at Capetown on the 9th November 1925 the proposal was unanimously carried. The Deputation consisting of eight members and representing all interests in South Africa and headed by Dr. Abdur Rahman, the unrivalled champion of the Coloured races in South Africa, reached India by the S.S. "Khandala" on Saturday the 12th December, 1925. Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, the President-elect of the Indian National Congress, with many friends and a troupe of volunteers welcomed them on the boat.

At an "At Home," given by Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, at the Taj Mahal Hotel, on the afternoon of Sunday, the 13th December, in honour of the Deputation, a most representative and cosmopolitan party of guests was present. The illustrious hostess in a stirring speech welcomed the "friends" from South Africa. "For myself", she said, "I will fight to the last drop of my blood to vindicate the honour of my motherland". It was a challenge to every man in India. Sir Dinshaw Petit Bart. said that as the President of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association, he was in close touch with the trend of events in South Africa, and that once again they were going to make a peaceful attempt at the solution of the problem. Sir Purshotamdas Thakurdas regretted that the Indian Government and Indian Legislature had not been able to help Indians in South Africa to the extent to which they ought to have done. He assured every one present that he would do everything that lay in his power to make the Deputation a success. Abdur Rahman followed and received a great ovation. The rapt attention with which he was listened to indicated the desire of every one present to lend his or her support to the mission on behalf of our oppressed countrymen in South Africa. He was quite sanguine of the ultimate result of his Deputation if only India supported him wholeheartedly. He said that they did not come out as India's "friends", but as her "soldiers" from the "front" fighting not only her battles, but the battles of the browns against the whites.

On Monday, the 14th December 1925, the Deputation met the members of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association and others interested in the question of Indians abroad at an informal Conference. Dr. Abdur Rahman and other members of the Deputation gave vivid accounts of the hardships to which the South African Indians are subjected. Every one present was moved by the heartrending account of the treatment meted out to our countrymen in South Africa.

The Deputation waited on His Excellency the Viceroy on the 19th November at Calcutta. In reply to the address presented by the Deputation, the Viceroy said that he and his Government had taken all measures from time to time calculated to ameliorate the condition of South African Indians and that the Government of India's suggestion for a Round Table Conference had not yet been accepted by the Government of South Africa. The Viceroy explained the circumstances under which the Deputations from South Africa and India crossed each other and hoped that the Government of India's Deputation would make suggestions which might be a basis for fresh proposals to the Union Government. The Viceroy fully understood the depth of the feeling of Indians, but he asked the Deputation to remember "that the issue is now in South Africa. South Africa is a Dominion. Its Parliament has full power to pass legislation regarding its internal affairs" He further stated "that no claim can be sustained by us of a right to interfere in their domestic affairs" But he added: "Should the Union Government be unable in the end to accede to our request, we reserve to ourselves freedom to take such actions as may seem desirable in the circumstances of the case". The Viceroy did not consider the prospects hopeless and said that in the absence of Indian franchise, the Union Government recognise that they have a special responsibility for Indians in South Africa. He said that the representations made by the Government of India have achieved some success in the past, but he also added: "I fully admit that in some cases the representations of my Government have been unavailing." He was very sympathetic and was anxiously and carefully considering the best way to follow. "It should be premature on my part to attempt to indicate the exact measures we may adopt, but you may confidentially count on my warm personal interest in your difficulties and on the sincere desire of my Government to find a way to remedy those anxieties by which you are now oppressed."

Such was the reply which his Excellency was pleased to give the Deputation from South Africa. We have read it, re-read it, and read it again to scan it thoroughly and to find where His Excellency could be said to have made a practical suggestion calculated to improve the situation. A Deputation comes all the way from South Africa at very great personal sacrifice and involving a big amount of money, to which even the poorest Indian in South Africa has contributed, entertaining great hopes as to the success of its mission, is told that no one has any right to interfere with the domestic affairs of South Africa. The Viceroy might as well have said that he regretted that he was unable to do anything in the matter. That would have been at least frank. But to add insult to injury, the Viceroy has made an attempt to show that the Union Government is not as black as it has been painted. He has, in his reply, enumerated a series of Ordinances which were withheld by the Union Government as a result of the Government of India's representation. One of them is the Colour Bar Bill. The Viceroy said that it was rejected by the Senate. True; but he knows as well as we do that the Bill is coming up again and will be discussed in a joint sitting of the two Houses of the Union Parliament where the Government commands a majority. It will, therefore, be a law in due course. The Viceroy assured the Deputation of his personal interest in their difficulties and the sympathy of his Government. It was good of His Excellency to make a personal reference in this very tragic affair, but what is wanted is more than mere personal interest and official sympathy. Indians in South Africa need the official interest of the Viceroy, the interest which will impress upon Hertzog and his Government that there is one more powerful than himself who is responsible for the welfare of Indians in South Africa; the interest which will demand that Indians are equally treated with other Nations in the British Commonwealth of Nations. Of what avail is the mere sympathy of the Government of India? The time for sympathy is long past. The time for action worthy of an Indian Viceroy is long due. Words, however beautiful they may be, are hardly enough to help our countrymen in South Africa whose very existence is threatened. We are very grateful to His Excellency for his personal interest and sympathy of his Government, but we are constrained to say that it would not help us materially. The grave situation calls for action, vigorous action, on the part of the Indian Government. The Vicery said that in case the negotiation failed in the end, he reserves the right to himself to take such action as may seem desirable in the circumstances of the case. He did not tell the country how many generations would take to reach that end, unless by the end he meant the end of Indians in South Africa. Since he assumed his high office, the Viceroy has been, according to his words, doing his utmost to help Indians in South Africa, but has so far failed and yet the end is not in sight. Since 1914 Indians have been returning to this country at the rate of 2,000 a year and it is obvious that at this pace it will not be long before we reach the end, and then and then only the Viceroy will take action. When there is no South African Indian problem, then the Government of India will move actively in the matter. Britain is blaming Turkey for maltreating minorities, but Britain conveniently forgets that in her own Empire, majorities are being treated equally bad if not worse. What right has the white man to call South Africa his home, and to turn out Indians from there? The plea of trusteeship of uncivilised African is too big a pill for us to swallow. We know it too well that it is more of exploitation of the backward races than anything else. In short, the Viceroy's reply as was expected, fell hopelessly short of the seriousness of the situation. It will not in any way contribute towards the solution of the problem.

The effect of the Viceroy's reply on the Union Government is indicated in the cables sent by Mr. C. F. Andrews to the Bombay Chronicle and the Indian Daily Mail. The very fact that the Union Government has received His Excellency's reply favourably goes to confirm Indian opinion that the Viceroy has acted more as an apologist of the Union Government than as the head of a Government responsible to the interests of the Indians. Mr. Andrews' picture of the situation in South Africa is in direct contrast to Lord Reading's optimism. The acquiescense of the Smuts' party in the reactionary policy of General Hertzog's Government leaves absolutely no hope of the anti-Asiatic legislation being delayed any longer. Apart from the equivocal statement in the Viceroy's reply that, in the event of the failure of the negotiations, he and his Government reserve to themselves freedom to take such action as may seem desirable in the circumstances of the case—a statement which is open to the interpretation that His Excellency has not closed the door against any extreme steps being taken to bring pressure on the Union Government to retrace its steps—there is absolutely nothing in his reply in which the Deputation may feel some consolation. We cannot think that the Viceroy has not adequately appraised the significance of Dr. Abdur Rahman's statement, in the course of his speech in submitting the representation to the Viceroy, that if India were independent, she would not tolerate the attitude of the Union Government even for 24 hours. We do not, however, think that the visit of the Deputation has been in vain. They will carry with them the moral support of the Indian nation, a fact which was so manifest in the cordial reception they met with from the Indian public and public bodies wherever they went. This, though a poor consolation to our persecuted countrymen there, cannot but give them sufficient strength to undergo any suffering in the hope that a time will come when India will be able to assert her manhood.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN INDIAN DEPUTATION.

REPRESENTATION TO THE VICEROY.

His Excellency the Viceroy received the South African Indian Deputation headed by Dr. Abdul Rahman on Saturday the 19th instant at Calcutta. The following is the full text of the statement submitted by the Deputation:—

RUFUS DANIEL ISSACS, EARL OF READING,
P.C., G.C.B., G.M.S.I., G.M.I.E., K.C.V.O., &c., Viceroy and Governor-General of India.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

We, the undersigned, A. Abdurahman, J. W. Godfrey, Amod Bayat, Sorabjee Rustomjee, V. S. C. Pather, Bhawani Dayal, and A. A. Mirza, delegates the South African Indian Congress, duly appointed at the fifth session held in Capetown on the 9th November, 1925, desire to thank Your Excellency for receiving the deputation, and respectfully beg to submit to you a short statment of the present position of Indians in South Africa and of the effect of the Areas Reservation and Immigration and Registration (Further Provision) Bill on their future status.

Sir, you will doubtless recollect that you were pleased in March, 1922, to receive a deputation of South African Indians, supported by Sir Jamsetji Jeejibhoy and other prominent and influential leaders of Indian public opinion. That deputation not only placed before Your Excellency very fully the position of Indians as it existed then, but they also stated that, in the light of the sustained and irrational anti-Asiatic campaign in South Africa, the Indians viewed the future outlook with the gravest apprehension.

We feel assured that Your Excellency has since then watched with more than ordinary care the trend of South African legislation; that you are acquainted with and have viewed with disapprobation the promulgation of two Provincial Ordinances which, quite recently deprived Indians of the Municipal and Township franchise in Natal, and the adoption of other Ordinances which place further restrictions on their trading and proprietary rights. Convinced that Your Excellency knows all this, and being aware that you have also kept in close touch with the South African Government, we feel that it would almost be an act of supererogation to restate the case of Indians as it exists to-day.

Nevertheless, Sir, permit us to summarise briefly our existing grievances. This will show up more glaringly the impossibility of Indians to survive and retain their manhood under any further imposition of restrictions, and moreover it will emphasise more fully and clearly the dire effects on them of the Areas Reservation and Immigration and Registration (Further Provision) Bill—the Bill which has driven us as a last resource, to seek your aid in the calamity which stares us in the face and which threatens to overwhelm the whole Indian community. Briefly then the position is as follows:—

CAPE PROVINCE.

In the Cape Province there are approximately 8,000 Indians, who enjoy equally with other non-Europeans both the parliamentary and the municipal franchise. No restrictions have so far been placed upon them which do not also apply equally to other non-Europeans. They are still free to purchase fixed property, to trade and to reside where they choose; and, except that applications by them for permits to trade are frequently refused solely because they are Indians, as was pointed out by the Asiatic Inquiry Commission of 1921, we are glad to say Indians have no complaint to make either against Europeans in that Province or the Government.

ORANGE FREE STATE.

In the Orange Free State there are only about 200 Indians, who were allowed to enter that Province on the strict understanding that they remained in the domestic service of Europeans. Immigration on any other condition is strictly forbidden.

TRANSVAAL.

The Transvaal has a population of approximately 12,000 Indians. They have never enjoyed either the parliamentary or the municipal franchise, and they are prohibited by Act 3 of 1885 and Act 37 of 1919 from acquiring immovable property. So far, however, there has been little difficulty in obtaining trading licences. But in 1925 the Provincial Council passed the General Dealers Control Ordinance which, according to the Administrator, is intended to regulate control and restrict the granting of licences to Asiatics in future. The effect of the Ordinance has not yet been felt by the Indian community. But in view of the manner in which a similar law is being administered in the Cape Province where the anti-Asiatic feeling is comparatively mild, we have no hesitation in predicting that very few or no new licences will be granted in future. Furthermore, the Ordinance has been made retrospective. All licences therefore, issued since July 1925, will in 1926 be regarded as new licences and will probably be refused when they come up for renewal, and in the case of refusal of new licences there is no right of appeal.

NATAL.

Natal has an Indian population of about 140,000, of whom a large proportion are born in the country, being descendants of those who by their labour and industry transformed that Province from a wilderness into a garden. In the year 1896, Indians were deprived without the slightest justification of their Parliamentary Franchise, but no restriction was placed upon them with respect to the acquisition of fixed property or the right to trade and to reside where they chose. In 1908, however, the Natal Legislature passed two drastic measures: one was designed to stop the issue of new trading licences to Asiatics forthwith, and the other to prevent the renewal of existing licences after 1918. These measures, needless to say, did not receive the Imperial Government's assent and the trading rights of Indians were left undisturbed.

Thus, Sir, when the deputation waited upon you in 1922, although Indians experienced some difficulty in obtaining new licences to trade, and despite the fact that they suffered many minor indignities as a result of vexatious and restrictive regulations then in operation, nevertheless, they still enjoyed the full municipal and township franchise equal with Europeans, and they still retained the right to own fixed property and to reside where they chose without let or hindrance.

Since then a change for the worse has taken place. Three Provincial Ordinances the provisions of which are intended to be applied to the Indian community almost exclusively, have received the assent of the Governor-General-in-Council, despite very strong protests against them. Two of these Ordinances, namely, the Boroughs Ordinance of 1924 and the Townships Franchise Amendment Ordinance, 1925 taken together, by one stroke of the pen, deprive all Indians of their municipal and township franchise rights respectively, although they possess the necessary qualifications, if their names are not already on the voters' roll. By a further clause in the first of these Ordinances, Municipalities have the power to prohibit the ownership or occupation or both of unalienated municipal lands by persons of Asiatic descent. The third Ordinance, namely, the Rural Dealers Licensing Ordinance, creates Boards whose duty it is to consider all applications for licenses to trade. Against the decision of the Board in the case of new applications as well as applications for transfer from one premises to another, there is no right of appeal. As this Ordinance is specially designed to restrict trading by Asiatics, and as it is administered in that spirit, it is not difficult for Your Excellency to conceive how Indians are suffering thereunder.

From this brief and consequently inadequate summary of the oppressive and differential laws in operation to-day in South Africa, it will be seen that further restrictions have been placed on Indians after the interview of 1922, and that the fears which Indians then entertained had been well-founded. But Sir, we are to have no respite, and once again we are confronted with an outlook that seems even darker and more dismal. As if the cumulative effect of the many irksome regulations, the indignities we suffer, the curtailment of our rights, the abridgment of our privileges—as if the cumulative effect of all these was not sufficient to crush the Indians in time, a section of Europeans are prosecuting their one-sided and unjust racial warfare with such intensity and vigour as to convince us that they will not halt until they reach a point just short of wholesale extermination of Indians.

In response to the clamourous demands of these racialists, the Union Government introduced last Session into Parliament, and have promised to place on the Statute Books during the forthcoming Session, what is known as the Areas Reservation and Immigration Restriction (Further Provision) Bill, which, as Your Excellency knows, is the primary, if not the sole cause, of our having been deputed to seek your aid in the hour of need.

The bill on the face of it is pure "Class Legislation." That it is intended to be administered solely against Indians, is quite clear from the fact that all other Non-Europeans, namely, Cape Coloureds, Natives, Malays, Mauritian Creoles, and St. Helenas are exempted from its operation. Its object, as is plainly stated, is to drive Indians into locations or areas, reduce them to Industrial serfs and thus ultimately hunt them out of South Africa. This is clear not only from the various sections of the Bill itself, but also from the speech of the Minister who, when introducing it into Parliament, said "that the Bill frankly starts from the general supposition that the Indian as a race in this country is an alien element in the population, and that no solution of this question will be acceptable to the country unless it results in a very considerable reduction of the Indian population in this country."

The principle of compulsory segregation for trading and residential purposes which is distinctly laid down in the Bill is one which the Indian community cannot, nay, dare not accept. Your Excellency assured the deputation of 1922 that you also were opposed to the principle of segregation and you inspired the Indian community in South Africa and the people of India with hope when you expressed yourself thus: "They (the Indian Government) are equally at one with you in the objection you take to the commission's suggestion regarding voluntary segregation whether residential or commercial." It is not difficult, therefore, for Your Excellency to gauge the bitterness and intensity of the feeling in South Africa against this Bill.

We desire also to state that the conditions which prevail in "locations" in which natives are compelled to live in many parts of the Union are appalling, due in every instance to the neglect on the part of Municipalities to supply and attend to the essential services requisite for a healthy and clean life. The Asiatic Inquiry Commission of 1921 reported against segregation as follows:—"We find ourselves wholly unable to support the policy of repression which was advocated by some of the witnesses. Indiscriminate segregation of Asiatics in locations and similar restrictive measures would result eventually in reducing them to helotry. Such measures, apart from their injustice and inhumanity, would degrade the Asiatic and react upon the European." Moreover, the Bill is in violation of the spirit and intention of the Gandhi-Smuts Settlement; for it was understood that no further anti-Indian legislation would be imposed and that the then existing laws would be administered in a just manner with due regard to vested rights.

For these reasons alone the Indian community cannot accept the Bill.

Furthermore, the tightening up of the Immigration laws, the interference with the trading rights, the new restrictions with regard to acquiring ownership of land and acquiring leases, and the utter disregard of vested rights—all these taken together constitute such a formidable catalogue of new injustices that Indians are sure to be crushed under its weight. There is also no doubt that the clauses relating to the ownership of land, renewal of leases and of trading rights will spell financial ruin to the Indian community.

After the first reading of the Bill, the Indian community in the Union of South Africa, through the South African Indian Congress, passed the two following resolutions:—

1. That the South African Indian Congress in conference views with alarm the Areas Reservation and Immigration (Further provision) Bill which is in violation of the 1914 Gandhi-Smuts agreement, and which has for its object the compulsory segregation of Indians, deprivation of their proprietary rights and the utlimate elimination of the Indian community as openly declared by the Minister of Interior, and begs to submit to the Government that on a matter of principle the Indian community of South Africa opposes this Bill in toto.

2. That this Congress urges upon the Union Government to consent to a Round Table Conference of representatives of the Union and Imperial Governments, the representatives of India, the Indian Government and representatives of the South African Indian Congress to consider the whole position of the Indians here and arrive at an honourable settlement.

These resolutions were presented by a deputation to the Minister of Interior on the 16th November 1925, who replied that he was not prepared to depart from the principles of the Bill; that as all political parties in the Union were unanimous on the Bill, he hoped to have it placed on the Statute Book and that he was unable to state what final view either the Union Government or Your Excellency's Government would take in regard to the Round Table Conference as the matter was under discussion.

Our object to-day is, therefore, to impress upon the Indian Government the urgency of securing the Union Government's consent to a Round Table Conference in terms of the resolution aforementioned.

We would point out that even if this Bill does not become law, there still remains unsolved the question of Franchise Rights, Immigration, Education, Trading Licences etc. and these are questions that call for an early solution.

The Indian community have at all times been law-abiding and are prepared even now to submit to any and all laws to which all other sections are made amenable. They have always been prepared to assist by every means to promote the welfare and progress of the Union.

We beg to place before Your Excellency our demands as law-abiding and respectful citizens of the Union and as South Africans, to restore to us in the Cape Province and Natal the political rights of which we have been deprived and to grant to us full political and civil rights in the Transvaal and the O. F. S. as enjoyed by the other communities of the Union. This will be one of the means of solving the Indian problem in South Africa.

In the event of the Union Government not acceding to the request for a Round Table Conference and forcing the Bill through Parliament in spite of Your Excellency's and our objections, then we would respectfully ask you to secure the King-Emperor's disallowance of the Bill in terms of Section 65 of the South Africa Act failing which to appeal to the League of Nations as the Bill contravenes the spirit and intention of Clause XXIII of the Covenant of the League of Nations to which the Indian Government is a signatory.

In conclusion, we again beg to thank Your Excellency for granting us this interview and sincerely pray that Your Excellency's efforts to secure for the South African Indians a status consistent with the honour and dignity of the Indian nation will be crowned with success.

We have the honour to be,

THE VICEROY'S REPLY.

Dr. Abdur Rahman and gentlemen,—I am glad to have this opportunity of meeting you here to-day and of discussing the grave situation to which you have referred in your petition and observations. I have read and examined an advance copy of your petition with great care and have listened with deep interest to the further observations with which you have now laid it before me. Let me assure you that I have watched the position of Indians in South Africa with anxiety and sympathy for some years past and have taken all measures as opportunity offered from time to time which appeared to me and my Government calculated to ameliorate their condition. I am deeply grieved at the present situation. It is natural that you should seek to ascertain at first hand in India the feelings of the people and the Government of India on these questions and to fortify your cause with what you will undoubtedly carry away with you—the warm sympathy of the people and the Government of India. Great indignation has been felt and expressed in India and public opinion has been deeply pained.

Round Table Conference.

It has been observed with apprehension that in introducing the bill, Indians have been described as an alien element in the population of the Dominion, and intentions have been expressed of solving the problem by securing a very considerable reduction in the Indian population of the Union. Your deputation lays stress, and rightly so, on the necessity for a round table conference. This suggestion has been repeatedly pressed by me and my Government since it was first put forward by Mr. Thomas during his visit to South Africa. We urged the Government of South Africa in addition to agree to our despatching a deputation to South Africa to ascertion facts regarding the economic conditions of Indians and the effect upon them of the contemplated legislation so that we might be in the best position to make representation concerning these measures based on accurate local and latest information regarding the situation. Our concrete proposals regarding the deputation to that Government were made on 9th October last and accepted by that Government on 10th November. We at once took steps to constitute a deputation and informed the Government of South Africa that we were despatching it on the 25th November. The first information of your deputation which we received was in a Reuter's telegram of the 19th November. The decision to send the Government deputation was thus reached before we had heard of your deputation. We attribute importance to our deputation both because of the information it may be expected to procure and because we desired to lose no time in taking advantage of the assent of the Union Government to its visit. Although in many respects it would undoubtedly have been preferable if these two deputations had not crossed each other, yet there is no real duplication of functions, as we once apprehended, in a deputation from the Government of this country visiting South Africa at the same time as a deputation from Indians in South Africa visits India. The more light can be shed on this difficult question the better. The fuller the understanding the more likely that some avenue may be found to remedy the situation. I and my Government greatly hope that the deputation we have sent to South Africa, may collect facts and make suggestions which may serve as a basis for fresh proposals on lines to which the Union Government may be disposed to agree. We also confidently expect that your deputation may help us with some constructive suggestions of value to the same end. I fully understand the depth of the feeling by which your community and Indian opinion generally is exercised.

"The Issue is Now in S. Africa."

I do not under-rate the strength of the apprehensions you entertain. Nevertheless, whilst it is natural that you should present your case with considerable vigour, it must be remembered that the issue is now in South Africa. South Africa is a Dominion. Its Parliament has full powers to pass legislation regarding its internal affairs. Feeling in South Africa is naturally sensitive o interference from outside in these affairs. I have never in my experience known a good case to suffer by sober presentment. I and my Government emphatically held that we have a right to make representation regarding a measure prejudicial to Indians domiciled in South Africa. It is a duty from which we shall never shrink and we claim that our views should be heard and considered. We have reason to know that our right to make representations and be heard is not disputed by the Union Government. Indeed, I gratefully acknowledge that they have on various occasions given effect to our suggestions. At the same time we recognise that the position of that Government must be respected and that no claim can be sustained by us of a right to interfere in their domestic affairs. Should the Union Government be unable in the end to accede to our request, we reserve to ourselves freedom to take such action as may seem desirable in the circumstances of the case. We have always kept His Majesty's Government fully informed through the Secretary of State for India of the strength of feeling in India on the question of Asiatic legislation in the Union and of our own views on these questions. I cannot consider the prospects hopeless. I believe that the Union Government will give careful consideration to our views based as they are on facts and equitable consideration.

It is evident that in the absence of Indian franchise the Union Government recognise that they have a special responsibility for Indians in South Africa. The present Union have not yet carried any anti-Asiatic legislation. The colour bar bill was rejected by the Senate. The fate of the present bill is still undecided. Let me remind you that I and my Government have carefully watched all proposals in the past for anti-Asiatic legislation. We have kept the Union fully apprised of Indian sentiments regarding these measures and of the objections to them. They have just received our representatives with the greatest courtsey and I gladly acknowledge that in the past, action has frequently been taken to meet our suggestions regarding specific measures.

Indian Government's Achievements.

I am not sure that it is generally recognised that the Union Government have from time to time to meet representations made by my Government and the extent to which our protests and representations have achieved some success. Let me give a few instances. First as regards draft ordinances to amend the Natal Townships law of 1881 in such a way as to deprive Indians of the township franchise, various drafts were introduced in 1921, 1922, 1923 and 1924 and regarding each in turn the Government of India cabled representations. The Governor-General-in-Council withheld assent to the first, reserved the second and fourth for further consideration and the third was not proceeded with. The fifth ordinance of 1925 received the sanction of the Governor-General-in-Council before our representations reached him. In 1925 also a draft ordinance to consolidate the Natal townships law was introduced which would have had the effect of disenfranchising Indians already on the electoral roll of townships. In response to our representations we have been informed that the ordinance is standing over until next year and that when it is proceeded with the franchise of Indians at present on the voters' roll will be adequately safeguarded. Again, as regards the Natal Boroughs Ordinance of 1925 we cabled representations. The Governor-General-in-Council at first reserved the bill for further consideration but ultimately assented on the ground that they were unwilling to curtail the power of a provincial council to deal with a purely domestic legislation. Another instance is the Natal Rural Dealers' Licensing Ordinance. Various drafts were introduced all of which were likely to affect adversely the trading rights of Indians. The Governor-General-in-Council withheld assent to the draft of 1921, reserved for consideration the draft of 1922 and assented to the draft of 1923 after explaining how far he had been able to go in meeting our wishes. In the case of the Durban Land Alienation Ordinance of 1922 we cabled representations. The Governor-General-in-Council assented but instructed the Administrator in Natal to satisfy himself before approving racial restrictions in land sales that Asiatics were given reasonable opportunity for acquiring adequate residential sites. Take finally the Areas Reservation and Immigrations and Registration (Further Provision) Bill, 1925. The position is that the Government of India have already telegraphed very full representations regarding this bill which they consider of the utmost importance and have received an assurance that their representations will receive the earnest consideration of the Ministers. It may also be noted that the Government of India have addressed a detailed despatch containing their views on the Asiatic Enquiry Commission's Report, 1921. This despatch has given rise to a long correspondence in the course of which the Union Government have explained their general policy towards Asiatics. We are still engaged in discussion. I freely admit that in some cases the representations of my Government have been unavailing as for example in the Natal Public Health Committee's Ordinance (1925.) In the case of the South African Mines and Works Amendment Act of 1925 also, we made representations and though some changes were introduced to meet Asiatic susceptibilities, the principle of the bill remained unchanged. Fortunately, however, the bill was rejected in the Senate. In the case of the Class Areas Bill of 1924 we have also made representations but the bill lapsed owing to the dissolution of the Union Parliament.

Lord Reading Optimistic.

I have said enough to show that I and my Government, though not always successful, have been able to achieve something in the past and have every reason to believe that the Union Government will give the closest consideration to any proposals we may decide to put forward. Our deputation in South Africa is working to provide us with material to make and support our representations. We look to you also and shall welcome any constructive suggestions you are able to give us. The member of my Government in charge of this subject, Sir Mohammed Habibullah, and the Secretary of the Department, Mr. Ewbank, are present here to-day. I invite you to keep in close touch with them and give your views as regards all classes of the bill and their effect upon Indians. This is not the place to go into the question of details but it is important that they should hear your views upon these questions also. You may be assured that any detailed criticisms of the bill you may have to offer will be most carefully examined by them both. I and my Government will welcome your assistance in giving through them concrete illustrations of the manner in which specific provisions adversely affect the position of Indians. As I hope I have already made clear to you, you may rely on receiving a very sympathetic hearing from the officers of my Government. We shall carefully and anxiously consider the best course to follow. It would be premature on my part to attempt to indicate the exact measures we may adopt, but you may confidently count on my warm personal interest in your difficulties and on the sincere desire of my Government to find a way to remedy those anxieties by which you are now oppressed. You may already be aware, and if not let me assure you, that whatever the differences that may exist in India on other political questions, there is unanimity of opinion regarding the position of Indians in South Africa. I and my Government believe that any representations that may be made and any action that may be taken in the interests of India and the Empire on behalf of Indians in South Africa will have the whole-hearted support of the people. No course which can legitimately and constitutionally be taken will be left unexplored and all reasonable measures calculated to ameliorate the situation will be taken.

DR. ABDUR RAHMAN'S SPEECH.

Space does not permit us to print in full the forceful speech Dr Abdur Rahman delivered in submitting the deputation's statement to the Viceroy. The following is the concluding portion of the speech :—

Compare the position of the Indians to-day with that of the "Outlanders" in the Transvaal in 1898. Their grievances were nothing in comparison with what we suffer. The Indian grievances were made one of the causes for going to war. England must to-day take a firm stand. I am assured from what you, Sir, have seen in the statement and from what you know of the special grievances under which the Indians suffer, and from what you know of this bill, that you yourself, will today say to me and to us that the Indians are already suffering enough and that they cannot bear any more. But we have not told you the whole of the horrible picture of the sufferings of the Indians under the many legislative enactments. Having been segregated in areas and prevented from adding and acquiring lands outside the areas, what are the Indians then to do?

realpatidar.com

There are no educational facilities for the Indian children; The Government spent something like £6,00),000 on education and out of that vast amount I think somethings like nearly £4,000,000 are spent in the Transvaal, Natal and Orange Free State. But of this latter amount about £100,000 are spent on Indian and coloured education and £100,000 on the native education. In the Cape it is different. That province is more liberal. In the Orange Free State, to give you some idea of the attitude of some of the Europeans, out of every pound that is spent on education the huge sum of three farthings is spent on the non-European child and nineteen shillings and eleven pence on the white child! There are practically no educational facilities at all for the Indian child or for any other non-European child to go beyond the sixth standard. To bar the Indian and other non-European child from learning a skilled trade, an Apprenticeship Act was passed, which says that before a child can be apprenticed in the printing trade, he must have passed the seventh standard. So it is also in other trades. In some trades it has been fixed at the sixth standard and very few non-European children reach that standard because there are no educational facilities. Take again the Liquor Law Amendment Bill. Here the Indians and the Natives are specially excluded from being employed on premises where liquor is manufactured, stored or sold. This is done because the Indians are the waiters in most of the big hotels and in order to oust them from this work, the Bill provides that no native or Indian shall be permitted to work in a place where liquor is manufactured, stored or where it is sold. Then comes the Colour Bar Bill which was rejected by the Senate last session, but which will be passed this session. Then again, no Indian may be in charge of a machine. I will not go into further details, but I wish to say that there are so many restrictive laws that it is impossible for us to hope an honest living in the future. I think I have exhausted my time-limit. I know Your Excellency is exceedingly busy. You quite understand that we are coming all this distance, because we are compelled to seek your aid in this crisis. I am glad that Your Excellency is indulgent and has permitted me to amplify our statement. I now desire to say, in conclusion, that if India finds that she is impotent, that she cannot help us in South Africa, for some reason or other that she cannot, though she might wish to do so, and that if she had the power she would do so, I would go so far as to say that I interpret Your Excellency's views on this point when I say that Your Government would do every thing possible if it could, to prevent this Bill from going through. I say if you are in such a position here that you cannot help us, if the position of India is such, her relationship with the rest of the British Empire is such that she must submit and allow her sons to suffer, then. I hope one of these days that relationship will be changed, so that India can speak as she ought to speak like a free man and say: "We will not allow our sons to be humiliated any longer because we have got the power to say no."

Your Excellency, we are going through this country and we are going to place our position fully before the Indians. We should go through the country and lay our position before the Indians in such a way that they will give you every support in anything that you might wish to do in bringing home to the South African Government that if India were a free country to-day, if she were independent, she would not tolerate it for twenty-four hours. I thank you again, Sir, for having granted me so much time to express our views and we trust sincerely that it will not be necessary for either the Indian Government or the Imperial Government to go to extremes in order to prevent this Bill from going through the Union Parliament and disgracing not only Indians in South Africa but the whole of the Indian Empire.

Anti-Indian Legislation in S. Africa: Referring to the Asiatic question at a meeting of the local branch of the National Party held on the 10th instant, Mr. Malan, the Minister of the Interior, said that the Indian Government had asked for a round table conference, but the Union Government had decided that they could not agree to it, because a round table conference would mean making a concession on the essential principles of the Bill and the Government was not prepared to do that. They, however, welcomed the Indian deputation which was coming to South Africa to investigate the question and, if the Bill was passed, it would be referred to a Select Committee, and the members of the Indian deputation would then have an opportunity of giving evidence before it. He regretted the fact that a deputation had left for India from South Africa, because Indians knew nothing about South African conditions and it was only likely to create bad feeling, and Indians would make use of the South African question towards getting their own Self-Government.

Mr. C. F. Andrews at Johannesburg: A telegram from Maritzburg, dated the 8th December, says: Mr. C. F. Andrews was warmly welcomed by the Indians of Pretoria at Johannesburg on his visit to make inquiries regarding the Indian question. No public meetings were held in accordance with Mr. Gandhi's instructions.

Un-Christian Act in Mombasa Church: At the Queen Alexandra's Memorial Service performed by the Governor at Mombasa Church of England, on the 27th November, Indians were segregated and pushed out of the Church, although invited Indians felt the insult strongly.

Indians in Australia: The British Australian and New Zealander writes: When the last Imperial Conference was sitting and Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru was battling hard to secure the full rights of citizenship for Indians living in Australia, we expressed our strong sympathy with his aim, and our hope that it would soon be attained. We are glad to see that it has been, and that in future the Indians in Australia, of whom there are only a handful—Asiatics, including Chinese and Japanese as well as Indian, number under thirty thousand—will suffer under no political disability, but will be given the parliamentary franchise, and thus be put on an equality with all other British fellow-citizens of the Commonwealth. This is the fair thing, and in no way conflicts with adherence to the policy of a White Australia. This is to keep out people alien to the European in race and culture, but does not imply subjecting those who have been admitted in the past, or exceptionally in the present, to any disability. Australia is in the happy position of having a homogenous population, and for political, industrial, and social reasons wishes to maintain it. In South Africa, where the whites are in a minority among coloured people of different races, native and foreign, this is impossible and there may be insuperable difficulties, as General Smuts maintained, in admitting Indians to full citizenship. Those difficulties do not exist in Australia, and the Government, by enfranchising Indians residing in the Commonwealth, has taken a step which redounds to its credit, and will give great satisfaction to Indian Government and people who have resented the inferior status hitherto enforced upon Indians in Australia.

Transvaal's Protest Against Anti-Asiatic Legislation: A meeting of the Transvaal British Indian Association held at Johannesburg on November 29th made a vigorous protest against Earl Winterton's reply to Col. Wedgwood in the House of Commons cabled on November 23rd regarding anti-Asiatic legislation in South Africa that South Africa had a right to proceed with any legislation it thought fit, and unanimously resolved to cable to Earl Winterton on the matter urging that Great Britain is entitled to use diplomatic pressure with a view

to withdrawing the measures. The cable to Earl Winterton was as follows:—Indians are deeply shocked and very disappointed at your reply to Col Wedgwood regarding anti-Asiatic legislation in South Africa. India forms an important integral part of the Empire and South African Indians' questions being an Empire one, Britain is entitled to use diplomatic pressure by way of withdrawing the measure indirectly aimed at the disruption of the Empire and so protect the interests of her voiceless and voteless subjects in South Africa.

Indians in Australia: Senator Ried of the Commonwealth Parliament of Australia who arrived in Madras on the 4th instant, intervieved regarding the position of Indians in Australia, said that by an Act of Parliament in the last session of the last Parliament, all Indians in Australia had been enfranchised giving them equal political rights and citizenship. Some states, he said, had not yet granted full franchise. Referring to the attitude of Australians towards foreigners he said that it was a purely economic question and that no people in the world were free from colour prejudice than Australians.

Indians Abroad and Congress: Mr. Benarsidas Chaturvedi has given notice to move the following resolution at the Congress at Cawnpore :—"That the Indian National Congress opens a Foreign Department to look after the interests of Indians abroad and organise educative propaganda about their position in the country. That the Congress appoints a sub-committee of Mr. C F. Andrews and Pandit Bhawani Dayal of South Africa with power to add to make preliminary enquiries about the educational condition of the Colonial-Indians and report on the advisability of sending an educational commission of enquiry to places where Indians have settled in large numbers."

Indians in Zanzibar: A cable from the Indian National Association reported that the agents of the British India Steam Navigation Company have entirely stopped the issuing of permits for all Indians visiting ships bound for Bombay thus even necessitating women to go on board alone. Sons and husbands cannot accompany them up to the ships. No valid reasons prompting such a drastic measure are given. Serious resentment against this order prevails. In reply to an enquiry, the Company have replied as follows to the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association :—We would inform you that the Company have found it necessary, both in the interest of their passengers and the satisfactory working of the ships, to restrict the number of visitors at all ports and visitors are now only allowed on the Company's African steamers when there are special reasons necessitating their presence on board. We have cabled to our Zanzibar agents to use their discretion in issuing passes in such cases as those in which women are travelling unaccompanied. We may say that there has never been any intention on our part of discriminating between European and Indian passengers and we believe that the Indian National Association, Zanzibar, have sent their telegrams under misapprehension of the real position.

British Guiana Colonisation: In our last Supplement, we pointed out how the British Guiana Colonisation Scheme which Sir Joseph Nunan brought to India was not in reality a colonisation scheme at all, but only a labour scheme. The comments of the Leader, Allahabad, on an article in the Daily Argosy throw a flood of light on the matter. Says our contemporary: "An article in the Daily Argosy, issued from Georgetown, British Guiana, in connection with "immigration from India" should be an eye-opener to those in this country who still believe that what is wanted is free Indian labour for the development of the colony. This paper has made it clear that it is not in favour of a genuine colonisation scheme and that it wants Indian labourers to work as 'coolies' on the sugar plantations for some time at least. It invites the Government to publish full details of the latest amended scheme upon which, it writes, the Immigration Department 'worked so feverishly after Sir Joseph Nunan's last return to the colony'. It wants to be assured that while Sir Joseph was in India he did not make 'irresponsible and unauthorised statements' and promises of which our Government 'are still unaware'. The paper is anxious to know if the new colonists or immigrants from India must on no account contribute to a solution of our labour 'storage problem' and if they are to be placed immediately upon their arrival, maintained, and 'doctored' until they are in a position to support themselves from the product of their new holdings. If they are to be accorded such favourable treatment, then it is plain to the Argosy 'that despite our desperate need of population, East Indian colonisation is a luxury that we cannot possibly afford'. If the planters are not to benefit from the influx of the Indian population, then 'the vitally necessary labour... must be sought elsewhere'. So be it. Indian public opinion is absolutely opposed to Indian labour being exploited by white capitalists in foreign lands and they are bound strenuously to oppose any camouflaged labour scheme. The treatment which is being accorded to Indian labourers in Fiji and the plight of Indians in South Africa furnish a warning against further export of Indian labour to the colonies. The existing overseas problem is sufficiently serious and complicated and it would be wholly unwise to create more causes of bitterness. If British Guiana cannot afford to have genuine Indian colonists, the question of emigration to that colony should be dropped for good.

Union Government's Native Programme Gen. Hertzog opening the National Native Conferenc which Government specially convened recently to discuss its Native Programme referred to territoria segregation and explained that there was no reason why necessary areas should not be obtainable and placed at the disposal of the natives either by purchase or hire. He emphasised that the State would not give away any European or native land and declared that native areas would never become independent or semi-independent native states, but would be under the Union Government's leadership in the same manner as European Municipalities and Divisional Council. Moreover, it was proposed that the Native Council for the whole of the Union would practically become the Parliament of the Natives. Gen. Hertzog added that the employment of Europeans in native areas must be an exception except where it was indispensable. Similarly, the sphere of native employment in European areas must be restricted.

"Standard Wage" on Ceylon Estates: We learn from the Swarajya, Madras, that at last the Government of India has been constrained to insist on a standard wage on Ceylon Estates. Commenting on this, our contemporary writes: "This so-called standard wage, inelastic as it is, may after all mean no better than what it is to the labourer when it becomes operative, in as much as it is the cleverly worked out family budget of the labourer by the combined efforts of the Planter and the Ceylon bureaucrat that has provided the basis for the fixing up of the standard wage. It should be borne in mind that the different family budgets have studiously ignored important items of expenditure such as the unmentionable drain of the labourers' small wages into the estate toddy taverns, etc. Moreover, there has not been any serious attempt, not even an inclination, on the part of the planters or of the Ceylon Government, to consult well-informed non-official Indian opinion and arrive at a modest modus operandi, whereas the planter has this distinct advantage over others in having the ear of the Ceylon bureaucracy."

The All-India Sweepers' Conference will also be held for two days, viz., (A) 26th December from 7 p.m. in the Congress small camp under the presidentship of Dr. Satyapalji; (B) 27th December from 7 p.m. in the Congress Nagar Arya Samaj Camp under the chairmanship of St. Mahewa Naresh. A cordial reception to the three distinguished Presidents will be accorded at the E. I. Ry. station on the 24th December at 4 p.m.

All-India Anti-Untouchability Conference: The 9th Session, of the All-India Anti-Untouchability Conference will be held during the Christmas week at Amraoti under the presidentship of the Hon'ble Mr. B. V. Jadhav Raw, M.A., LL.B., M. L. C., Minister of Education, Bombay. The delegate's fee will be rupee one and annas eight for the Depressed Classes. Boarding and lodging charges will be rupee one per day. Communications should be addressed to Mr. S. A. Hawai, M. L. C., Chairman, Reception Committee, Amraoti, or to the General Secretary at Ahalyashram, Nanapeth, Poona.

Imperial Citizenship Association's Telegram to Viceroy: The following telegram was sent by the Imperial Citizenship Association to the Viceroy: The Council of the Association, having had the pleasure of meeting members of the South African Indian Deputation headed by Dr. Abdur Rahman, and of hearing from them the exact position of the Indian question in South Africa at the present day, heartily supports the deputation's appeal to the Viceroy to make an uncompromising stand for the rights of Indians in the Dominions which are gravely imperilled by the proposed anti-Asiatic legislation and the general policy of the South African Government, and trusts that His Excellency the Viceroy will use all his influence with His Majesty's Government to bring about the abandonment of the proposed legislation and the reversal of the Anti-Indian policy of the Union Government.

8th Music Conference: Under the auspices of the Gandharva Maha Vidyalaya, a Music Conference will be held at Cawnpore (Tilak Nagar) Congress Camp in the specially erected pandal on the 23rd, 24th and 25th December 1925. Among the subjects that will be discussed at the Conference are the universal decision of the six Ragas, the work of the Vidyalaya, etc.

Madras Religious Endowments Act. It is understood that Mr. Satyamurthi, M. L. C., has obtained the sanction of the Governor to introduce his Bill to repeal the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act.

A Wise move of the Madras Corporation: We are glad to see that the Corporation of Madras adopted a resolution to the effect that immediate steps be taken to resume the supply of mid-day meals to poor children in schools under the control of the Corporation with effect from 1st January next, and also to give the most needy among them a pair of dhoties every year.

Representation of Depressed Classes: We are glad to learn from the Leader, Allahabad, that two genuine representatives of the depressed classes have been nominated as members of the District and the Municipal Board of Allahabad.

"Untouchability" in Christian Churches: We are glad to find that the resolution of the Madras Provincial Anti-Untouchability Conference relating to the observance of untouchability in Christian Churches has attracted the attention of the leaders of the community. "The resolution", comments the Catholic Leader of Madras, "constitutes a definite challenge to the Catholic body and we trust it will be taken up and "untouchability" excluded from places of worship and religious institutions. When Hindus denounce the iniquity of the caste system and are adopting effective methods to remove the barrier of untouchability, it would be the height of folly and unwisdom on the part of the Catholic body to disregard the just and righteous claims of their fellow-brethren in matters religious. The clergy can do a great deal by preaching against the absurd notions of superiority entertained by caste Catholics and by emphasizing the doctrine of the spiritual equality of men, without distinction of caste, colour or race. But the laity must awaken to the dangers of the situation and realise the urgency of a speedy reform in this respect. Educated and influential laymen, chiefly in rural areas where distinctions are more marked, can by their word and example enlighten the minds of illiterate people among the caste Catholics and urge them to do away with their prejudices. The problem must be taken up earnestly and vigorously by our educated laymen and a crusade started to exterminate the evil, root and branch.

NOTES

Accentuating Communal Differences: In our leading article to-day, we have stated that, however much we may dislike the increase of communalism in Indian public life, more good can be done by recognising it as a fact and trying to direct it in proper channels, than by constantly condemning it on abstract grounds. At the same time, a word of warning is necessary against the practice of some distinguished communal leaders of needlessly accentuating the differences between the communities. A dispassionate study of the question will show that the common geographical, climatic, administrative and political environment, is a powerful factor making for assimilation, and that historical and theological differences have no chance in the long run against the compelling force of environmental influence. Even otherwise, it will be found that the differences in temperament and outlook among our communities do not antagonise but supplement one another, so that the co-operation of all Indian communities produces the same steadying effect on the national life as the mixture of metals which expand and contract at different ways does in what is known as the "compensating pendulum". We make these remarks with special reference to the speeches of Mr. Jadhav at the Non-Brahmin Confederation in Madras and of Sir Abdur Rahim at the All-India Muslim League held at Aligarh.

The All-India Spinners' Association: We have received a copy of the Report of the All-India Spinners' Association for the year 1924-25. This Association, it may be recalled, is the successor of the All-India Khadi Board. Under the constitution of the Congress adopted at Patna some months ago, the Congress was restored to its original political work, while the spinning part of the programme was transferred to a special body the membership of which, however, is recognised as membership of the Congress. This arrangement has been confirmed by the Cawnpore Congress. The Report before us gives us a lucid account of the work of the Spinning Association. Any kind of work done systematically is an education in the management of affairs, and the way in which this Association is organised and managed under the personal direction of Mahatma Gandhi furnishes a useful object-lesson which is sorely needed by us all. The Report examines the statistics furnished by the local branches without propagandist bias. The difficulty felt by headquarters in getting accurate statistics from the districts, is more than once commented upon. The patient collection of statistics the interpretation of which must be left to others, is itself a training in what may be called "disinterested service." We have had no time to read the Report carefully, and our present remarks are, therefore, of the most general character. The problem of encouraging spinning in provinces where cotton is grown and in those where cotton is not grown, is radically different. We are not sure that the purpose of the Association will not be better served by concentrating work in cotton-growing areas instead of the present attempt to make spinning universal in the country. For instance, Bombay, the Central Provinces and the Nizam's Dominions between them account for nearly 65 per cent of the total area under cotton cultivation in the whole country, while in some provinces such as Burma, Bengal, Bihar and Orissa Assam and to a large extent the United Provinces also, the area under cotton cultivation is negligible. It would be a good thing if the All-India Spinners' Association develops in course of time into an Institute for study, research as well as organising work in the theory and practice of the cotton industry in India.

Muslim Education: It is too late in the day to discuss the causes of Muslim backwardness in education. Suffice it to say here that it was the Muslim community itself that first set its face against western education as something to be spurned and that it was the far-seeing wisdom of Sir Syed that realised the mistake and founded the Aligarh Muslim College which has now grown up to be one of the great University centres in modern India. Though the All-India Muslim Educational Conference, the thirty ninth session of which was recently held at Aligarh under the presidentship of Sir Abdul Quaiyam Khan, has done much to educate the community, much remains still to be done, especially in regard to its attitude to women. That this is so was amply proved by some unedifying scenes that took place at the Conference It was simply an insult to the chivalrous traditions of Islam that the Secretary of the Conference should have thought fit to serve a notice on the lady visitors not to attend the Conference. Nevertheless, Islam may congratulate itself on possessing such valiant spirits as Atiya Begum who protested against this unjust restriction at the open Conference. Similarly, it was with great difficulty and in the midst of great uproar that a resolution declaring that Muslims should avail themselves of the advantages of compulsory primary education in the case of their girls also was adopted.

A Common Language for India: To those who talk glibly of adopting Hindi or Urdu as the common language for all India little realising its difficulties, the proceedings of the Congress on this subject will, we trust, serve as an eye-opener. Babu Purshotamdas Tandon of Allahabad moved that in future all proceedings of the Congress, the All-India Congress Committee and the Working Committee should ordinarily be conducted in Hindustani, meaning Hindi or Urdu. It naturally met with a storm of opposition and especially from Madras and Bengal delegates. One Madras delegate even went to the length of speaking in Tamil at the open Congress. If such a proposition were adopted, there is no doubt that a great part of the country will be shut out of the National Congress. Even the amendment of Lala Lajpat Rai that the proceedings be carried in Hindustani as far as possible and that efforts be made to learn Hindustani so efficiently as to make use of English unnecessary was lost. Eventually the Congress adopted Mr. Sen Gupta's amendment that those who do not know Hindustani may use English or the language of the province. According to this arrangement, the arguments of Hindustani speakers will not be appreciated by Bengali and South Indian delegates, while if the latter speak in their own vernaculars, they will not be understood by the delegates from other provinces. But Congress resolutions now-a-days are merely gestures which should not be taken seriously. The position of English as the lingua franca to-day is independent even of the British connection.

The Indian Christian Conference: It was a thoughtful and learned address which Professor Rallia Ram delivered as President of the All-India Christian Conference held recently in Calcutta. Identify your interests with those of India and eschew communalism from public life,—this was the key-note of his address. In exhorting the members of his community to merge their interests in that of India, Professor Rallia Ram said: "We are Indians. India is our motherland; its blood runs in our veins and its history and traditions are the springs from which we draw our inspiration.... Therefore it is highly desirable that we should identify ourselves with all healthy and constitutional movements started and encouraged by our fellow-countrymen." He also unreservedly condemned communalism as "a canker which is undoubtedly eating into the very vitals of our national life and progress" and "as an acknowledgment of one's own inferiority," and while regretting that some minor communities and even majority communities such as the Non Brahmins should ask for special communal representation, he advised the members of his community to set their face sternly against communal representation in the best interests of the nation.

The Madras Borstal Bill: The Borstal Bill has been finally passed by the Madras Legislative Council. There were many amendments to the Bill regarding the age of admission into a Borstal institution, separate institutions for girls and supervision by any other body instead of by the Inspector-general of Prisons, but unfortunately all were lost. Many members also urged that a Borstal institution should be differentiated from an ordinary prison, in the treatment of its inmates, in the nature of the punishments given etc. The Home Member's reply that "the Borstal institution must be viewed as a sort of prison and not as a mere school," goes against the fundamentals of this system. As one M. L. C. remarked, if the set of prison rules should apply to these people, there is no need for separate Borstal Schools at all. There is force in the comment of the Swadeshmitran, Madras, that "the Borstal Institution having been brought into existence under such unhappy auspices, we shall not be surprised if it turns out to be a place of detention and correction instead of reformation and reclamation."

The Textile Labour Union, Ahmedabad: The annual report of the above Union for the year 1924, a copy of which we have received, is a record of useful and valuable work. The organisation embraces five unions with a membership of nearly fourteen thousand. Each union has its own council of representatives called the Pratinidhi Mandal which is invested with full powers to decide all questions arising in connection with the work of the union. Besides meetings of workmen that are held at individual mills in order to keep the men informed of the march of events in the labour world, meetings are also held in labour localities to impart information to illiterate workers on matters connected with the municipal administration. The complaints departments of the unions look after the complaints received from the workmen and, as far as possible, try to settle amicably their differences with the mill owners, a strike being resorted to only as a last resort. During the year under report no strikes authorised by the Union took place. In all there were 18 strikes affecting 16 mills and the peaceful behaviour of the workmen throughout was exemplary. The Labour Union maintains a well-equipped hospital and two dispensaries. It also advances money to its members at a low rate of interest. Besides, it conducts 11 night schools, two libraries and reading rooms. The Majur Sandesh is the weekly organ of the Union and thousands of copies are distributed free in the mill areas to acquaint the workmen with the prevailing conditions in the mills. Victimization benefit is given to any Pratinidhi or workman who is dismissed for working in the interests of the Union. Free legal aid is also provided for members of the Union. The Union has in many cases also obtained compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act for the injured and the dependents of the deceased workmen.

Indian Students in America: Dr. Kenneth J. Saunders, a professor in the University of California, who is now in Madras on a world tour, in the course of a statement to the Associated Press representative, said, with regard to the question of Asiatic emigration, that "the doors of America were wide open for any student from Asia who is accepted by a school or college of recognised standing". Our experience about American hospitality to Indian students has not, however, been as pleasant as the Doctor's statement would lead one to believe, and we have had occasion to criticise the American immigration rules as affecting Indian students. In this connection, we reprint below what a valued American friend wrote to us in the course of a recent letter. He observes:

> I have been deeply sympathetic with your criticism of our immigration laws so far as they affect Indian students. Very heavy pressure has been brought to bear upon the officials in order to make the lot of Indian students in this country as easy a one and as free from annoyances as possible. We have a number of students in our University and they have never been troubled though some are working their way through college, or at least have been. America just now is very touchy on the whole subject of immigration and it is difficult at times to avoid unfortunate misunderstandings. Some are having difficulties in securing work as at present there is a very large shortage of openings for students who are working their way through school, even the Americans. The matter becomes even more difficult then for an Indian student to find an opening, for, naturally, he is not so well-acquainted with our business methods and hence is hard put to secure aid or means of helping himself. I think that it is for that reason that the immigration officials have become unusually alert. For the present, at least, I should feel like discouraging an Indian student, who wishes to come to this country to complete his education but who has not abundant means at his disposal to maintain himself at least for a year without outside aid. That means he should have at least one thousand Dollars available.

INDIAN SOCIAL REFORMER.

BOMBAY, JANUARY 2, 1926.

THE NATIONAL OUTLOOK.

The last week every year is the week of the Indian National Congress and numerous other conferences representing various movements and communities. The Indian National Congress, by common consent, has come to take the first place among these. Next, in order of importance, is the National Liberal Federation representing the party of constitutional reformers in India. Both these Conferences are non-communal and political. Among communal political conferences are the Madras Non-Brahmin Confederation which we noticed last week, the All-India Non-Brahmin Congress which held its first session at Amraoti and the All-India Muslim League which met at Aligarh. The Hindu Mahasabha, though it dealt with several subjects relating to the internal economy of Hindu society, must also be classed as a political movement. Besides these, there are the Social Conferences. The National Social Conference usually held along with the Indian National Congress could not be held this year. It has been becoming increasingly difficult to find room for the Social Conference along with the Congress and, during recent years, it could only be smuggled into the engagements of the week with great difficulty. The Social Conference at Belgaum, therefore, passed a resolution appointing a Committee to arrange for the re-organisation of the Social Conference. This Committee has not been able to meet, but we hope that it will soon come to a decision, and that the Indian National Social Conference will be held under favourable conditions undistracted by other attractions. An All-India Social Conference was announced to be held along with the National Liberal Federation at Calcutta. Further particulars of the Conference have not yet become available. Along with the All-India Non-Brahmin Congress held at Amraoti a Social Conference was also held under the presidentship of His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur. We welcome this step as calculated to strengthen the Non-Brahmin movement by giving it a constructive character. In addition to these Conferences, there was this year the celebration of the Jubilee of the Aligarh Muslim University on a grand scale. It is said that no less than thirty Conferences, large and small, were held at Cawnpore during the Congress week. We notice that this year the number of caste and sub-caste conferences has become fewer. It would appear that the growth of large communal movements is tending to absorb smaller caste and sub-caste movements. We give to-day excerpts from the presidential addresses at the Indian National Congress, the Hindu Mahasabha and the Non-Brahmin Social Conference held at Amraoti. In subsequent issues will be given extracts from the presidential addresses at the other principal gatherings.

Mrs. Sarojini Naidu's address at the Indian National Congress avoided to a very large extent controversial topics and indicated in earnest and eloquent terms the main issues at the present day. Mr. N. C. Kelkar's address to the Hindu Mahasabha was largely an answer to the objections raised against a Hindu communal movement like the Mahasabha. The Maharaja of Kolhapur's address to the Non-Brahmin Social Conference at Amraoti was a sober and powerful plea for the re-constitution of Hindu society upon a democratic and equalitarian basis. Sir M. V Joshi's presidential address to the National Liberal Federation held at Calcutta was the most important politicial pronouncement of the year, characterised as it was by knowledge, experience and a genuine desire to promote united action among all political parties in the country. Sir Abdur Rahim's address to the Muslim League at Aligarh was the counterpart of Mr. Jadhav's address to the Non-Brahmin Confederation at Madras on which we commented last week. The only difference is that, while Mr. Jadhav was bitter against Brahmins, Sir Abdur Rahim was bitter against Hindus without distinction of caste. Whatever may be one's opinion about the utility of communal movements, one has to recognise that such movements are becoming stronger and appeal more effectively to the people than non-communal movements. The Hindu Mahasabha at Cawnpore is said to have been attended by twenty thousand persons as against fifteen thousand who attended the Indian National Congress. It was openly stated from the Congress platform that the Mahomedan interest in the movement was waning. It would, therefore, seem as if Indian public life will at least in the immediate future be based upon communal principles. Much as we may regret this tendency, it is the part of wisdom to recognise facts and to make the best of them. Reason and logic are powerless against the suspicion and prejudice which our communities entertain towards one another. We should welcome, therefore, every attempt to organise these communal movements not chiefly as political bodies for the purpose of securing special representation in the Councils, in the Legislatures and in the public services, but as agencies for the intellectual, social and material progress of the people. When every major community is thus raised to a common pitch of efficiency, it may perhaps be more easy to bring them together on a broad national platform. If the right of every community to work for its own salvation is freely recognised, half the difficulties which lead to the present state of tension will be obviated. Let the attitude of communities to one another's communal movements be one of sympathy and goodwill and, wherever possible, of active help. The talk of unity itself alarms suspicious minds which see in it only a trick to deprive their communities of their identity. Let us not, therefore, be in a hurry to do away with communal differences. Let us work patiently for the reform of every community and encourage movements by their own members towards the same end. Disinterested help will always be appreciated.

PRISON REFORM

Among the papers submitted to the Bombay Social Service Conference held recently, there is an informing paper on "Prison Reform" from the pen of Mr. T. A. Kulkarni. Ever since the publication of the report of the Indian Jails Committee, non-officials and social service agencies have been taking much interest in the subject, and the startling revelations now made before the Punjab Jails Enquiry Committee are bound to bring about a strong feeling in favour of a thorough overhauling of the existing jail administration. Witness after witness who appeared before the Committee testified to the prevalence of extraordinary corruption among the jail staff, the insanitary surroundings in which prisoners are forced to live, and the inhuman treatment accorded to them. The evidence of some of them like Lala Lajpat Rai is of special value inasmuch as it is given from a personal knowledge and experience. The subject of prison reform can be considered under two heads, one dealing with offenders before they are sent to jails, and the other with the jail administration proper.

One of the main principles enunciated by the Indian Jails Committee in the matter of prison reform, as Mr. Kulkarni points out, was the reduction of population in the jails. In India it is not uncommon to see young children brought just like ordinary offenders before ordinary courts and sent to jails or reformatories. Experience, however, has proved that neither jails nor reformatories are able to improve the young offenders. The reason is that sufficient care is not taken to see that the child offenders lead honest lives after their release. It is high time, therefore, that India also in common with Britain, America and some other European countries introduces childrens' courts and the probation system. At first sight it may appear that these two subjects are far removed from the question of jail administration, but it will be seen that they have an important bearing on the efficiency and economy of the jail administration. The English Children's Act of 1908 prohibits the sending of children to prison whether convicted or under trial. It also forbids the committal of children and young persons to prison even on remand. Special remand homes which have no resemblances to jails are provided for children. The same Act also created children's courts where the procedure is considerably simplified. The child offender is not placed in the dock and asked to plead guilty or not guilty, but the magistrate calls him by his side and gently asks him whether he has done the act in question. When this procedure is adopted, it is often found that the child confesses the truth. The idea that underlies such a procedure is to remove the child from the debasing and depraving influences of courts. The juvenile courts in America also are characterised by extreme simplicity and sympathy. The basic idea is that, just as in civil matters, a child is not legally responsible till he attains the age of majority, in criminal matters also, owing to the bad surroundings and environments which have prompted him to commit the crime, the child should be treated not as a criminal, but as a ward of the court. For adolescent offenders, advanced countries have Borstal institutions and every care is taken to see that the young offender does not come into contact with adult offenders. The Indian Jails Committee made many recommendations on the lines of English Children's Act. The Committee declared the imprisonment of children contrary to public policy and made provisions for children's courts and special remand homes. Emphasis was also laid on the fact that Magistrates should study children's cases carefully, not with a view to proving the crime, but with a view to reforming them. Excepting Madras which has passed a Children's Act embodying the provisions of the English Children's Act, no action has been taken on these recommendations by any other province. Like children's courts, the probation system is also a device to keep offenders out of jails. Under this system, juvenile offenders who are not hardened by frequent punishments, are placed on probation for a considerable length of time. It is claimed for this system that it enables the offender to lead a normal life and that, in many cases, the vigilance of the probation officer and the dread of punishment operate as a corrective to their bad tendencies. America has tried this system with great success. Nearly fifty per cent. of her offenders are given the advantage of this system. It is high time India also makes a beginning in this direction by training probation officers for this purpose. These two devices of children's courts and probation system, therefore, besides their intrinsic merits, also considerably reduce the cost of the jail administration and thus enable Government to introduce many desirable reforms and improvements in jails.

We shall now deal with the second part of the subject. As regards the jail staff, it is generally found difficult to find suitable men to fill the jailors' posts, because they are not sure of their future prospects. The evidence given before the Punjab Jails Committee has brought to light the extraordinary amount of corruption and bribery that is rampant among the jailors. Such a state of things can only be remedied by recruiting men of liberal education for the post. Lala Lajpat Rai, giving evidence before the Committee, made some valuable suggestions which the jail authorities would do well to adopt. He was of opinion that the recruitment of graduates and undergraduates for the posts of jailors and assistant jailors would tend to considerable improvement. Lalaji also pleaded for the increase of the present inadequate salaries of the assistant jailors. Lalaji advised that, wherever possible, the posts of jailors and superintendents of jails should be combined, for too often the superintendents play into the hands of the jailors. Lalaji's suggestions for recruiting visitors to jails from members of Legislative Council, senior medical men and men of independent position, and not from those nominated by the District Magistrate as at present, and for surprise visits to jails, also deserve serious consideration. It is also necessary that prisoners should be classified according to their crime and social position. For instance, those who have been convicted for mere expressions of opinion should be segregated from ordinary criminals. Lalaji emphasised that no distinction should be made between an Indian and European prisoner of the same position. Many giving evidence before the Committee also strongly protested against the inhuman system of prison labour such as corn-grinding and pumping of wells, existing in some of our jails, based as it is on the century-old barbarous practices which constantly tend to remind the prisoner of the retributive and vindictive spirit of punishment. The Indian Jails Committee unreservedly condemned such unproductive labour and recommended power-driven machinery for such purposes. No civilized government can tolerate for a moment such abuses in its prison administration. The State has also a duty towards its prisoners for bringing about a moral and mental improvement in them. At present, the facilities afforded for religious and moral instruction in jails are wholly inadequate. Sometimes, voluntary agencies are allowed to visit the prisoners and deliver lectures to them on a small honorarium, but, in the very nature of things, voluntary agencies cannot be expected to bring about such a moral reformation in the prisoners as paid agencies consisting of men imbued with the true spirit of humanity are calculated to do. There is also much to recommend the establishment of schools in jails where not only the three R's but also many subjects of current interest can be taught to the prisoners with advantage. A school conducted on these lines in one of the jails in Rangoon was found to be successful. We have only indicated in this article the lines on which reform can be made and we hope the disclosures made before the Punjab Jails Committee will open the eyes of other Provinces also to the necessity of effecting drastic reforms in their jail administration.

THE HON. MR. JADHAV ON THE NON-BRAHMIN MOVEMENT.

The Editor, The Indian Social Reformer.

Sir,

Your comment on the address of the Hon'ble Mr. Jadhav at the Non-Brahmin Confederation held recently at Madras, in your issue of the 26th December, deserves the appreciation of all thoughtful persons who are free from prejudice. The Minister's address, if it deserves any serious attention, can be taken as representing only the mentality of persons of his way of thinking. I doubt if it commands the endorsement of even the Madras Non-Brahmins; for, there are among them such progressive men as Rao Bahadur O. Kandaswamy Chetty. The division of Brahmins and Non-Brahmins as eternally antagonistic to each other and having nothing in common among them is itself on account of short-sightedness. True, there are Brahmins who are very conservative and selfish, impervious to reasoning, but it is to be found not only among Brahmins but also among Non-Brahmins and in any other community or class in the world. Humanity is the same all the world over. The murderous attacks of Brahmins on a Non-Brahmin officer to which the Minister of Education referred as being the general attitude of Brahmins towards Non-Brahmins, even if it is true, can be characterised only as exceptions. Let the Minister take a census of murder and murderous attacks in India or at least in his own province and he will be surprised to find the proportion of murder and such heinous crimes weighing against Non-Brahmins. I have many friends both among Brahmins and Non-Brahmins and my experience is that every individul can be judged only on his own merits and not according to the community to which he may happen to belong. Purity of thought and expression is as essential, if not more, for a movement which wants to have some recognition. It is not by deforming and painting black Brahmins and their ideas but reforming and broadening Non-Brahmin outlook that the Non-Brahmins should aspire to be progressive. Otherwise the movement is doomed to failure in the end, although there may be some apparent gain in job-hunting. That Non-Brahmins should have the vision to work in co-operation with Brahmins in all fair and just causes, in order to achieve the best results either in social or in political advancement, is the humble prayer and request of this writer to both Brahmins and Non-Brahmins, for there is no separate cause for Non-Brahmins from that of Brahmins.

Bombay, Yours etc.,

THE INDIAN NATIONAL CONGRESS.

MRS. SAROJINI NAIDU'S PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS.

The following are extracts from the Presidential address delivered by Sarojini Naidu to the 40th session of the Indian National Congress held at Cawnpore on the 26th December. After referring to the sad and irreparable loss the country has sustained in the death of Sir Surendranath Banerjea, Sir Ramakrishna Bhandarkar and Mr. C. R. Das, she said:

We need to-day some transcendent miracle of intrepid and enduring statesmanship to enable us to remobilize, reconcile and discipline our scattered and demoralised energies to a supreme unanimous effort for the final deliverance of India from the last shackles of her political subjection and to devise a comprehensive scheme that shall act as a natural and indispensable auxiliary of political emancipation, and include within the scope of its interest or benediction all the enterprises and endeavours that substantially contribute to the social, economic, industrial and intellectual advancement of India, consistently with the requirements of her own peculiar conditions and in accordance with the finest ideals of modern progress.

VILLAGE RECONSTRUCTION.

To give concrete expression to our decisions in regard to these ancillary activities, the Indian National Congress should create definite departments to be governed by groups of men and women specially qualified by their capacity or enthusiasm to administer to the vital and divergent wants of the people. The main divisions might be few but should include within their sphere of responsibility all cognate matters. To my mind it is of

realpatidar.com

paramount importance to formulate a practical scheme of village reconstruction on the lines of Deshbandhu Das's dream. For this purpose we must try to enlist a large band of missionary patriots of burning zeal who, set free from material wants by the pious charity of the house-holders of the country as in ancient times, should carry through the length and breadth of the land the beneficent evangel of self-reliance and self-respect taking the immemorial twin symbols of the plough and the spinning wheel as the central text of the teaching that shall liberate our unhappy peasantry from the crushing misery and terror of hunger, ignorance and disease Closely allied to the task of village reorganisation is the task of organising the industrial workers in the crowded cities, who are so often compelled to live under conditions that degrade and brutalise them and who, dislocated from the steadying influences of the familiar traditions and associations of the rural homes they leave in search for bread, are so hopelessly exposed to the temptations of immorality and vice. It should be our endeavour to assist in securing for them improved housing conditions, better wages and a cleaner atmosphere, and to establish an equitable and harmonious co-operation between Capital and Labour as a valuable joint asset of national progress.

Indian Education.

I am appalled at the criminal apathy of our general attitude towards the urgent problem of Indian education. The surpassing evil of foreign domination has been to enslave our imagination and intellect and alienate us from the glorious tradition of our national learning. We are to-day no more than the futile puppets of an artificial and imitative system of education which, entirely unsuited to the special trend of our racial genius, has robbed us of our proper mental values and perspectives, and deprived us of all true initiative and originality in seeking authentic modes of self-expression. It is pre-eminently our duty towards the young generation to so recreate our educational ideals as to combine, in felicitous and fruitful alliance, all the lovely regenerating wisdom of our Eastern culture with all the highest knowledge of art and science, philosophy and civic organisation evolved by the younger peoples of the West. In addition, I would insist with all the force at my command on including a complete course of military training as an integral part of national education.

Whatever the experiments recommended by the Commission now sitting to explore the avenues of military advancement for our people, it is incumbent upon the Congress to form forthwith a national militia by voluntary conscription of which the nucleus might well be the existing volunteer organisations. Further, we should also carefully consider the question of nautical as well as naval and aerial training to equip the nation for all purposes of defence against invasion or attack.

Indians Abroad.

Our adventurous compatriots, who have crossed the seas to seek their livelihood in the Dominions and colonies have from time to time been subjected to restrictive and repressive legislation. The White Paper still stands as a reproach against our failure to redress the wrongs of the Indian community in Kenya. But in the whole chronicle of civilized legislation there has never been so cruel and relentless an outrage against humanity as is deliberately embodied in the Anti-Asiatic Bill, which is calculated to exterminate the Indian community from South Africa.

Shall we not send across the seas a loving and ready response to their heart-rending cry for succour, and, through their ambassadors whom we welcome to-day, offer to our harassed and afflicted brothers in South Africa the assurance that India stands behind their courageous struggle to vindicate their inherent civic and human rights against the onslaught of such terrific oppression? We should not lose a single moment in forming an Overseas Department in the Congress manned by those who can keep themselves vigilantly aware of all the legislations and enactments that adversely or otherwise affect Indian settlers abroad.

Propaganda Work.

I cannot conceive how we have allowed ourselves to be so heavily handicapped by the lack of an efficient publicity which is the first essential of any campaign. We should, therefore, take immediate steps to form a department for widespread political propaganda and for the education of the masses in all matters pertaining to their civic and social interests, to the wrongs under which they labour, the struggles in which the nation is engaged and the iniquitous and unstable fiscal and financial policies so ruinous to the prosperity of the country.

The nationalist press, both vernacular and English, should be amongst the accredited channels of our propaganda. Above all a reliable foreign news service should be established to transmit to all the chief centres of the world the correct version of Indian affairs, and friendly embassies appointed to foster feelings of goodwill and understanding between India and the people of other lands.

Hindu-Muslim Unity.

And now I approach with the utmost hesitation and regret the most baffling and most tragic of all the problems before us. I, who have dedicated my life to the dream of Hindu-Muslim unity, cannot contemplate without tears of blood the dissensions and divisions between us that rend the very fabric of my hope. I have tried to arrive at a just appreciation of the many unfortunate causes that have brought about so deep a gulf between the two communities, and tended to quicken such a sharp and importunate sense of aloofness on the part of my Muslim brothers, which, to the profound alarm and resentment of the Hindu community, manifests itself in a growing and insistent demand for separate and preferential rights and privileges in academic, official, civic and political circles of life. Though I am convinced that the principle of communal representation, whether through a joint or a separate electorate, frustrates the conception of national solidarity, I am compelled to recognise that situated as we are to-day, in an atmosphere so tense and dark and bitter with unreasoning communal jealousy, suspicion, fear, distrust and hatred, it is not possible to reach any satisfactory or abiding re-adjustment without the most earnest and patient collaboration between Hindu and Muslim statesmen of undeniable patriotism to whom we should entrust the delicate and difficult task of seeking some sovereign remedy for so devastating a disease.

If Hindus and Mussalmans would both learn to practise the divine qualities of mutual forbearance and accord to one another perfect liberty of worship and

modes of living without the tyranny of fanatical interruptions of one another's appointed rituals and sacrifices, if they would but learn to reverence the beauty of each other's creeds and the splendour of each other's creeds and the splendour of each other's civilizations, if the women of the two communities would but join together in the intimate friendship of their common sisterhood, and nurture their children in an atmosphere of mutual sweetness and harmony, how near we should come to the fulfilment of our hearts' desire!

The National Demand

These are some of the accessory features of our work. The real function, however, of the Indian National Congress is the speedy attainment of Swaraj. To-day the Swaraj Party with its highly disciplined organisation and its striking record of success is the only political body within the Congress engaged in actual combat with bureaucratic authority. Is it not in this crucial hour the unmistakable duty of all the other political parties in the country, irrespective of their particular labels and particular beliefs, to return to the Congress which invites them with open doors, and coalesce all their divided energies and talents in devising a common programme of action in pursuance of a common goal?

All of them have openly acknowledged that the Reforms of 1919 which were to have created a new era of progress have proved nothing but a mirage and the powers they professed to transfer to the people nothing but a deceptive myth. All of them, surely, are tacitly agreed upon some common maximum of the wrongs they are still prepared to endure, some common minimum of the rights they are now determined to enforce. And whatever be my own personal conviction, they, at all events, are all in favour, at least, as an initial form of self-government, of the ideal of Dominion Status, so elaborately expounded in the Commonwealth of India Bill, and more succinctly and emphatically embodied in the National Demand which has been endorsed by the representatives of all political schools in the Legislative Assembly. Below the limits of that demand the Indian nation cannot descend without irretrievable damage to its dignity and self-respect. It is now for the Government to make the responsive gesture that shall decide our future attitude. If the response be sincere and magnanimous, with ample guarantees of good-will and good faith on its part, it will necessitate an immediate revision of our present policy. But if, by the end of the spring sessions, we receive no answer or an answer that evades the real issues or proves unworthy of our acceptance, the National Congress must clearly issue a mandate to all those who come within its sphere to vacate their seats in the Central and Provincial Legislatures and inaugurate from Kailas to Kanyakumari, from the Indus to the Brahmaputra, an untiring and dynamic campaign to arouse, consolidate, educate and prepare the Indian people for all the progressive and ultimate stages of our united struggle and teach them that no sacrifice is too heavy, no suffering too great, no martyrdom too terrible, that enables us to redeem our mother from the unspeakable dishonour of her bondage, and bequeath to our children an imperishable legacy of peace.

In the battle of liberty, fear is the one unforgiveable treachery and despair, the one unforgiveable sin.

Swarajist Programme.

The 40th session of the Indian National Congress, held at Cawnpore, after a heated debate, adopted the following resolution moved by Pandit Motilal Nehru, the leader of the Swaraj Party:

(A) This Congress confirms part 8 of the resolution passed by the All India Congress Committee at the meeting held at Patna on the 22nd and 23rd September last and resolves that the Congress do now take up and carry on such political work as is necessary in the interests of the country and for this purpose do employ the whole of the machinery and funds of the Congress save and except such funds and assets as under that resolution have been declared to belong to the All-India Spinners' Association and save such funds and assets as may be ear-marked.

(B) This Congress reiterates its faith in civil disobedience as the only effective weapon to be used in the last resort to enforce our national claim and vindicate our national honour. Having regard to the fact that the country is not now ready for it this Congress resolves:—

(a) That it will undertake such political work as is calculated to prepare or strengthen the people for civil disobedience and will refrain from taking part in any activity tending to retard the progress of such preparation;

(b) That the guiding principle in carrying on all political work shall be self-reliance in all activities which make the healthy growth of the nation and resistance to every activity, governmental or other, that impedes the nation's progress towards Swaraj, and for the purpose aforesaid, this Congress adopts the following programme of political work:

I. The work in the country shall be directed to the education of the peoples in their political rights and training them to acquire the necessary strength and power of resistance to win those rights by carrying out the constructive programme of the Congress with special reference to popularising the spinning wheel and khaddar, promoting intercommunal unity, the removal of untouchability, ameliorating the condition of the suppressed classes and the removal of the drinking evil, and shall include the capture of local bodies, the organization of villages and of labour, both industrial and agricultural, the adjustment of relations between the employers of labour and the workmen and between the landlords and the tenants and the general advancement of the national, economical, industrial and commercial interests of the country both in India and overseas.

II. The work outside the country shall be directed to dissemination of accurate information.

III. The work in the Legislatures shall be concentrated in the National Demand made by the Assembly by its resolutions of the 18th February 1924 and of the 8th September 1925 and the following action shall be taken:

(1) The Swaraj Party in the Assembly shall at the earliest opportunity invite the Government to give their final decision on the said demand and in case no decision is announced before the end of February or the decision announced is held not to be satisfactory by the Working Committee of the Congress, the Party shall be adopting the proper procedure to intimate to the Government on the floor of the House that the Party will no longer continue to remain and work in the present Legislatures as heretofore but will go into the country to work among the people. Thereupon all Swarajist members of the Council of State, the Legislative Assembly and such Provincial Councils as may be in session at the time shall leave their seats and report themselves to the Working Committee for further instructions. The Swarajist members of such Councils as are not in session at the time shall not attend future meetings of the said Council and shall likewise report themselves to the Working Committee.

(2) No member of the Swaraj Party in the Council of State, the Legislative Assembly or any of the Provincial Councils shall thereafter attend any meeting of any of the said Legislatures or any of their committees except for the purpose of preventing his seat from being declared vacant or of throwing out budgets and measures involving additional taxation, if and when possible, provided that prior to their being called upon to leave their seats it shall be open to the Swarajist members of the various Legislatures to engage themselves in such activities in their respective Legislatures as are permissible to them under the existing rules of the Party.

(3) The Working Committee shall, immediately on receipt of the reports mentioned in sub-clause (1), call a meeting of the All-India Congress Committee to frame a programme of work to be carried out by the Congress and the Swaraj Party organisations in co-operation with each other throughout the country.

The said programme of work shall include selected heads of the general work mentioned in clauses (I) and (II) above, as also the education of the electorates in the policy herein laid down and shall indicate the lines on which the next general election is to be run by and in the name of the Congress and state clearly the issues on which the Congressmen shall seek election, provided that the policy of non-acceptance of the office in the gift of the Government shall continue to be followed until a satisfactory response to the National Demand is made by the Government.

In the event of the final decision of the Government on the demand of the Assembly being found satisfactory and acceptable by the Working Committee a meeting of the All-India Congress Committee shall forthwith be held to determine the future course of action.

(6) For the purpose of taking the above steps and until the Swarajists leave the Legislatures as herein provided, the Swarajya party and the rules made thereunder shall be followed in the Legislatures, subject to such changes as may be made by the Congress or the All-India Congress Committee from time to time.

(7) For the purpose of starting the work under sub-clauses (3) and (4) the All-India Congress Committee shall allot such funds as it may consider sufficient for the initial expenses of the necessary propaganda in that behalf, but any further funds required for the said propaganda shall be raised by the Working Committee or under its direction by contributions from the public.

ALL-INDIA NON-BRAHMIN SOCIAL CONFERENCE.

The first session of the All-India Non-Brahmin Social Conference was held on the 27th December at Amraoti (Berars) under the presidentship of H. H. the Maharaja of Kolhapur. In the course of his address, His Highness said :—

You have no doubt heard public men holding that social reform must precede political reform and those who think that the same should follow it. Both, I feel, do not appreciate the real nature of human activities. The failure of a political idealist to ignore the close connection of his work with social and other factors of public work or the inability of social reformers to visualise themselves how closely their other interests are interlaced with the activities of workers in the other fields of public life, equally create confusion and court failure.

Social reform was eschewed by some of the leading politicians of the last generation on the ground that the 'Indian Nation' which they wished to create consisted of diverse creeds and castes and therefore had differing social problems. But I venture to think that if that state of things was to be allowed to continue, their ambition to foster national life in this country was laying its foundation upon sands. And that this was so, has been amply proved by the bitter experience of the past. What has been in reality the effect of their one-sided national efforts? Hindus suspicious of Mahomedans; Mahomedans jealous of Hindu activities; Brahmins angry with the Non-Brahmins; Non-Brahmins united in the common object of pulling down the unjust predominance of the Brahmins; the untouchables feebly trying to rise in rebellion against the society as a whole; and the Non-Brahmin communities also complaining one against the other. Is this not sufficient to show that a consciousness of common political grievances is not enough to support a national movement?

Montford Reforms Not To Blame.

Those who talk of Varnashram Dharma as the binding force which connects one Hindu with another and holds the whole Hindu world together, are talking of a system which does not exist except in their own imagination, and in the perverted and degenerate form of our caste system, it is nothing less than a curse. I have recently heard enlightened public men saying that the constitutional reforms of 1919 have sown the apple of discord among us and led to the birth among others of the Non-Brahmin controversy. This is merely a superficial view of the situation. The Montford reforms were only an occasion for the outburst of dissensions among us and their cause lies far deeper into our social constitution. The communalism which seems to have revived by the reforms, and which supposed to ju tify the argument, is not the child of those reforms. On the contrary, their great authors made every attempt to avoid the growth of communal spirit of narrowness which, I admit, they failed to do. But the fault was not theirs. In a society such as we have and with ideas such as prevail among us, it was impossible that any other result should follow the impact of democratic political ideals upon our old and unsympathetic social system. Far from being an evil result of those constitutional changes I think the Non-Brahmin movement embodies the rejuvenated ideal of Non-Brahmin thinkers from the days of Vishvamitra, Gautama and Mahaveer to the days we live in.

Not in an Exclusive Spirit.

Why, critics might ask, do you close your doors to the Brahmins as the Non-Brahmin movement apparently

Vol. II. No 5 BOMBAY—SATURDAY, JANUARY 2, 1926. Price One Anna.

THE ALL-INDIA PROHIBITION CONVENTION.

The All-India Prohibition Convention meets for the first time in Delhi on the 29th instant under the presidentship of Dewan Bahadur M. Ramachandra Rao, M.L.A. A tentative programme prepared by the Arrangements Committee, of which the Rev. Herbert Anderson, the chief promoter of the Convention, is the convener, is printed elsewhere. The Convention will have to survey the progress of the Prohibition movement in the country, and outline its future programme of work to bring about the early attainment of Prohibition. Fortunately, there is a complete unanimity of Indian public opinion on the question of Prohibition, and it is to be hoped that every party and community will be fully represented in the Convention.

The chief obstacle in the way of the attainment of Prohibition is the Government's reactionary attitude which was manifest in their opposition to the demands of the legislatures to adopt an excise policy that will accelerate the advent of Prohibition. The most outstanding event of the year is the national demand as voiced in the Assembly's resolution on Total Prohibition. The passing of that resolution by an overwhelming majority with not a single dissentient voice from non-official Indians is a clear indication of the fact that, notwithstanding communal and party differences, all shades of Indian opinion are united on the demand for Prohibition. The Government's opposition to this resolution had a far-reaching effect in as much as other provincial governments took the clue from Sir Basil Blackett's notorious speech emphatically opposing the very idea of Prohibition and sternly refusing to commit the Government to any policy which would ultimately lead to Prohibition. To all appearances, it may seem that Bombay has advanced much in respect of Prohibition, for it has adopted Total Prohibition as the goal of its excise policy. Recently, however, as we have shown more than once, the Bombay Government has been going back upon its declared policy. The reduction of the duty on "Indian-made foreign liquor" from Rs. 21-14-0 to Rs. 17-8-0 per proof gallon, the refusal to fix a time-limit to the introduction of Prohibition or even to introduce Local Option as a means to Prohibition, the disallowance by the Governor of Mr. R. G. Pradhan's Local Option Bill in utter disregard of public opinion and sentiment—these were the successive steps in the retrograde excise policy of the Bombay Government. In Bengal, as the Rev. Herbert Anderson's remarkable statement which Mr. Andrews sends us with his own remarks which we print to-day points out, the Government has not taken any action on the resolution passed by the Bengal Legislative Council in 1921 and that of the Calcutta Corporation last year, demanding the goal of the excise administration in Bengal to be the eventual suppression of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor and poisonous drugs except for medical and industrial purposes. The attitude of the Punjab Government has been equally apathetic Replying to an interpellation in July last whether Government proposed to adopt a policy of Total Prohibition, the Minister of Agriculture replied that Government would watch the results of the Bombay experiment with keen interest. And evidently they must have been interested in the Bombay Government's recent experiments! The Punjab Local Option Act which has long been on the Statute Book has been made little use of. In U. P., the resolution which the leader of the Swaraj Party moved recently in the Legislative Council that Government should unequivocally declare that the aim and object of its excise policy was total abstinence, met with a sad fate. The Madras Excise Advisory Committee which was appointed last year, has recently submitted its report. But its recommendations, a summary of which will be found elsewhere, are, however, most reactionary. As the Hindu rightly points out, "the constitution of the Committees and Board is such as to make them mere mouth-pieces of the local officials; and, even if they function most independently, they cannot affect the drink evil a whit as they could not reduce, if they would, more than an infinitesimal proportion of the shops." Witness again the opposition of the Government to a reasonable resolution moved in the Madras Legislative Council the other day that all toddy, arrack, brandy, opium, ganja and other shops of the kind in big towns like Trichinopoly should be located outside the Municipal toll-gate. The Minister of Excise trotted out the usual excuse that if the shops were removed to a distant place out of easy reach of the police, illicit manufacture would become the rule.

It will thus be seen that the usual constitutional methods of changing the Government's excise policy in favour of Prohibition have not so far met with any success. So long as the Government treats the resolutions of the legislatures with scant courtesy, it is evident that much cannot be done through legislatures. The time has, therefore, come to look direct to the people from the Government, and appeal to the victims of this vicious habit to give up drink. We are sorry to find that, besides a passing reference to the drink evil as one of the items of the constructive programme, the Indian National Congress did not think it worth while to pass a resolution relating to Prohibition, nor did it consider the proposal made by Mr. C. Rajagopalachar which was endorsed by Dewan Bahadur Ramachandra Rao as being worthy of consideration by the various conferences. Pledged as they are to the removal of the drink evil, the Congressmen ought to support every endeavour towards the attainment of Prohibition. We do hope that the fact that the promoters of the Convention do not see eye to eye with them in politics or that some of them belong to an "alien" race, will not deter Congressmen from doing their duty by the Convention which has a compelling claim for support from every Indian who values the benefits of Prohibition. The task before the Convention is by no means easy. The Convention may have to establish small committees in every nook and corner of the country to undertake active propaganda work, not excluding peaceful picketing, if that is the only alternative, among the masses to eradicate the drink evil. This cannot be undertaken without sufficient men and money, and it behoves every one to contribute his or her mite towards the success of the campaign that might be launched by the Convention. We sincerely wish the Convention all success.

PROHIBITION IN CALCUTTA.

(By Mr. C. F. Andrews).

During the hot weather, while in Simla, I had an opportunity of putting before His Excellency the Acting Viceroy, Lord Lytton, the present position among the reformers of the Prohibition of Drink and Drugs.

While we were conversing I ventured to put before him the fact that Mahatma Gandhi had again and again made the Prohibition issue one of the two main conditions which would enable him, if the right step were taken, to offer co-operation again with the Government of India, which he had not hesitated to condemn on account of its immoral traffic in Drink and Drugs. The other condition was the open encouragement of khaddar.

It appeared to me that these two conditions were by no means exacting or onerous. Indeed it seemed obvious that the poor people would be immensely benefited if only these two conditions could be fulfilled. In this conversation it was further pointed out what primary importance Mahatma Gandhi attached to the whole Prohibition Movement.

The conversation naturally went on to Prohibition in Calcutta. The figures for the Drink and Drugs Revenue were nothing less than appalling and they were year by year increasing. The figure for opium alone was actually twenty-four times as much as the League of Nations' index figure for legitimate consumption.

Lord Lytton, while not committing himself in any way, showed the utmost sympathy with the Temperance Reform. As far as he himself was concerned he had no wish whatever to let revenue stand in the way wherever reform was needed. He asked me personally to help to point out in any way, in his own Province of Bengal, and especially with regard to Calcutta what could be done to reduce consumption and said that he would pledge himself to look into the matter most carefully.

The natural thing for me to do with regard to alcohol, after having received such an invitation, was to apply to the veteran in the cause of temperance in Calcutta, whom we all revere for his persistent, devoted and untiring work, the Rev. Herbert Anderson. He very kindly sent me a statement dealing with the present situation in Calcutta which appears to me to be an important contribution to the subject. This statement has already been sent to Lord Lytton, but I have the Rev. H. Anderson's permission to give it wider publicity. It runs as follows :—

"It is difficult in a short note to summarise what I believe to be the most vital steps to be taken to meet the present pressing demands of the temperance movement in Bengal, but let me endeavour to do so.

The first requirement is for some further clear expression of a genuine desire on the part of Government to pay greater regard to the wishes of the Indian community. No one acquainted with the way those wishes have been expressed in the Bengal Legislative Council in 1921, in the Calcutta Corporation last year, and by Indian writers in the Press, can doubt that Indian leaders of various social and political schools desire the goal of the Excise Administration in Bengal to be the eventual suppression of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor and poisonous drugs except for medical and industrial purposes.

The Bombay Government have acceded to this popular demand. The large Indian State of Travancore has accepted the same goal. One or two small States like Bhopal are experimenting in the total abolition of the traffic. The U. P. Legislative Council has asked the Government to make the total suppression of the vend of drinks and drugs its avowed intention. The Government of Ceylon has recently explained that its policy is to ascertain as far as possible the will of the people, and then to be guided by the will of the people, and that in spite of the fact that 30,000 Ceylonese depend on the drink trade for a livelihood, and that toddy and arrack can be produced in the back-yard of almost any house or shanty in the island. I believe that in Bengal the mass of the people is no whit behind any of those areas in its desire for the eventual abolition of a traffic in these things.

Now that Excise Administration is not a deferred subject, it gives a fitting opportunity for a pronouncement more definite and sympathetic than that contained in the speeches of members and Ministers during the last four years. Admitting the difficulties, which we all know to be very great, and making no promise of any definite period within which the suppression of the traffic shall be finally carried into effect—for the complex eléments involved, financial and administrative, make that impossible—it would be a firm foundation for the introduction of measures for the restriction of consumption of both liquor and drugs for the Government of Bengal to express the decision that the total suppression of the traffic shall be the goal of Excise Administration in Bengal.

The next step—which will prove the extent to which Indian opinion is genuine, as well as lead to the immediate restriction of consumption—is the application of the principles of local option, (1) to Calcutta and its 32 wards, and (2) to the rest of Bengal, in district areas. In a recent communication from Darjeeling, it is reported that the Government is giving consideration to this difficult problem. In the Bengal Excise Administrative Report of 1921-22 it is stated :—"Two resolutions were moved in the Bengal Legislative Council, one for the application of the principle of local option to Municipal areas, as one of the measures of the restriction of consumption of intoxicating liquors and drugs, and the other aiming at the total prohibition of drink in Bengal. The former Resolution was adopted by the Council, and the latter rejected. The question of taking steps to give effect to the resolution adopted is under consideration." Four years have elapsed since that note was written, and local option is still under consideration. We request Government to get a move on. The two main difficulties are finance for the scheme and the question of franchise. Finance ought not to be a difficulty. The revenue from Excise in Calcutta, Howrah and Bally has risen as follows :—

|---|---|---|
| 1923-24 | ... ... | Rs. 73,49,906 |
| 1922-23 | ... ... | ,, 65,00,300 |
| 1921-22 | ... ... | ,, 56,20,144 |
| 1920-21 | ... ... | ,, 57,58,183 |
| 1919-20 | ... ... | ,, 51,18,004 |
| 1918-19 | ... ... | ,, 49,55,343 |
| 1917-18 | ... ... | ,, 40,72,294 |
| 1916-17 | ... ... | ,, 28,76,944 |

That is to say, the revenue has increased by an average of over six lacs per annum. Why should not a portion of this annual increase be used to meet the financial cost of any local option administrative proposals ? It will not interfere with any regular expenditure.

Then on the question of the franchise. The facts upon which political and civic franchises are based at present need to be examined, and will doubtless be found unsatisfactory for a local option franchise. I have always urged that Calcutta conditions are exceptional, and, though it might be difficult at the beginning, a household franchise according to ward areas would be the most satisfactory. Let the head of every house

speak for the inmates of that house, and let a triennial or quinquennial referendum on the question of retention of same number of shops, reduction, or abolition, be voted upon. The preparation of a register of house-holders should not be difficult in view of the Corporation possessing a property register, which has the number of premises in each district, pucca and bustee. This record is brought up to date annually. In the Corporation Year Book for 1925 it is stated that the total for Calcutta's 32 wards is 66,739 pucca premises, and 4,773 bustee, a not impossible number to deal with.

The franchise for districts is a more difficult problem. If the Municipal Franchise were accepted, there is a probability that the drinking and drug-taking communities would not get much of a look-in. A beginning should be made, however, with certain districts where there is the probability of getting a genuine district opinion, through local organisations, punchayats, local and district boards.

In Calcutta and one or two other large cities, the difficulty of European drinking customs cannot be overlooked. If the European community, through its accredited representatives, seeks for itself exceptional treatment in any local option measure, there is a feeling in some Indian circles that consideration ought to be given to this demand, but the difficulty of 'exceptional' arrangements would, in my opinion, be very great. I am not prepared to say that it is insuperable.

To sum up: First, a definite pronouncement on the ultimate goal of Excise Administration, and second, something definite in local option.

If there must be long delay before any practical issue on the introduction of local option, I would urge a much more drastic policy in the reduction of the number of licenses, a raising of duty and prices, and the removal of sites from what can only be termed temptation positions. The rules of the Department are not carried into effect on this matter. Industrial centres have their shops in too favourable positions. If the Department would be firm in this matter and refuse licenses where other sites cannot be found in place of those that are now objectionable, we should secure a considerable reduction in the amount of drugs and drink consumed."

MADRAS EXCISE ADVISORY COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

The report of the Excise Advisory Committee appointed in accordance with a resolution passed by the Madras Legislative Council in August 1921 to investigate and suggest means of improving the excise administration in the Presidency was recently published. The Committee has, however, made only some tentative recommendations which are (1) the creation of licensing boards with non-official majorities with extended powers in major municipalities of a population above fifty thousand, and (2) licensing boards with wider powers for the town of Madras.

Advisory Committees with a non-official majority in case of rural areas including small municipalities are to consist of three officials and six non-officials with power to elect their own chairman and with a tenure of office for three years. Non-official members are to be selected with a view to represent various interests.

This board is to have power to determine the number and location of arrack, opium, ganja and beer shops and F. L. Taverns subject only to the limitation that no board shall, during its term of office, reduce by more than one-fifth any class of shops and no succeeding board shall reduce the number to a lower figure than one-third of the number existing when such boards were first constituted. It is not proposed to make over to the board at present the determination of the number and location of toddy shops.

The licensing-board of the town of Madras is to consist of three officials and eight non-officials and is to have powers similar to and more extensive than the powers of licensing boards for major municipalities, subject only to the interference by the Excise Commissioner in case of illicit distillation and sale of alcohol in the municipality.

The licensing boards for rural areas are to have three officials and five non-official members representing municipal councils and taluka boards within the local area, one member to represent temperance, one member to represent excise license and one to represent labouring or depressed classes. This Committee is also to have the power to elect its own chairman and hold office for a period of three years.

The Committee do not think that automatic reduction is possible, They think that reduction is dependent upon the wishes of a majority of the adult population the first step towards which is to bring them face to face with the problem and to give them an opportunity of studying it in actual working.

The All-India Prohibition Convention: The Rev. Herbert Anderson, convener, Arrangements Committee, writes to say that the arrangements for the Prohibition Convention at Delhi, on January 29-31, are well forward. A strong Reception Committee has been formed of which the President is Dr. S. F. Shroff, F.R.C.S.E., the Chairman, Mr Sri Ram, Bar-at-Law, Vice Chairman, R. S. Lala Paras Das, Government Treasurer and Hony. Magistrate, Treasurer and three Secretaries, Mr. Mahommed Aminuddin, B.A., LL.B., Municipal Commissioner acting as General Secretary, assisted by Mr. D. Hyder Ali of the Y. M. C. A. and Mr Deep Chand Jain of the Delhi Central Social Service League. During the Convention days the headquarters of the League will be held at the Y. M. C. A. Rooms, Queens Gardens—a central and suitable place. At present the Reception Committee headquarters are at the offices of the Social Service League, Fatehpuri Street. The Reception Committee has secured the use of the various places of meeting, is raising locally the money necessary for the local advertising of the meetings, and has also decided to get up a small exhibition of temperance literature, diagrams, lantern slides, and other objects to show what our Movement is doing in this way to help the Prohibition cause. It has been understood that all members of the Arrangements Committee who can be present shall have a ticket and that any personal friends of theirs who intend also to be present shall receive complimentary tickets. For the sake of the Register of Delegates it is important that tickets should not be given without the officials knowing for whom they are intended. Members of the Arrangements Committee are requested to state whether they desire more than one ticket and if so for whom. Requests from various parts of India have been received which suggest that, though the number of delegates from temperance organisations will not be large, they will be representatives, and it is hoped each member of the Arrangements Committee will be present and will endeavour to secure the presence of friends and well-wishers of the cause. The Literature Sub-Committee is bringing out a series of Prohibition Pamphlets four of which are in press and two or more others will be ready before the Convention.

Prohibition in Bhopal: A Reuter's cable dated Dec. 18th says that Miss Agnes Slack, President of the British Women's Temperance Association, accompanied by Lady Clwyd, Vice-President of the North Wales Branch, visited the Begum of Bhopal and congratulated her on the introduction of prohibition in Bhopal. The Begum, in reply, referred to the very great changes for the better resulting therefrom, for which her women subjects had been especially grateful. She pointed out that she was guided in her action by the Mahomedan religion and although the Hindu teachings were slightly different with regard to alcoholic drink, the Hindu population had been very obedient and had not made any trouble. She regarded the loss in revenue as only a small thing compared with her people's greater happiness and welfare.

Mr. Ramachandra Rao on the Prohibition Convention: Dewan Bahadur Ramachandra Rao, who is in Delhi in connection with the Skeen Committee, in a statement to the press, regarding the Prohibition League of India, said: "The arrangements for holding the League are making very satisfactory progress. Papers on the evils of alcohol would be read at the Conference. The League is really intended as a rallying ground to co-ordinate the activities of the various temperance organisations in this country. A central organization does not now exist, and the League that will be formed in January next will link up all the existing temperance organisations in this country. Rev. H Anderson, Secretary of the Arrangements Committee, is working hard in co-operation with these organisations which are to send delegates. In view of the approaching session of the League, I do not wish to go into the details of the question. I am gratified at the proposal made by Mr. C. Rajagopalachariar of Madras, to make prohibition a subject for discussion in the Congress. I hope that all political and social conferences that are meeting this month will pass resolutions, and express their views on vital questions relating to alcoholism".

Prohibition in U. P: The U. P. Legislative Council cannot be congratulated on its rejection on the 21st December by a majority of 23 votes, a resolution, moved by Pandit Govind Ballav Pant, leader of the Swaraj Party, recommending to the Government that it should declare, unequivocally, by embodying it in the Excise Manual, that the aim and object of its excise policy was total abstinence. The mover said that the present formula of maximum revenue and minimum consumption did not go far enough. The Government should restate the aim of its excise policy, as the promotion of total abstinence, and, in doing so, it should omit all reference to the promotion of excise revenue, as it might mislead both the public and the excise and revenue officers of the Government. It was pointed out, on behalf of the Government, that its present excise policy, as stated in the Excise Manual, was the promotion of temperance by all legitimate means. That was as good a formula as the one suggested by the mover of the resolution. During the past few years, the force of public opinion, on the one hand, and the restrictions imposed by the Government in pursuance of their policy, on the other, had caused a striking decrease in consumption. The Government had no reason to believe that public opinion would relax its pressure, and the Government had no intention of relaxing their own restrictions. The Government believed, therefore, that the present move towards temperance would be steadily continued, and held that such a steady progress must culminate in total abstinence. The Government doubted whether the absence of any reference to excise revenue in the Government's statement of its excise policy would improve matters in any way. During the last few years they had viewed with equanimity—because it was due to less drinking—the loss of some 50 lakhs of excise revenue.

Madras Government's Anti-Drink Propaganda: The order passed by the Madras Government that health officers should not do propaganda against the evils of drink was brought to light during the question time in the Legislative Council on the 16th of Dec. The question arose on certain local boards passing a resolution directing health officers to carry on anti-drink propaganda. Health officers referred the matter to the Director of Public Health. Government passed the above order when correspondence came up before them.

Demand for Prohibition in Baroda: We are glad to learn that in connection with the Jubilee celebrations of His Highness Sir Sayaji Rao Gaekwar of Baroda, the Baroda Praja Mandal is organising a mass petition of fifty thousand signatures demanding the extension of Reforms and the adoption of total prohibition as the goal of the State policy. The task of getting signatures has already commenced.

Bombay Corporation Rejects Prohibition Resolution: We regret that the Bombay Corporation at a recent meeting rejected the resolution against whisky, wines, champagne or any intoxicating liquor being allowed to be served at dinner entertainments held in the Municipal Hall or in any part of the Municipal premises.

Success of Local Option in Ceylon: As the result of polls held on the 10th, 11th and 12th of December for the abolition of the three toddy taverns at Mukamalai, Chempionpattu and Kilali respectively of the Pachchilapali Division in the Jaffna District, Ceylon, all the three taverns have been abolished. The percentages for abolition were 65, 64 and 75 respectively.

Indian Opium in Persia: The interim report of the Indian Delegation to the sixth session of the Assembly of the League of Nations, just published, deals among other things with the vigorous debate that took place in the Geneva Opium Conference on the extent of trade in opium from ports in the Persian Gulf to the Far East, the statistics of which furnished considerable evidence of illicit traffic. The Fifth Committee eventually agreed to adopt a proposal for the sending of a commission to Persia, consisting of three persons, one with previous experience of international missions, a second an agricultural expert, and a third a business expert, to report on the possibility of replacing opium cultivation by other crops in that country.

The Jaffna Central Temperance League: With a view to arrest the increase in the consumption of foreign liquor the Committee of the above League at its meeting held recently resolved: (a) that the Customs duty on all foreign liquor be increased and (b) that prohibition be placed on the importation of cheap foreign liquor like Gin, (c) that no one, as in the cases of arrack and toddy, may possess an unlimited quantity of foreign liquor or sell the same (d) that no one be allowed to possess foreign liquor without a license.

Prohibition in Travancore: The November number of the Indian Review of Madras contains the following: "The Committee appointed by the Travancore Legislative Council to examine the excise policy of the Government, and to suggest measures for the eradication of the drink evil from that State has concluded its labours, and submitted its report. It has recommended (1) that no new shop should be opened within two furlongs of any market, school-house, place of worship, hospital, factory or place of public resort, (2) that there should be a distance of not less than half a mile between one shop and another in towns and one mile in rural areas, and (3) that a reduction of 5 per cent in the number of shops be made at the renewal of each triennial contract."

Prohibition in U. S. A.: The New York correspondent of the Forward writes: After three years, Prohibition is still on its trial, with the final results in doubt. Bad as well as good effects are evident. These are the conclusions of the first attempt to make a comprehensive survey of the results of Prohibition undertaken by the Research Department of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, an interdenominational organisation in which all sects except Roman Catholics are represented. The first section of its 30,000 words report, published recently, finds that there is increased drinking among young people and also a greater disrespect for the law, but that economic conditions have improved, that wives are receiving greater proportions of their husbands' earnings, that health in the homes is better, and that there has been a decrease in juvenile delinquency. It confesses, however, its inability to differentiate clearly to what degree these better economic conditions are attributable to the tremendous prosperity which has raised wages and reduced unemployment to a minimum. It further admits the extreme difficulty of obtaining reliable statistics. Its figures were obtained through questionnaires sent to 2,700 social welfare workers, and the report says that 90 per cent. of these declined to fill in the forms.

seeks to do? Is it not unjust that you should resent the separatist tendencies of the Brahmins and exhibit the same in your relations with them? My answer is that the Non-Brahmin movement does not foster, encourage or even defend the exclusive spirit of the caste system anywhere, not even in its relations with the Brahmins. What we wish to keep away from is the system which is synonymous with Brahminism, which divides artificially groups of men from other groups of men, styles one group as inferior and another as superior only on the ground of birth, stunts the growth of men by instilling into their minds the idea of a preordained lower destiny for one class as against the other and then denies even to the able among the class an opportunity to rise to the full height of manhood. The end of the Non-Brahmin movement is to end the Non-Brahmin castes and this will certainly mean the blotting out of the entire caste system so that the Hindu community including the Brahmins shall be one, compact, organic whole. If to-day our movement appears to exclude one caste from its sphere, it is to fit itself for absorbing the same in proper time. In my eyes, Brahmins are as much my brethern as Non-Brahmins, only that I desire them to be frankly and really so.

Our ideal of social life is, thus, the obliteration of all distinctions which we can dispense with. I hope earnestly that though faiths may exist side by side, they shall not be a bar to one, united social life; that caste as such shall cease to exist; and that, whatever differences nature may create between the abilities of one man and another, social institutions shall recognise no artificial distinctions and, in the eyes of society as in the eyes of God, all shall be the limbs of one organism, one with it, indissoluble parts and parcels of it.

I appeal to the Hindus and Moslems to harmonise difference in faith with unity of social life, to propagate a spirit of tolerance for ideals and customs which we may not ourselves accept, to resolve once for all that though we may cling with all tenacity to our own dogmas, we shall not try to impose any upon others nor shall any of us look upon conversion or reconversion as any concern of any one but the man who chooses to be converted or reconverted. Religion must be a matter of personal faith and choice while social relations must be freed from the restrictions now placed upon them on account of communal differences.

The "Untouchables."

Social reforms consist in an improvement in another direction to which also I must draw your attention for a moment. The development, free and unfettered, of the individual, consistently with the good of the society as a whole, is as much a necessity as a reconstruction of a mutual relationship of the members of that society. The denial of education to children of the so-called lower classes, the old but still dominant idea that Providence has intended some communities for manual labour alone, the exclusion of women from all intellectual life and their being condemned to a perpetual life of inferiority and subordination, the absence of any scope for individual will or discretion in matters about marriage owing to the prevalence of very early marriages of children, these and many others are subjects which call for urgent attention on your part.

I hope earnestly that you will do your very best to improve the lot of these unfortunate classes. You are aware of the bold steps which my late revered father took in this direction. I look upon those steps as a sacred trust inherited by me. Members of these classes now hold important places in my State and I hope that the hostels for the education of their boys will soon produce men capable of occupying still higher places. My hospitals, schools and public offices are open to them exactly as to other people in my State and they receive exactly the same treatment as others in their institutions. Untouchability has thus been completely banned from the public offices in my State.

Social reform has been hitherto understood by Indians in a somewhat narrow sense. For instance, very few recognised what close connection economic conditions have upon the social life of the people as a whole. You will, I trust, take a wider and more comprehensive view of the problems of social reconstruction. Individual freedom, the goal of social reformers in India, cannot be achieved without the education of the individual and this in its turn is impossible without securing economic prosperity for the masses Social purity, social refinement and social strength depend largely on the betterment of the position of the masses in general. All who therefore wish that our social life should be improved, that each individual constituent of it should attain the maximum development and that the whole body social should be as perfect and efficient a mechanism as possible, must construct a comprehensive programme of work embracing, as it should, questions relating to reduction of poverty—the greatest curse of the poor inasmuch as it leads to their demoralisation—the removal of superstitions which throttle freedom of thought and action and the emancipation of the people from the vices which are at the root of the decay of individual strength and social energy.

THE ALL-INDIA HINDU MAHASABHA.

The following are extracts from the presidential address delivered by Mr. N. C. Kelkar at the session of the Hindu Mahasabha held at Cawnpore on the 29th December. After referring in detail to the contributions made by the Christian, Mahomedan and Hindu communities to the political life of the country, he said:

The only position which the Hindus have taken and which, I think, they should never give up is that the Mahomedans cannot be allowed to claim special representation in different Provinces according to a special rule for that Province. In other words they do no object to any rule of universal application which Mahomedans may choose to abide by. But they object and will object to ad hoc pleas or rules, so that the Mahomedans may be enabled to say 'heads I win tails you lose.' The application of any one universal rule would result naturally in hostages being given by both communities in different Provinces. In the Frontier Province, the Punjab, Bengal and Sindh the Mahomedans would be in a position of advantage. On the other hand, the Hindus would be in a position of advantage in other Provinces. Does this not give a kind of automatic guarantee against the ill-treatment of any one community by another in any Province, assuming that the Hindu and Mahomedan communities are both animated by fellow-feeling for co-religionists?

Hinduism's Right to Live.

The contribution made by the Hindus to the communal contest from the political point of view is the least of all

realpatidar.com

the communities in India. Why, then, it may be asked, the sangathan which is a frankly communal movement? The answer to the question is that the movement though communal is both in point of religion and politics simply a defensive movement. It has only a negative character in that it seeks to prevent further losses to the Hindu community occurring by reason of the propagandistic activities of other religions. Hinduism has as much right to live as any other religion. One need not go into the question whether Hinduism was right or wrong in being, in the past, a passive, exclusive, non-proselytizing religion. Even now the most aggressive Hindu is not found to preach among his co-religionists that Hinduism should go forth and conquer those who have never been Hindus before.

But I would ask the Hindu community no longer to concern itself with the accusations brought against them in this matter by interested critics. The Hindus ought not to lose the continuity of their effort by the red-herring drawn across their path. They should have sense enough to see through the attempt to exploit their patriotism and national sentiment by people who have not themselves foresworn communal activity. The losses they have suffered in the past should now open their eyes to look at a future correct policy without the least blinking or hesitation. The Hindus cannot afford to lose their integrity even in the name of Swarajya. And in this respect history indicates the reasonable limits beyond which any religion or community cannot be called upon to make concessions. It is almost amusing that some people should affect to believe that Hindus have been guilty of a great crime in happening to be in a majority over other communities in Hindusthan, that is to say, their own native country. If the other communities in India are in a minority here, have they not more than a quid pro quo or counter-balancing set-off in other countries? Are the Hindus to blame that these others are in a minority in India? And can any one seriously say that, if other things were allowed to be equal, the present numerical proportion between the different communities would disappear or even materially change for centuries? And in that case have not the minorities in India to accept their position in a reasonable spirit without fretting and fuming over the irremediable situation? As a Hindu, I can say this, that the Hindu community in India will always be prepared to abide by any rational scheme or method of giving protection to the minorities in India, which can be devised from any working parallel in any other country where a similar position may have been or is in existence. I may mention the methods of proportional representation, preferential vote, limited vote, and second ballot, etc. It is open to any one even to suggest another and a better method, if imaginable.

But as a Hindu, I would refuse, with all the insistence at my command, to be penalized or sheared like a sheep for the fault of being a numerical majority in this country. Further, I would insist upon the right being conceded to the Hindu of not only preserving intact their present numerical strength by every conceivable method but also increasing it by the Shuddhi movement for the sake of recouping at least the immediate losses. I would go even further and say this to my Hindu brethren: "You have a right to be proud of your religion, as every body else and you have a right to aspire to spread it".

The Hindu Society, we must all remember, cannot be well organised unless it has purged itself of its own inherent impurity and injustice. Hindu organization cannot be had merely for the asking, that is to say, expressing approval for it. Its exclusive spirit has put it within a narrow and a straight jacket and even within that jacket it has been torn to pieces by the operation of quite a number of disintegrating forces. The caste system has been pushed to a ridiculous extent and we have been taught to glory in the very meagreness of our social groups. This naturally leads to each group acting for itself and working for its own exclusive welfare.

The only hope, therefore, of this beleaguered community now lies in strongly fortifying itself at all points of attack, make friends with all amongst itself and take good care of the blind the lame and the diseased and to enthuse the whole garrison with the hope that it can save itself even now, if it makes up its mind, the hope being reinforced by the warning that it is doomed to destruction if it faints or falters for a moment. Swaraj will not be worth having if we cannot purchase it with any price less than the loss of Hinduism itself.

CAWNPORE CONFERENCES.

All-India Volunteers' Conference.

The third All-India Volunteers' Conference opened on the 25th December. Mr. T. C. Goswami, M. L. A, (Swarajist), President, said that the movement was in an infant stage and required every help. He read the Congress President's message, urging the need for general conscription of the younger generation, disciplined for national service. Thus, by building up a national character, they would help the national movement more than all academic discussions and moral precepts. Mr. Goswami, endorsing this, said that their ideal must be organisation, discipline and service. There was no inherent inferiority of Indians to Westerners, whether physical, moral or intellectual. Non-violence was their creed to-day, though he would not surely say that this should remain so for all time. The Volunteer organisation should remain part of the Congress, but should not be an appendage to any party. The Congress should help it financially.

Khilafat Conference.

Maulana Abdul Kalam Azad presided over the Khilafat Conference. The speech delivered by Maulana Hazrat Mohani, Chairman of the Reception Committee, was so objectionable that it had to be expunged from the records. The Conference passed resolutions reiterating its opposition to foreign interference in Jazarat-ul-Arab, including Iraq, declaring that the League's decision about Mosul violated the Lausanne Treaty, and assuring the Turks of their help if they were driven to war on the Mosul issue, and asking Indians not to give help to the Government in men or money if war with Turkey came about. Another resolution opposed the separation of Ukba and Muan from the Hedjaz, and sympathised with the Syrians. The Conference also urged the Muslims to join the Congress Spinners' Association.

Anti-Untouchability Conference.

The All-India Achutodhar (removal of untouchability) Conference held under Swami Shraddhanand's presidency passed a number of important resolutions regarding removal of untouchability, which included one congratulating the United Provinces Government on its decision to nominate in the Municipal and District Boards members belonging to the depressed classes. The other resolutions exhorted Hindus to encourage untouchables by taking them in their private service and also electing them to municipal and district boards of their own accord.

COMMUNIST CONFERENCE:

Mr. M. Singaravelu in his presidential address to the Conference of Communists from several parts of India, held on the 26th December, said that Indian Communism was not Bolshevism. Their first ideal was to end the domination of capital and the immediate aim was to win Swaraj for the Indian masses by the organisation of labour and peasants. Moulana Hazrat Mohani who welcomed those present, explained that they wanted Complete Independence by fair means, and desired Swaraj to take the form of the Soviet Republic. The aims and object of the Conference are as follows:—To establish Swaraj or Complete Independence by all fair means; after the establishment of Swaraj, to see that it takes the form of the Soviet Republic on which all principles of Communism will come into force, before the establishment of Swaraj to work for the freedom and prosperity of the peasants and workers by all possible means, and in this respect to co-operate with every political party of India, so far as they help the promotion of the above mentioned objects; to arrange for the propagation of the principles of Communism and create popular opinion in their favour, so that they may be acted upon the moment Swaraj is established. The organisation is purely Indian, and, for the present, the work of the Party will be restricted to India alone. Its relation with similar parties of other countries will be only that of sympathy and mental affinity to all those in general, and to the Third International in particular.

PEASANTS' CONFERENCE.

Mr. Singaravelu presided over the All-India Peasants' Conference held on the 27th December. In Lalaji's place Mahatmaji addressed a few words to the 5,000 peasant workers gathered.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Governor's Message to Boy Scouts: His Excellency the Governor of Bombay has sent a fervent New Year's Message to the Boy-scouts conveying to them his best wishes. The message concludes: "To all interested in this great junior League of Nations, I would appeal, as I have so often done before, for a more real, for a more personal, and for a greater interest on its behalf, for I am convinced that in the great work which remains to be done in the world, and in the work which wants doing so much to-day, Scouting can indeed play a great and a noble part. Scouting, however, must have and ought to have, a friend in every one who desires to see real progress and real prosperity. For that friendship, and for that helping hand to be extended to the Scout movement in the Presidency of Bombay generously and freely I have not the slightest hesitation to ask."

The Hindu Yuvathi Saranalayam: The above Rescue Home in Madras which, during the last two and a half years of its existence, under the able guidance of Srimathi Yamini Poorna Thilakamma, has been doing excellent purity work in rescuing our fallen sisters and enabling them to lead a pure life and earn, if necessary, an independent livelihood, needs no introduction to our readers. It has been highly spoken of by all public-spirited workers. We endorse once more the appeal of the Saranalayam to the public to sympathise with this noble cause and to subscribe their mite.

Anniversary of Swami Vivekananda: The sixty-fourth birth-day anniversary of the Swami Vivekananda will be celebrated by his disciples, friends and admirers at the Math, Belur, Howrah, on the 6th instant. The Seva of the poor will be as usual an important item in the programme of the celebration.

Question of Adultery as a Penal offence in Ceylon: One of the interesting resolutions that were recently discussed in the Ceylon Legislative Council was that moved by the Hon'ble Mr. A. F. Molamure that in the opinion of the House, Government should take early steps to amend the Ceylon Penal Code making adultery a criminal offence in Ceylon. The Attorney-General, on behalf of the Government, opposed it. After a lengthy debate the motion was put to vote and lost, 16 voting for and 18 against it.

Success of an Indian Lady: Nawabzadi Isma Khanum Maula Bakhsh, the daughter of Nawab Maula Bakhsh, Khan Bahadur, C. I. E., Chief Minister, Bahawalpur State, who went to England two years ago for medical training under the patronage of Her Excellency Lady Reading, has returned to India after successfully passing all her Examinations. She is the first Indian lady to have passed the C. M. B. Examination with credit in London and is expected to take up useful work in the Lady Reading Female Hospital in Simla next spring.

Widow Marriages at Amritsar: A correspondent writes to the Tribune, Lahore:—Three widow marriages have been quite recently celebrated in the office of the Punjab Shadi Sahayak Sabha, Amritsar. The brides and bridegrooms were connected with respectable families. Two widows were residents of Amritsar City and one came from Hoshiarpur District. All three bridegrooms were residents of Jullundur District.

An Inter-Caste Wedding in Mangalore: The Mangalore correspondent of the Hindu reports a registered inter-caste wedding that took place in the local Arya Samaj Mandir, the contracting parties being Sriman M. Sundernath and Srimathi Sushila Devi, an educated lady of that place. Messrs. Mohanappa Tingalaya and Lakshman Naik officiated as priests at the wedding. This is the first wedding celebrated in the local Arya Samaj.

Nobel Peace Prize for 1926: The Geneva correspondent of the Ceylon Observer cables that Sir Austin Chamberlain and M. Briand have been jointly awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for 1926 in recognition of their labours at Locarno. Three years' accumulated funds will be given owing to the prize being not awarded in 1924 and 1925.

A World's Woman Welfare Directory: Mr. Bhagat Ram, Jiv Daya Pracharak, (Animals' Friend Society), Ferozepur Cantt., (Punjab), is preparing a Worlds' Women Welfare Directory. All those who are interested in the cause may send to the compiler names of books or periodicals, and addresses of women societies or individuals and institutions that are working chiefly for the welfare of mothers and children of any country. All friends who help in this work will receive a free copy of the Directory when it is ready for distribution.

An Inter-caste Marriage: On Monday, the 14th December, an inter-caste marriage took place in Bombay between Mr. Balkrishna, Principal, Rajaram college, Kolhapur, a Kshatriya, who hails from Multan, and a Brahmin bride from Bombay. The marriage was performed at the Arya Samaj Mandir according to Arya rites. There was a distinguished gathering present on the occasion.

Vidyasagar's Daughters' Benefit Fund: Dr. Miss Bidhumukhi Bose has handed over to Sir P.C. Ray 5 p. c. Government securities of the value of Rs. 4,500 and Rs. 257 in cash collected by her for the daughters of the late Pandit Iswar Chandra Vidyasagar. Out of the interest of the above sum monthly allowances will be paid to Sreemati Kumudini Devi and Sreemati Sarat Kumari Devi. Dr. Ray has invited Professor P. C. Mitter of the College of Science and Principal J. R. Banerjee of the Vidyasagar College and Mr. Satyananda Bose to form a committee with himself as member and Treasurer.

Right of Depressed Classes to use Public Places: On Monday the 14th Dec. there was a lively discussion in the Madras Legislative Council on the Bill brought forward by Mr. Veerian, the representative of the depressed classes, to amend the Local Boards Act so as to make penal the denial to the depressed classes of the right to use public roads, wells, markets, and other places of public resort on the score of untouchability. The Hon. the Raja of Panagal, Chief Minister, said that, while he had no objection to the Bill being introduced and referred to a Select Committee, he doubted whether the Legislative Council was the proper forum to bring about a reform of this character, which was primarily a problem for social reformers. Eventually the Bill was referred to a Select Committee. We wonder whether the Chief Minister seriously thinks that social legislation is beyond the scope of the Madras Legislative Council.

Disabilities of Depressed Classes: The owner of a motor bus service in South India has been fined by the District Board for printing on the back of his tickets that members of the depressed classes were not allowed to travel in his buses. "It is depressing," comments the Englishman, "to find that people who are advanced enough to run motor-buses cannot rise above caste prejudices."
